Clean and parboil a sweetbread and cut in cubes. Melt two tablespoons butter, add three tablespoons flour, and pour on graduailly one cup chicken stock. Reheat sweetbread in sauce and add one-fourth cup heavy cream and one-and one-half teaspoons beef extract. Season with salt, paprika, and lemon juice. Fill ramequin dishes, cover with buttered crumbs, and bake until crumbs are brown.

Devilled Oysters

1 pint oysters, 1-4 cup butter, 1-4 cup flour, 2-3 cup milk, yolk, 1 egg, 1-2 tablespoon finely chopped parsley, 1-2 teaspoon salt, few grains cayenne, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, buttered cracker crumbs.

Clean, drain and slightly chop oysters. Make a sauce of butter, flour, and milk; add egg yolk, seasoning and oysters. Arrange in small patty pans and cover with cracker crumbs, and bake twelve to fifteen minutes in a hot oven. Deep oyster shells or scallop shells may be used in place of small pans.

SONS OF ITALY ORGANIZED HERE

Outgrowth of One Purely Local Society---New Organization Extends All Over America.

Fulton is rapidly developing into a home of fraternal institutions, the latest of which is a new Italian society, the outgrowth of a purely local organization which has existed for some years, known as the Society Mutuo Soccorso Vittorio Emanuele III, whose membership realized the restriction placed upon them by the fact that no other society existed in neighboring cities and towns, or anywhere in this country. This hindrance acted as a handicap, for when the members desired to visit other cities they had no entre.

The Sons of Italy is the name of a society, one of whose requirements is that a member shall be born under the sunny skies of the little kingdom, is Nation-wide in its scope, with a membershiy of nearly 500 lodges in the United States, and 200,000 individual members. The Supreme Lodge is located in New York city, the lodge nearest to this city being that of No. 436, of Oswego. Four lodges are located in Syracuse, one of which is composed of women members.

Mr. Frank Zaia is intensely interested in developing the new lodges, which will be instituted upon receiving its charter, and this instrument will be forthcoming upon securing the signatures of fifty men. Women are denied the right to belong to the local society, which is a practice generally observed in America in lodges of the Sons of Italy.

Among the many advantages accruing to members of the Society Sons of Italy are those of sick and death benefits. Upon the death of a husband the wife shall receive $400. and upon the death of a wife the husband is beneficiary to the extent of $200. The matter of sick benefits is left to the discretion of individual lodges, as also that of the initiation fee. The sum of 75 cents a month will be levied as dues, which is considered a low sum in comparison with the sick and death payments.

The city was visited yesterday by officers of the Sons of Italy, who were instrumental in enrolling a list of charter members. The visitors included Ralph Amoroso, Grand Master of Oswego; Felix Palmar, of Oswego, and Thomas D'Alia, all of whom retuerned home delighted with the prospects ahead of the new society.

MRS. ANGELA BIVIANO

Sorrowful news reached the Italian colony of this city on Saturday, of the death of Mrs. Angela Biviano, who died that day in Oxford, N. Y. She was about 37 years old, and a sufferer for more than three years. The family lived in this city ten years ago, removing to Oxford where Mr. Biviano secured a position on the Lackawanna railroad.

She is survived by her husband, two sons and two daughters, the eldest of whom is 17 years old. The funeral will occur tomorrow morning at Oxford at 10 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Biviano were married in their native place, Lipari, Province of Messina, Italy, eighteen years ago, coming to America soon afterward. The town of their nativity is also the old home of four of Fulton's Italian citizens, Messrs. Frank and Joseph Zaia, Frank Favalorro and Joseph Cincotta, all of whom will attend the funeral tomorrow.

JOSEPH FRUCE

Joseph Fruce, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fruce of W. 1st st., died yesterday at his family home.

The funeral was held this afternoon Burial was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

FULTON H. SCHOOL IS HONORED

Vocational Teachers' Association Elects Miss Nancy Cook as Vice President--Utica Meeting Interesting.

Miss Nancy Cook, supervisor of handwork. Fulton High school, is the recipent of honors conferred by the Central New York Vocational Teachers' Association in session in Utica Friday and Saturday. She was elected vice-president of the association for 1916.17. Her many friends are accordingly extending congratulations.

The tremendous strides made in industrial education in New York in the last few years were described by speakers at the meeting. Scores of teachers from cities and towns in surrounding counties were present. James M. Scott, supervisor of industrial education of Syracuse, presided and speeches were made by Miss Ida J. Butcher of Utica; Dr. Frederick W. Roman, professor of economics, Syracuse University, and Lewis A. Wilson, specialist in industrial education of the University of the State of New York.

A rather lively and somewhat amusing debate arose over Miss Butcher's remarks concerning the dual responsibilities of women who would be teachers and also wives and mothers. Charles B. Bradfey voiced the opinion that it was difficult for a woman to prepare adequately for both functions. The average man trains himself solely in one direction, he said.

One of the female delegates ventured the opinion that the two careers were not antagonists. The chairman leaned toward the view that a man usually forgets his home when he goes to work and throws his whole thought into his job. He thought women were not as whole-hearted in their work.

"Millions of women have given up all hope of being wives and mothers," said a lady, rising with signs of feeling. She opined that women took just as much interest in their tasks as men Someone gave warning that the debate would soon drift into the suffrage rocks and another delegate expressed the wish that women teachers would be more gentle and not shake their fists at men, metaphorically.

Printing Reformed Boy

The room was darkened, a stereoptican was brought into action and Mr. Wilson began his lecture on the industrial schools of the State, which, he said, began with a small class a few years ago and now have 45,000 scholars. The evening classes offer 164 courses, including a wide variety of subjects, even to tile laying, glove making, photo engraving, jewelry designing, lithography and many other kinds of work.

The pre-vocational schools give boys and girls training in the crafts, such as carpentry, plumbing, painting, millinery, cookery, printing, dressmaking and sheet metal work, combined with book work. The progress made is wonderful. The case of a Buffalo boy was cited. He was an incipient criminal until he was placed in the school of printing as a last resort. He became interested, took the course, later learned to operate a monotype machine, secured a job and at the end of the first week came back to the school to proudly show his teacher a pay envelope containing $20.80.

Then there are many evening schools giving shop-extension courses to adults. Men and women employed in various trades come to learn more about their own work, or to master some other trade. In one city a man employed at $900 a year spent four ears in the chemistry department and his salary was advanced as a result to $3.200 a year. Men employed in steam power plant operation became so interested in their study that they would go without their suppers to get to school on time. Many pictures of school rooms were shown with classes bending to their tasks.

Germany's Lead

Dr. Roman spoke of industrial schools from the economic and social standpoint. He said that in this country commercial education is far ahead of industrial training. Thousands of private commercial schools sprang up in this country years ago and several men have made a million apiece by organizing such schools. The one school teacher who has made money is the teacher of bookkeeping, stenography and typewriting. Commercial education was so completely divorced from other schools that only in the last few years have people thought of them as being under the same roof.

Then the speaker told of the different condition in Europe. In Germany and France industrial schools were begun 100 years ago and it was not until 1870 or 1880 that commercial schools were started. The commercial schools of the United States are the phenomenon of the educational world. Dr. Roman explained the reason for the difference which he found in the different economic conditions prevailing in Europe and America.

"Germany is poorer than the United States," he continued, "and she could be placed in the State of Texas, but before the war began she rivaled this countr in her exports, because she had the schools to teach her people to make and sell. Before the war the United States wasf rom 50 to 75 years behind Germany in industrial education."

Dr. Roman spoke of the various industrial schools here—the endowed schools, the charity schools, Y. M. C. A. courses, etc. He said the endowed schools have something like $20,000,000 and there are none like them in Europe. They were founded, he said, by men who had risen from poor boyhood to great wealth and who, in their old age, looked back to their youth and wished to help other boys who were struggling. The speaker created a stir when he added that some of the gift of those millionaires were due to repentance, because of the manner in which their wealth had been acquired.

COST OF FIRE WASTE IN U. S.

lay and procrastination. Last week Chief Guerin's prophecy was fulfilled and Hopewell was completely wiped off the map with a $2,000,000 fire. How often are we compelled to impotently reiterate, "I told you so!"

"Hopewell" or "Hopeless" which shall it be ? There is a lesson in this experience for everyone of us. Preparedness is a word full of meaning just now. Let us have no more Peabody School Disasters. Let us make such calamities as the Brooklyn Candy Factory Fire and Pittsburg Box Factory fire, with their toll of innocent lives, impossible in the future.

And in closing I want to ask you one question. Each can answer it for himself. What would happen in your home if a fire broke out RIGHT NOW? Think it over. What might happen in your home, in your factory, in your store, if a fire should break-out—RIGHT NOW?

A HOG SAVER

WHAT OTHERS SAY

For fear you do not know what a good cholera cure you have in your MEDICATED SALT BRICK, I will tell you of an experiment I made with my fattening hogs. I had ten of them, when two died with cholera and the others were evidently going the same way, when I crushed two of your MEDICATED SALT BRICKS and diluted in the slop feed, all of which was eaten that day. The effect was quick and marked. I did not give them any more MEDICATED SALT BRICK or other medicine. I saw no more evidence of cholera or any other disease, they fattening perfectly afterwards. You have a most valuable remedy in BLACKMAN'S MEDICATED SALT BRICK.

COFFEE

Coffee, a drink fit for the gods when properly prepared, depends entirely upon two points to insure perfection, First ,the brand used, and secondly, the process in the making. Coffee prepared by the method of percolating is given the preference by experts today. There are various makes of percolators in the market today at prices to easily fit one's purse. Druse' hardware exhibit a line of standard makes.

In making coffee by the process of percolating the coffee should be finely ground as the process employs but fifteen minutes and the flavor must be quickly extracted; hence the fresh live taste of percolated coffee.

Cafe au lait

When coffee and scalded milk are served in equal proportions, it is called Cafe au lait.

Vienna Coffee

Coffee served with whipped cream is called Vienna Coffee.

Cafe Noir

The after-dinner coffee is served black in demi tasse.

AFTER DINNER GOODIES

No good dinner can cross the line of pure perfection without its bon bon But whatever shape the little finisher may take it must be worth while. Various lines in the confectioner's triumphs most popular for this purpose contain a flavor of mint, wintergreen or spice, and are often deliciously combined with nuts.

The local wholesale and retail candy makers, the Boston Candy Kitchen have a full line of delicious goodies that can easily serve as a fitting crown to a dinner however elaborate.

MAYONNAISE DRESSING

1 teaspoon mustard, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon powdered sugar, few grains cayenne, yolk two eggs, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1½ cups olive oil, (Massaro Brand).

Mix dry ingredients, add egg yolks, and when well mixed add one-half teaspoon of vinegar. Add oil gradually, at first drop by drop and stir constantly. As mixture thickens, thin with vinegar or lemon juice. Add oil, and vinegar or lemon juice alternately, until all is used, stirring or beating constantly. If oil is added too rapidly, dressing will have a curdled appearance. A smooth consistency may be restored by taking yolk of another egg and adding curdled mixture slowly to it. It is desirable to have bowl containing mixture placed in a larger bowel of crushed ice to which a small quantity of water has been added. Olive oil for making mayonnaise should always be thoroughly chilled. A silver fork, wire whisk, small wooden spoon or Dover Egg beater may be used as preferred. If one has a Keystone egg-beater, dressing may be made very quickly by its use. Mayonnaise should be stiff enough to hold its shape. It soon liquefies when added to meat or vegetables; therefore it should be added just before serving time.

TABLE DECORATIONS

No dinner, luncheon or breakfast table is ever complete without its flower. Flowers are not a luxury, they are a necessity, because they always teach us. Who could be a grouch at breakfast with three or four daffodiles laughing at him from a vase in the center of the table. "Cheer Up," they say—"brighten your corner old man!" The cost is so slight to keep the sun a-shining that it is a real expense to the soul to be without them. Few homes are too poor to be without a flower a week.

In years gone by old fashioned flower lovers bought big bouquets at one buy. They did not buy often because it was so expensive. Since then the Japanese taught us American people a wonderful thing through their art. They showed us it was more artistic, more helpful, more natural to arrange one, two or three flowers in a vase—(and, lo, less expensive) at one time. We caught the idea.

There are a few Fulton people who buy two or three flowers once or twice every week at Perkins' Flower shop instead of a "big bunch" of them, far and few between.

Have a flower always on the table. Father needs it, the children need them, so do you also, mother.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

J. W. Alexander, Sponsor of Ship Purchase Bill.

Representative Joshua W. Alexander of Missouri, chairman of the house committee on merchant marine and fisheries, who introduced the administration's new ship purchase bill, will lead the fight for the measure on the floor of the house.

Government operation of steamship lines is authorized under the modified bill, but primarily the measure is intended to authorize the construction or purchase of merchant vessels suitable also for naval auxiliaries, "with a view to chartering, leasing or selling such vessels" to corporations, firms or individuals desiring to use them in the commerce of the United States.

A native of Ohio, Congressman Alexander was educated in the public schools of Cincinnati and Christian university, Canton, Mo. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1875 at Gallatin, Mo., where he has since resided. He has always been a Democrat and active in the politics of the state. In 1882 he was elected to the general assembly of Missouri, serving three terms, the last one as speaker of the house. He was twice chosen mayor of Gallatin and for six years served as judge of the Seventh judicial district of Missouri. He first went to Washington as a member of the Sixtieth congress and has since been regularly returned. Congressman Alexander is in his sixty-fourth year.

Sergius Sazonoff, Russian minister of foreign affairs, who recently received a deputation of journalists in Petrograd, gave an interview on the war situation in general. He expressed satisfaction with the relations existing between Russia and Roumania and said that the whole Balkan situation would find its solution only after the war had ended. Speaking of Sweden, M. Sazonoff said, "It is possible that Sweden may feel the need of taking measures for the defense of her frontiers, but we can declare categorically that she will not have to defend them against Russia and that this side of her frontiers is perfectly secure."

Sergius Sazonoff has long been prominent in Russian foreign affairs. He was secretary of the embassy at London for twelve years, frequently serving as charge d'affaires and later was secretary of the embassy at Rome and then envoy to the Vatican.

For the past five years M. Sazonoff has held the post of Russian minister of foreign affairs. He is a brother-in-law of Russia's former prime minister, Stolypin, who came to his end by assassination. Sazonoff is said not to be a man of the Stolypin type, but his political creed is much the same. A few months ago, about the time Bulgaria joined forces with the German allies, it was reported that M. Sazonoff would resign his portfolio, but that event did not occur.

Mining In Arizona.

Arizona's mine output of gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc for 1915 had a value of $88,551,000, an increase of nearly 48 per cent over 1914. The increases were especially noteworthy in lead and zinc, the great change in the price of the metals making a difference of nearly $20,000,000 in copper, $400,000 in lead and over $2,000,000 in zinc. The output of gold increased slightly, but the production of silver was a record breaker, the output increasing to 5,458,000 ounces in 1915, a gain of nearly 25 per cent. Arizona is the leading copper producing state and had an output of nearly 450,000,000 pounds in 1915, an increase over the previous year of nearly 57,000,000 pounds and in value nearly $25,000,000. The output of lead increased 22,272,000 pounds in 1915, an increase of over 43 per cent. The production of zinc (spelter) increased to 17,729,000 pounds, an increase of over 21 per cent.—United States Geological Survey.

Black Walnut Valuable.

The present year is regarded by the United States department of agriculture as a most favorable time for increased planting of black walnut trees in the United States because of the present heavy crop of nuts. The value of the tree is attributed to the very high lasting qualities of its wood and the moderately rapid rate of growth in good locations. The region in which walnut growing is practicable extends from southern New England west to the central states and south to South Carolina and along the northern portion of the gulf states to Oklahoma. The finest growth takes place in the rich coves of the lower Appalachians and over the Ohio and central Mississippi basins.—Commerce Report.

Tire Repairs.

A tire that has given good service, but has its fabric weakened in places, may be re-enforced by the application of an inside protector. If the tread on your tire is worn down, but the tire otherwise in fair condition, several thousand miles of service may be obtained by having it retreaded. In doing this the repair man tears the old tire down to the fabric and builds it up in the same manner as in making a new tire.

There are other ways in which tires apparently worn out can be made to render much greater mileage. Before discarding them be sure to give them the "once over." A similar repair may add a few extra thousand to their mileage.

A Multiple Window Opener.

In several states factory buildings are required by law to have fireproof stairways or towers in which the windows on all the landings can be opened simultaneously to clear them of smoke in case of a fire. The sketch shows one scheme which is used, says Popular Mechanics. The lower sash is fixed and the upper one is heavier than its sash weights. By pulling down on the cable, which extends through all the floors the latch A is withdrawn and the heavy sash drops down, allowing the smoke to escape.

Explosions In the Muffler.

Explosions in the muffler are due nearly always to misfiring caused by defective ignition. What happens is that one or more cylinders fail to fire and the gas therein is discharged unburned into the muffler and is exploded by the exhaust flame from another cylinder. Here the only damage likely to be done is to the muffler, but the noise is objectionable, and, of course much power is lost by the misfiring. Generally the trouble is due to a sparking plug being faulty.—Autocar.

Tests For Gum Arabic.

A study of many of the published tests for gum arabic, with description of attempts to find others than the few that proved to be reliable, has been published by the United States bureau of standards. It was found that basic lead acetate gave the most characteristic reaction, while mixtures of copper sulphate and sodium hydroxide and of neutral ferric chloride and alcohol are of value as confirmatory tests.

Cleaning Steel of Burnt Oil.

The oil coming in contact with the surface of steel when hardening will burn in places and is hard to remove says Popular Mechanics. The cleaning can be accomplished easily by immersing the hardened tool in gasoline and when exposed to the air it will dry immediately. This will leave the part to be polished without the marks of burnt oil.

Testing Gas In Mines.

To test the dangers of mine gases an Englishman has invented a delicate machine which photographically measures the duration of the flash of an explosion.

In Hard Luck

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Had you asked in the village of Lorain which was the happiest family in the community nine out of ten would have answered that Deacon Thurston and his wife filled the bill.

Deacon Thurston was long, lean and smiling. His wife was fat, content and good natured.

The deacon had never been known to get mad or to do a selfish action. His wife was seldom known to borrow, but was always willing to lend.

Of a summer evening they sat on the porch—sometimes for three hours —without speaking a word to each other.

After supper of a winter's evening the deacon built a roaring fire in the sitting room, and then with a candle in one hand and a blue pitcher in the other he descended to the cellar. The barrel of cider stood in the northeast corner. He knelt before it and drew exactly a pint and a half of its contents. This was a pint for himself and half a pint for his good wife. It was never more and never less. The apple bin stood against the south wall. He went to it and selected four fine Baldwins and put them in his coattail pocket and marched up the stairs. His wife was ready with a damp cloth to give the apples a wipe. Three of them were for the deacon and one for his wife.

One winter when the first snowfall came the deacon hitched up the old horse to the "pung," or homemade sled, and started for the woods. Four inches of snow had fallen, and it was a brisk morning. The old horse squealed and kicked up his heels, and the deacon heard himself saying:

"Well, if I ain't glad to be alive this morning, though they have raised my taxes $2 more this year!"

When the deacon and his outfit entered the woods there was a rabbit's trail leading in the direction he wanted to go. He therefore followed it. It led into the woods and stopped at a hollow log.

The deacon advanced to the log and with the head of his ax struck a resounding blow. He did not see whether the rabbit ran out or not. His ear caught a jingling sound, and in the excitement the presence of bunny was entirely forgotten. It was a jingle of money—not greenbacks, but solid coin.

Five minutes later he was splitting the old log wide open and his eyes were bulging out and his cheeks were pale. There was coin before him—heaps of coin. It was all silver coin.

One, two, three, four capfuls of silver treasure. He carried each capful to the sled and emptied its contents upon the horse blanket. When all the money had been gathered he tied up the blanket. When he finally mounted the sled he gave the old horse three or four sharp cuts with the whip. They were the first blows the old nag had ever received at his hands, and they started him out at a lumbering gallop.

Horse and driver appeared at home in a sweat. They did not stop at the kitchen door, though Mrs. Thurston was there to ask what had happened.

"S-s-h! You go right into the house, Judith, and I will be there in a minute."

In five minutes he followed after her and laid the bundle of coin on the kitchen table with a clink that made her exclaim:

"Oh, deacon, have you picked up a lot of horseshoes?"

"Horseshoes nothing!!" he whispered as he untied the blanket and folded it back.

"Why, it's silver—it's money!"

"Of course it is, and I didn't rob anybody to get it either. I found it in a holler log."

"Deacon, we are rich!" whispered the wife as she locked the kitchen door and pulled down the shades.

"You bet we are," replied the deacon. "Help me count the money."

They counted it. It took them a full hour but [illegible] over at last, and there was [illegible].

"Deacon," said she after a moment, "we allus wanted to go to Niagara Falls and see the water wasting itself, but you could never spare the money. We will go now, won't we?"

The deacon was silent, but there was such a look on his face as she had never seen before. It was a look of avarice and [illegible] combined, and it was not good to see. She had to repeat her question before he replied.

"Judith, I want you to understand," said the deacon as he walked backward and forward, "there is to be no nonsense about this money. I may have to go to Niagara Falls on business, but you will stay at home and care for the house. I shall have to have a new suit of clothes, but you can get along with your old ones."

"But I have not had a new bonnet in fourteen years," she wailed.

"Your old one is all right."

And that treasure from the hollow log bred dissension almost within the hour it was found. Husband and wife took opposite stands, and things were getting ripe for a separation when the deacon passed one of the coins at the grocery. The grocer found it counterfeit, and the whole pile of silver was overhauled, to find that every coin was bogus. It had been hidden in the log by those who made it. When the sad truth stood revealed and the deacon had fumed and fretted and his wife had shed a few tears he stood before her and queried:

"Well, Judith, what are we going to do about it?"

"Quit being idiots," she answered.

And they then and there quit.

Woman's World

Contralto of New York's Oratorio Society Is an Ardent Suffragist.

MISS HENRIETTE WAKEFIELD.

Miss Henriette Wakefield, who sang the contralto solos in the Christmas production of the "Messiah" by the Oratorio society of New York recently, is a votes for women enthusiast. She won seven votes for the woman suffrage amendment on Nov. 2 from the male members of her household. Five brothers, her father and her husband succumbed to suffrage appeals of Miss Wakefield.

But Miss Wakefield didn't stop with seven votes. Her deep contralto arguments were used on taxi drivers and cabbies and elevator men.

"The ballot is bound to better the condition of every professional woman," she says. "When women vote they may be able to regulate by law some of the conditions which are now left too much to haphazard and to chance. I think we may make American ideals prevail in music as we will in other things." She believes in American music and American musicians and is proud of having gained her education and won her spurs entirely in this country.

Her first opera successes sound like the luck of the traditional story book girl. When she was only a little over eighteen years old she went to Conried to see if she would "do" for grand opera. He told her enthusiastically that she had a beautiful voice and would make a musical success, but she was too young and must go home and wait. Within a few days afterward, however, she got a hurry call to take the role of Mlle. Dangerville in the opera of "Adrienne Lecouvreur" just four days before the season opened. Some delay kept her from obtaining her score until Saturday noon, and her part had to be ready by Monday night. She was to sing with Caruso, Cavalieri and Scotti, who also arrived at the last minute, almost breathless, off the steamer to rehearse their parts. Since then Miss Wakefield has sung in nearly all the best known operas of the Metropolitan company.

Graham Bread.

Materials: Two and three-quarter cupfuls of graham flour, one teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda, one-third cupful of English walnut meats, cut up; one-half cupful of molasses, one cupful of milk, one egg, one tablespoonful of shortening.

Utensils: Mixing bowl, spoon, measuring cup, eggbeater, knife, buttered bread tin.

Directions: Mix dry ingredients, beat egg and add flour, add molasses, milk and shortening, stir thoroughly, put into tin and bake forty to forty-five minutes in slow oven. If sour milk is not at hand use sweet milk, one teaspoonful of baking powder and cut the amount of soda to one-half teaspoonful. Bacon fat is a good shortening.

White Mountain Cake, Orange Filling.

One-half cupful butter, two cupfuls sugar, one cupful milk, three eggs (whites), three and one-half cupfuls flour and two rounded teaspoonfuls baking powder. Cream butter and sugar together until light. Add the milk very slowly and keep beating all the time. Sift flour and baking powder together, add half, then the whites of eggs which have been beaten light and the rest of flour. Bake in two jelly tins on paper in moderate hot oven twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Soft Gingerbread

One teaspoonful of molasses, one-third cupful of butter, one and three-quarter teaspoonfuls of soda, one-half cupful of sour milk, one egg, two cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of ginger and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Put butter and molasses in saucepan and cook until boiling point is reached; remove from fire, add soda and beat vigorously. Then add milk, egg, well beaten, and remaining ingredients, mixed and sifted. Bake about twenty-five minutes in a hot oven.

The Kitchen Cupboard

"THE MUFFIN MAN."

WHEAT MUFFINS.—Two cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of molasses, one egg and one cupful of milk. Mix the dry ingredients and sift twice; rub in the butter. Separate the egg, beat the yolk and add it to the milk and molasses. Mix with the dry ingredients and stir until smooth. Fold in the beaten white of the egg and pour into hot, well greased muffin tins. Bake fifteen to twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Oatmeal Muffins.—Soak two cupfuls of rolled oats in one and one-half cupfuls of sour milk or buttermilk overnight. In the morning add one-fourth cupful of melted butter or lard, one well beaten egg and one cupful of flour sifted with one teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of baking soda. Bake in buttered pans in a hot oven for twenty minutes.

Cornmeal Muffins.—One cupful of flour, one cupful of cornmeal, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of melted butter or lard, one egg and one cupful of water. Beat the egg and mix the flour, meal and baking powder together, add the salt and sugar; then the butter, the egg and, lastly, stir in the water. Bake in muffin tins.

Date Muffins.—For date muffins take one-third cupful of butter, one-fourth cupful of sugar, one beaten egg, three-fourths cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, half a teaspoonful of salt and half a pound of dates seeded and chopped.

Corn Muffins With Dates.—Mix and sift one cupful of cornmeal, one cupful of white flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one tablespoonful of brown sugar; add one well beaten egg, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and mix; then add one-half cupful of stoned and chopped dates. Bake in buttered and floured muffin pans in a hot oven.

Rye Muffins.—Sift one and one-half cupfuls of rye flour, one-half cupful of cornmeal, one-half teaspoonful of salt and three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder together. Beat two eggs until light and add one and one-fourth cupfuls of milk. Add this to the dry ingredients and mix well. Add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and pour into greased pans and bake in a quick oven about twenty-five minutes. Serve warm. This will make twelve muffins. If preferred the cornmeal may be omitted and all rye flour used.

THE FISH COURSE.

FISH BAKED WITH CLAMS.—Use large or small fish, cod or haddock, according to size of family—a three pound fish for a family of four. Open fish to back, leaving back whole; spread one-half with raw clams, either a pint or a quart, just as you wish; lay the other half over and tie with several strips of cotton cloth; make four or five little slits in top and press in thin slices of fat salt pork and sprinkle a little flour over all. Bake an hour and serve with melted butter.

Finnan Haddie, Garcia.—Cut half a green pepper in fine, short shreds. Add one tablespoonful of finely chopped onion and cook in three tablespoonfuls of butter until softened and slightly yellowed. Add three tablespoonfuls of flour and one and one-fourth teaspoonfuls each of salt and paprika. Stir until blended with the butter. Add one cupful of cream and one-half cupful of milk. Stir until boiling; then add one pint of cooked finnan haddie and let stand over boiling water till hot.

Boiled Cod.—Clean and prepare fish, tie in piece of cheesecloth and plunge into boiling water. Cook twenty minutes to pound. Be sure that it boils continuously; lift to large hot plate to drain; let stand for four minutes in a hot place; take from cloth, dish on hot platter, pour sauce over fish and serve.

Egg Sauce.—A cupful of milk, one-half cupful of fish liquor, three teaspoonfuls of butter, three tablespoonfuls of flour, seasoning and hard boiled egg. Blend butter and flour, add milk and broth, cook five minutes, add seasoning and cut egg in thin slices, lay on top of fish, pour over the dressing, garnish with parsley. Egg may be chopped instead of sliced for sauce.

Baked Finnan Haddie.—Place fish on waxed paper in baking pan and bake in moderate oven fifteen to twenty minutes or until well heated. Remove backbone and season with little butter. It is very delicate and easy to prepare. The waxed paper prevents sticking.

Creamed Finnan Haddie.—Cut fish into serving portions and place in baking pan on top of stove, nearly cover with water and boil gently until bones can be removed. Drain and pour milk (heated), in which put butter and pepper, over fish and serve.

Braid Is Smartly Used Here.

Russian blouse costume trimmed with embroidered braid. The blouse fastens at one side, having the neck finished with a funnel collar.

One reason why the Russian blouse holds its own against the newcomers in the realm of fashion is because it lends itself to so many charming variations. One forgets the fact that this costume is simply a Russian blouse and skirt model because of the distinctive looking braid that is used in the decorative scheme. Then, too, the design is adapted to development in such a wide range of materials that it will be as popular in linen a few months hence as it is now in gabardine. In medium size the costume requires 4¾ yards 54-inch gabardine.

The jacket, if made separately, calls for 2½ yards of material. It is effective in silk, particularly if the skirt is of striped or checked taffeta. If made with a shorter peplum than illustrated the blouse can be made from 2¼ yards of goods.

The peplum is a three-piece affair, two sections being cut from the piece marked "I" and one from the piece marked "J." The latter is laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods, to the right of the back, which is placed the same way. After the collar, there are no other sections of the pattern which are placed on the fold of material, all being carefully laid over a lengthwise thread.

If the blouse is desired with open neck the front may be cut out at the neck along indicating small "o" perforations. The lower edges of the peplum, if cut off on small "o" perforations will be shorter than the effect illustrated.

The demand for braids has brought out some very attractive novelties in silk and woolen braids as well as in tub effects. Joffre blue and dark green designs are woven into the black silk ground of the braid used on this costume, and it gives the costume an air of dressiness without making it too elaborate for general wear. About 6 yards of wide and ¾ yard narrow braid are needed to trim blouse and skirt.

Among the white woolen stuffs all of the serges are popular. The vogue for gabardine continues and there are many new weaves making a bid for popularity.

For the Children

Little Miss Robbins Coasting In New York.

Snow in Central park, New York city, is a great source of pleasure to the little people who live in the vicinity of the city's greatest playground. The young miss in the picture, who is so gayly taking advantage of the fun provided by a fall of snow, is Miss Frances Robbins, daughter of Mr. Henry Pelham Robbins. She is making the most of the snow. Lying flat on her speedy sled, she is dashing down the hill, shouting to those in her path to clear the way. Such scenes are very common in New York city this winter, as old King Boreas has been kind enough to send his snow sprites to distribute his favors in the big town. Grown people don't care so very much for snow in the city, but the little people think it's splendid fun.

"The Trades of the Dumb."

Any number of children can play this game, and it is amusing and interesting. Let one player repair to the hall or to another room and decide what trade he will represent. When ready he knocks on the door and enters. Without a word or a smile he begins by motions to show what his chosen trade is. Perhaps he is a carpenter. Then he pretends to hammer nails, to saw or plane a board. Perhaps he is a coachman. In that case he makes believe to drive a horse, to turn a carriage or make the steed go. A tailor sews and cuts imaginary cloth and tries on garments. A painter goes through the motions of painting, dipping an unseen brush into a pretended pail and spreading the paint on wall or floor. There are other trades. One may be a musician, a policeman, sweeper, dressmaker, milliner, farmer, butcher, baker, grocer or sailor.

If the player laughs or answers or speaks he must pay a forfeit when the game is over. The other players try their best by making funny remarks to cause him to laugh and lose his dumbness, and he has to be very alert not to get caught answering some question or suggestion.

"Parcel Post."

Players sit in a circle. Each person is supposed to be a package and is given a number. One person blindfolded is in the center. If there are more than fifteen players there may be two or more players blindfolded. When the players in the center call two or more numbers the players answering to those numbers shall exchange places and are liable to be caught by the center players during the exchange. When the center players become tired trying to catch any one they may call, "General delivery!" At once every one jumps up and runs for a new seat. When a player is caught he becomes the blindfolded one. Each one keeps the same number throughout the game.

Potato Peeling Race.

A potato peeling race is good fun if the party is informal and the guests not too daintily clad. The hostess provides a clean potato for each guest, and at a signal all start peeling at once. The one who gets through first and produces an unbroken peel gets the prize. This is more fun than an apple peeling contest because of the little knots and eyes in the potatoes.

KILLED FOR SPILLING SALT.

Stabs Fellow Convict For Act Committed In Dining Hall.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Henry Schmidt, a prisoner at the United States penitentiary here, was killed recently by J. S. Jones, another convict, as the result of a quarrel which started the night before when Schmidt spilled salt on Jones' bread in the dining hall. Jones stabbed Schmidt in the breast with a piece of steel when the prisoners were forming in line for dinner.

Schmidt was serving a three year sentence for army desertion and larceny. He was received June 7, 1915, from Governors island, New York.

We are now being dignified by the visit of a Danish prince. Perhaps he has the deed for the Danish West Indies in his pocket.

Man's Limitations.

Man has been able to learn some things, but has forgotten many others. He has not added one sense to his senses, one limb to his limbs, one faculty to his soul. He has merely explored another region of the circle in which he is confined. The human mind is always in motion. It runs from one point to another. It exalts what it embraces and forgets what it has abandoned. It never manages to cultivate one part of its domain without leaving the others fallow.—"The Inequality of the Human Races."

Bread Leavened With Snow.

The use of fresh dry snow as a leavening agent is not new, but the way in which it acts seems to be misunderstood to some extent. The popular explanation is that the raising of the dough is due to ammonia in the snow. As a matter of fact, snow contains but a very slight amount of free ammonia, probably not more than one part in a million. This quantity is, of course, by far too small to cause any expansion of the dough. The leavening action is due to the entangled air in the snow. The air expands on heating to several times its original volume, thus expanding the dough. Steam is formed at the same time and aids in the rising process.—Exchange.

Confucius on Kingcraft.

"What is kingcraft?" demanded a disciple.

Confucius replied, "Food enough, troops enough and a trusting people."

"Were there no help for it which could be best spared of the three?"

"Troops," said the master.

"And were there no help for it which could be better spared of the other two?"

"Food," said the master. "From of old all men die, but without trust a people cannot stand."

First Colonial Assembly.

The first legislative assembly that ever met in America was at Jamestown, Va. Governor Yeardley, feeling that the colonists should "have a hand in the governing of themselves," to use his own language, called the assembly together at Jamestown July 30, 1619. It consisted of the governor, council and "burgesses," as they were called, chosen from the various plantations. The laws passed by this body had to be ratified in England; but, in turn, the orders from London were not binding unless ratified by the colonial assembly. In 1621 these privileges were embodied in a written constitution, the first of the kind in America.—New York American.

The Ruling Passion.

It is related of a certain German savant, to show how strong the ruling passion is in death, that as he was dying he exclaimed in French, in which language he was deeply learned, "Je meurs" (I die). Pretty soon he opened his eyes before passing away and added, "Man kann auch sagen, Je me meurs!" (One can also in French use the reflexive form of the verb "to die.") His last flicker of interest was in the word more than in the fact of death.

MAY BOOST COAL 50 CENTS A TON

Dealers in Some Cities Predict Price of $8.50, If Miners Are Granted Their Demands.

If the demands of the miners are granted by the operators, an increase of 2 per cent, in wages, wholesale coal dealers predict that the retail price of coal will be advanced 50 cents a ton. No definite information as to just what the advance will be has been received from the mine operators, but the retailers have it figured out that it will be about 50 cents. If this increase is made it will mean that chestnut coal selling at $7.25 a ton will be advanced to $7.85. Egg and stove coal will sell for about $7.65 and pea coal will retail at about $6.25 a ton.

At $8.50 a Ton, Maybe

Local coal dealers who have been keeping close tabs on the anthracite situation and some of whom have been stocking up as much as possible, are generally inclined to the belief that if the demands of the miners are granted there will be a marked increase in thep rice of coal. They are not at all assured, however, that the demands of the miners will be granted to the extent that it will be necessary for the operators to raise the price.

One man, prominent in the labor unions and who has been following the situation among the miners from the standpoint of thel abor side of the question, is even more pessimistic regarding the possibility of high prices of coal that may come and declared that he would not be surprised to see $8.50 coal within the next two years.

The opinion is shared alike by coal men and some of the labor men that that portion of the demands made by the miners which refers to the recognition of the union and the collection oof dues, would make the operators responsible for the collection of dues by the operators.

In the event of a marked change, the wholesalers have let the retailers in on their ideas, and have expressed the belief that if there should be a strike among the miners it will make a marked difference in the manner of selling coal.

The plan, they say, is to have but two sizes of anthracite coal, one for use in the furnace and the other for use in the range and heating stoves.

The larger size would be a combination of egg and stove sizes and would sell for about the same price as now, provided that there was no increase in the cost of mining it.

In order to arrange for the change in the size of coal, it would be necessary to change the mesh of the breakers. The wholesalers saw that it would probably take a month or more to make these changes and it is said that in the event that a strike should occur this would give the mine operators a chance to make these changes, something that they have been contemplating for a long time.

Scene from the musical comedy, "THE MILLION DOLLAR DOLL," th e season's best offering. Coming to The Quirk Thursday

"The Million Dollar Doll" which will be the offering at the Quirk matinee and night, Thursday, Feb. 11, has already proven that it is the one big "hit" of all this season's musical offerings. The books, lyrics and music were written by Louis Weslyn of New York city, who is the successful writer for such well known artists as Rock & Fulton, Lulu Glazer, Mavion Bent, Pat Rooney and many others. The entire work is original and far above the genehal run of musical comedies. Mr. Weslyn considers this his best work. The production is staged by Harvey D. Orr Producing Co., who are well known to the theatre going public. They have given this attraction the most elaborate production ever sent on tour. The costumes, stage settings and light effects are beautiful and enchanting. The attraction is one of the largest and best on the road this season and is well worthy of the large patronage which has been accorded it since the opening date.

OSWEGO N. Y. C. MEN GET MORE PAY

Oswego—Announcement was made Saturday that the New York Central railroad company had granted a wage increase of one cent per hour to all employes at the local shops. This includes the men engaged in the mechanical end, also the car shops. The increase will amount to nearly $10,000 a month, it is stated, and will go into effect March 1. The increase is voluntary on the part of the company. About 800 men will benefit by the increase.

PHOENIX FIRMS UNDERGO CHANGES

Phoenix.—The new undertaking firm that ,a few days since, purchased the furniture and undertaking business of Fred W. Hakes, is now in full possession. The firm consists of E. I. Hill and E. W. Allanson, formerly of Holly, N. Y., and the firm name is Hill & Allanson. Mr. Hakes, who has conducted the business for, some 18 or 20 years past, retires for rest, but will remain in Phoenix for the p resent .

Frank E. Potter ,theg rocer who for the past seven years has occupied the Wendell block and is now remodeling the interior and in a few days will remove his stock of groceries and provisions to his new quarters. Another business change that will take place is the removal of the millinery and dry goods stock of the firm of B. M. & J. L. Dryden from the Hutchinson block on Bridge to the Wendell block on Canal street, where they will have more room and a better chance to show their goods.

Ernest E. Burleigh has moved his real estate and loan office from the Hirschbolz building to rooms over Moyer Brothers' hardware store, where he will be pleased to see his friends and patrons.

A recent real estate transaction was the sale of William O. Chamberlain of a small farm at Three Rivers to George Redhead of Clay, N. Y.

CHARLES W. BARNES

Oswego—The funeral of Charles W. Barnes was held from his late home, No. 117 West Third st., Saturday, the services being conducted by the Rev. Richmond H. Gesner, D. D., of Christ church. There were many floral tributes testifying to the many friendships formed by Mr. Barnes, including a broken wheel from the Yacht Club and a beautiful wreath from the Elks. The bearers were E. C. Shilling, R. G. Blackhurn, George J. Hessler, E. E. Frost, W. W. Spencer and A. E. Oberlander of Syracuse . Interment was made in Riverside cemetery.

"Trilby," perhaps the most popular book and play ever presented internationally, comes to the Quirk today as cinimatized by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, with the queenly screen artiste, Clara Kimball Young, and Wilton Lackaye, who originated the role of "Svengali" in the legitimate production in the leading roles, supported by Chester Barnett, Paul McAllister, and an all-star cast.

"Trilby," produced under the able direction of Maurice Tourneur, had its initial run at the Forty-fourth St. theatre ,in New York, and voted by "those who know' 'as being the best five-act feature production yet seen.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The increase in travel due to the building of interuban railways and the great facilities offered by the steam railways have made the small town almost a suburb of the city, while the automobile offers inducements for visiting and so many attractions as a means of pleasurable locomotion that the tendency has grown towards smaller parties and, consequently, less general sociability. It is such an easy matter to run over to a neighboring town, twenty-five, thirty-five or even fifty miles away for a visit to the theater or to spend an evening of sight seeing, motoring home afterward, that local gatherings have not the same attraction as formerly.

The girl in the small town is as fully advised on the latest styles as her metropolitan sister and is no less sophisticated about conduct in general, if we except the city girls who know all about cabarets and fox trot clubs. The country boys are as well dressed as their urban brothers and are as worldly-wise, while they have probably more and likely are to be more cosmopolitan than the city dwellers. Altogether, modern inventions and conveniences, the telephone, electric railway, automobile, newspapers and rural free delivery have brought city and country together so closely that what interests one is pretty apt to interest the other.

Yet, with all these advantages, it may be questioned whether people are happier than formerly. At least, to one whose recollections of the small town go back beyond a quarter of a century, there is more or less pleasure in recalling the feeling of general sociability and friendly interest which pervaded the rural community at that time.

If you have not seen the February number of the American City Magazine you should place your order with your dealer now and look up page 178 where you will find an article about FULTON'S Chamber of Commerce.

It was clearly shown during the fourth annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States that men of business are not listening as much to professional politicians as they used to do. The ynow first want to hear what average business man has to say and then they make up their mind. It was also shown that the Senate and Congress are taking notice of what the largest business men's organization in the Country has to say in regard to important measures. This is a good thing and next year we will see more of this, because this sentiment is growing all over the country.

Mr. Howard Elliot, President of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railway, who did such marvelous work since he became the president of that road, pointed out to the delegates in Washington where the railway malady originated in this country. His lecture was very interesting and we hope to comment on it a little later on.

Secretary Redfield of the Department of Commerce called our attention to vocational education and he sincerely hoped that the people of the United States would wake up to the fact that it is about time that we provide good education in that particular line for the boys and girls, so that they may be able to fight their way through life as skilled artisans and not as good for nothings.

It often happens that a boy or a girl has to enter life at the ages of 12 or 14 and does not know anything at all and still has to make a living. It would be far better if we gave them a good education in a special line so that they may be able to make good wages instead of starvation wages as it is often the case with the ones who have not had education along a special line.

LITTLE ZIPPING ZEPHYRS STILL ON THE JOB

That the little zipping zephyrs are doing their part for Fulton's prosperity is no longer an idle dream. It was understood they consulted at length one morning on how best to serve our little city, then straightway hied themselves to the bridges.

The last business establishment in Fulton to profit by the watchful waiting, helpful attitude of the tipping baby breezes was that of the Youngs Millinery. Last week two dignified ladies of the West Side bought new bonnets as a result of an experience similar to that enjoyed by the embroidery salesman.

NO COUNCIL MEETING TO BE HELD TONIGHT

Mayor Lewis states that he did not order a special meeting of the Common Council for tonight to take up the pool room ordinance which he vetoed last week. The action of the council in voting the ordinance will be discussed pro and con at the regular monthly meeting in March, at which time the people opposed to the ordinance, as well as the pool room proprietors will be given an opportunity to present their cases.

New York Man Says Steel Die Castings Plant Will Be Added to City's Nineteen Industries

While the public meeting called for the Clark House, last night, was unproductive of one essential feature—that of securing stock subscriptions needed to bring to Fulton the steel die castings plant so much desired by many of the city's leading business men, the industry will be landed ultimately, provided the determined attitude of Mr. George Caffing Warner of New York, remains uppermost. Mr. Warner made it plain at the meeting how desirable it was that at least $20,000 be subscribed then and there, so that he could go to Syracuse today and tell men friendly to the proposition that Fulton is taking an interest in the proposed new industry.

While the sum required was not forthcoming from the audience, a substantial increase was made in the stock subscriptions, and this morning, it is understood, saw more names added to the already long list.

Mr. Warner prefaced his talk upon the merits of the proposed plant by telling of his interest in and devotion to Fulton. He described the unusual advantages enjoyed by the city, enumerating transportation, the unusual rainfall, which results in giving a fine dairy section and an abundance of water power. He has canvassed the situation, finding that the freight rates to and from this point to certain markets average $1 a ton less than are enjoyed by Water town. Another advantage enjoyed by Fulton is the increased water power, which is beyond the present capacity to absorb, brought about by the dams erected by the State for Barge canal operations. Little by little Mr. Warner reached the point of points—that of selling stock in the steel die casting plant. As he proceeded he told of the amount of scrap steel obtainable in this territory, all of which is now shipped to Pittsburgh. This material, Mr. Warner said, which can be secured from the local dealers at $2.50 a ton. This is less than received in Pittsburgh. Two carloads of steel scrap would be consumed by the proposed plant each week.

It was stated by Mr. Warner also that the nearest plant of the same nature is 300 miles away. This plant is unable to keep up to the demands of the trade, rejecting many orders through indifference and lack of facilities. He feels confident that were Fulton to secure the new plant its product would find a ready market throughout the eastern section of the country.

Mr. Warner's reason for urging haste in closing the deal to secure the new plant is that if Blackwood is wanted here to superintend the productive end of it, immediate action is necessary. Mr. Blackwood is in receipt of a lot of commendatory remarks, some of them coming from Mr. Frank Ash, who with Mr. L. W. Emerick, returned recently from a trip to Detroit, where the gentlemen investigated the workings of a steel die castings plant, the one with which Mr. Blackwood was formerly connected. Mr. Ash said he found that Mr. Blackwood is held in the highest esteem by men in the same line of business.

Mr. H. A. Lewis of the Hot Point Electric company, presented a few facts concerning the possibilities of the proposed industry, stating the Blackwood product is in demand by auto manufacturing firms who demand the best quality of castings. He pointed to the value of the plant should it be acquired, first of which would be a pay roll of $13,000 monthly.

In the absence of Mr. Blackwood it was stated that his estimate of the sum of money needed to secure and place the plant on a working basis would be $180,000, which, sub-divided, would provide $60,000 for buildings, $60,000 for equipment and $60,000 for working capital.

Board Refuses to Recognize Discrimination in Assessment of Water Rents

Peace, perfect peace, marked last night's public session of the Board of Public Works. This in spite of the prevalent belief yesterday that there would be a lively time. It may be that the "star-chamber" session which preceeded the public session was otherwise than as a babbling brook, but on this point the reader must remain in ignorance—at least for the present. Nothing of news value emanated from the "star chamber," that is until the Commissioners made their appearance, which occurred after they had remained behind doors closed to the public for two long hours. When the Commissioners did appear they transacted such business as auditing the pay rolls and minor other bills. The public session lasted one hour.

The anticipated liveliness of the meeting was to bear upon the matter of how to secure water rentals from a number of houses, especially certain properties belonging to the American Woolen company. It is reported that these houses are being supplied with city water at a flat rate. Superintendent Rumsey stated before the meeting that the houses in question did not have meters and that since their construction in 1912, the company has been paying $1.25 quarterly for each tenant. There are two families in each house.

A resolution was introduced by Mr. O'Brien ordering the installation of meters in all houses which do not at present contain one. The houses under discussion are located in 2nd and 3rd sts., in the neighborhood of the aluminum works. Mr. Rumsey was requested by the board to make a report on the houses adjoining the mill property. It is understood those houses receive water through a meter in the mill.

Mr. Rumsey informed the board that there were only 25 meters now in stock, most of them having been taken fro in vacant houses. In the event that these houses are rented soon, the supply will be exhausted. He recommended the purchase of more meters immediately.

The Superintendent also recommended that a quantity of iron pipe which has never been used, could be sold now at about $18 a ton, which is slightly less than the original purchase price. There are about 40 tons of pipe on hand for which the city has no use. The pipe was purchased in 1912. It is too thick to be used in the city water system and again is only one-quarter as strong as the pipe used. City Engineer Hill said the pipe can be used only for carrying a gravity load. Mr. Rumsey was directed to get a higher price than $18, because of the fact that the price of steel has risen in the past two years.

MISS CROCKET PREACHED TODAY

The Free Methodist church, at State and 3rd sts., was the mecca today for a large audience, the attraction being a sermon by one of the Sheldons, Miss Evangeline Crockett.

Miss Crockett spoke also at the noon meeting at the Chocolate Works. She is the talented daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Crockett, of the Weedsport Free Methodist church. About six years ago her parents were sent as missionaries to Yeotmal, Province of Berar, India, and Miss Crockett accompanied them. Five years were lived by the family there, they returning on account of the mother's ill health.

Miss Crockett graduated from the Syracuse High school, class of 1910, and later from the Greenville College at Greenville, Ill. She spent also one year at the Evansville Junior College, Wis., and is rated as a fine pulpit orator.

The services at the church tonight will be in charge of the Rev. H. L. Barnes, pastor of the Free Methodist church at Alton, N. Y. Mr. Barnes is stopping with his father, Mr. John Barnes, who lives at 611 State st.

WESTERN NEW YORK'S HINT

Farmers in Western New York are up in arms over hunters who, in ever increasing numbers, invade the countryside during the open season and do serious damage to barnyard stock, as well as the game. So great has this nuisance become that fruit growers and grangers are seeking to lengthen the closed season for certain birds, in order to secure relief. But the best of suggestions from this source is one that would require the wearing of a conspicuous badge, or label, by all duly licensed sportsmen while afield. Here's a chance for some legislator to become famous through enacting this simple requirement into law. A broad baldric of red to be issued by the State and worn by the hunter would not only show that the latter was licensed, but would also serve to protect the wearer from other hunters who could not easily mistake the flaming red band for any variety of game. It is a good idea. The Conservation Department should urge its adoption.—Kingston Freeman.

SWITZERLAND IN WAR TIME

The experiences of a neutral country situated uncomfortably close to the "war zone" are none too pleasant —so much may be gathered from the twenty-ninth edition of the political year book of the Swiss Confederation. Among the matters which have caused anxiety to the Swiss government are export and import embargoes, commercial prohibitions, sequestration problems and postal and telegraphic regulations.

It has been necessary, for example, to establish in Geneva a bureau for forwarding news to prisoners of war and interned civilians. Up to June 30, 1915, letters to the number of 1,800,000 had been received at this station, and 3,730,000 printed forms had been sent out. The total of all communications of war prisoners in Switzerland was at the end of last September over fifty million—and all such letters are forwarded free of charge. The exchange of civil prisoners has also bothered Switzerland. From October 24, 1914, to March 5, 1915, 10,845 Frenchmen, 7,650 Germans and 1,980 Austrians had been sent through the little republic.

Switzerland has also suffered commercially. Swiss imports dropped from $383,800,000 in 1913 to $295,600,000 in 1914, and there was a decrease in exports of more than $37,800,000. There have been two 5 per cent. Federal loans, another at 4 1-2 per cent., and a 5 per cent. loan negotiated in New York to facilitate the buying of American grain.

It is obvious that Switzerland has had many of the discomforts of war while maintaining a strict neutrality. Her mobilization has been a heavy public burden; and the shutting off of certain kinds of imports has caused more inconvenience that statistics can show. However, when the Swiss are inclined to complain because they have powerful and quarrelsome neighbors, they probably reflect how much more fortunate they are than the Belgians, whose only offense was to be in the path of a great army. —Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

PUBLIC INTEREST IN 8-HOUR RAILROAD DAY

Less than two months ago the Interstate Commerce Commission made to the railroads of the Eastern Division a gift variously estimated at from $35,000,000 to $50,000,000.

This was the culmination of a vigorous campaign waged by the roads for an increase in freight rates. Every possible device had been employed to affect public sentiment favorably. The nation was told that the prosperity of the whole people was dependent upon the prosperity of the roads.

We were asked to believe that funds drawn from the people through the agency of higher freight rates were instantly disseminated through the whole business community by railroad disbursements.

Especially were we assured that the suitable treatment of the railroad employes was largely dependent upon the granting of this right to increase freight rates.

Well, the railroads won their appeal. The commission granted them a 5 per cent increase in rates.

Perhaps it would be premature to expect within two months the full measure of the public benefit so glibly promised by the railroad spokesmen. Certainly it has not yet put in an appearance.

But the time is at hand when the railroads can make good their profession of public spirit, can render something of an equivalent for the tens of millions of dollars granted them by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This they can do by acceding to the demand for the eight-hour day made upon them by their employes.

That demand is upheld by public sentiment. It finds support in common sense and in common practice

It expresses a perfectly reasonable aspiration of labor for improved conditions of employment.

It will raise the quality of railroad labor and thereby enhance its efficiency.

Every time and everywhere the eight-hour system has been put to the test it has worked to the mutual advantage of the employer and the employed—namely the public.

The public has the right to insist, and does insist, that the railroads acquiesce in the men's demand because the public rightfully believes that its own safety is involved in that action.

Overworked labor is not efficient labor, it is not safe labor in a business in which hundreds of thousands of human beings are daily exposed to serious risk. The overtired, discontented man at the switch or signal tower, with a brooding sense of injustice ever upon him, is not a safe custodian of human lives.

The public has been generous with railroads. The moment is here for an evidence of railroad good faith and reciprocity.—N. Y. American.

BUSINESS—Particularly the most desirable business—is very much like the sport of fishing. You can catch it if you use good bait. The Evening Times offers you the correct bait.

BUILDING FOR KEEPS

"——And the entire object of true education is to make people not merely do the right things, but enjoy the right things—not merely industrious, but to love industry—not merely learned, but to love knowledge—not merely pure, but to love purity—not merely just but to hunger and thirst after justice,"—this John Ruskin says in "The Crown of Wild Olive."

And so, it is not merely a matter of doing things for civic welfare unless we enjoy doing them. The deduction must be that unless individuals, or communities, are actuated by a motive that is bigger, better and nobler than that of pure selfish gain we may as well build a house on sand. The stability of communities is that of individuals. Only the real things of life stand as rocks,—firm, weathering the storms, and a shelter for all.

Communities reflect the character as persons, and the moral standard of a community cannot rise higher than that of its mass of people. A fountain can rise no higher than its source, and until a people are strong enough and noble enough to express and execute noble thoughts and noble deeds, true progress cannot be made. If force be employed the final result must be disastrous.

The proof of this may be found in individual cases, and what is a community but individuals. If a person of uneducated opportunities reflects a belief in the enjoyment of cheap literature, rag time music, and poor phrases, shall we expect an immediate change upon his contact with finer examples. Certainly not!

And so, if a person upon hearing sentiment of loyalty to home, civic pride, and plain, everyday "brotherhood of man" can not find enjoyment in their expression he should be let alone. We have no moral right to force another's opinions to match ours, no matter how fine, how noble and helpful they may seem to us to be.

We cannot build houses to stay if we build them on sand, even though the architect may promise.

A NEWSPAPER SERMON

(Selected)

Ministers occasionally take the newspapers to task for some points in which they fall short and then again the newspaper will take up the topic and preach a sermon to the churches. Here is a sermon by a newspaperman:

"There is one thing religion has not paid enough attention to, and that is politics. Not that the church should involve itself in politics or use itself for one party or another, but that each individual member should become thoroughly interested in public affairs, and take part in the instrumentalities adopted for their direction. There are the primaries that are nearly upon us—they should be attended as a religious duty. A man who will go to church and not to the polls or primaries takes only a half view of his Christian duty. A man can not have much of a religious faith if it lies dormant and does not get out into the world of deeds. The church ought to take some stand upon this matter and terminate a man's membership if he fails to attend to his political duties. Government is established by Gad and He expects all who believe in Him to do their part in upholding it; and there is no way of upholding it except upon Christian principles. So a Christian who is too good to take some interest in politics is too bad to belong to church, and so should be expelled.

Ruth Welch, prima-donna, with "THE PRINCESS PAT," Coming soon to The Quirk Theatre

Manager Darleigh announces the early presentation of the new comic opera, "The Princess Pat," the book and lyrics by Henry Blossom, the music by Victor Herbert and the staging by Fred G. Latham. Love and jealousy predominate in the story of the play, for what would a Princess be minus either? The opera depicts a woman's efforts to safeguard her husbands affections by arousing his jealousy in attentions to "the other man." The Princess di Montaldo nee Patrice O'Connor, uses this method to duly impress her really loving, but impossive husband, Prince Antonio di Montaldo, an Italian, with the charms she believes he does not fully appreciate. Her instrument to this end is one Anthony Schmaltz, an elderly German plutocrat, who is described as "a bit of a bounder." Bob Darrow the inevitable young man of ready wit, aids Mi Cady in her scheme. The opera will be presented with a cast and chorus of superior excellence and an augmented Herbert Orchestra. Mr. Herbert's score contains some twenty numbers, several of which are waltzes. These songs suggest a popular theme: "Allies," "Make Him Guess," "I'd Like to be a Quitter," "Love is Best of All," "For Better or for Worse," "I Wish I was an Island in an Ocean of Girls," "In Day Dreams," "All For You" "The Shoes of Husband Number One as Worn by Number Two,' and "Two Laughing Eyes." The scenes of the opera which is in three acts are laid in Long Island.

THE MARCH MAGAZINES

Serious Ailments Mistaken for "Teething"

In the March Woman's Home Companion Dr. Roger H. Dennett has an interesting article on the danger some mothers incur for their children by blaming every symptom of infant disease on teething, which should be a natural and easy process.

"'Baby seems sick, but I do not think I will have a doctor because I think he is only teething.' This is a typical remark," says the doctor, "that is heard on every side, and there in lies the danger of the teething bugaboo. Every single ill a baby has is attributed to teething, and many times the real cause of the illness is not discovered until it is too late. This is one of the reasons why we should know just what part the teeth do play in causing sickness.

"Teething always should be, and often is, an easy, natural process unaccompanied by any symptoms whatever. Those of us who remember how it felt when the wisdom teeth were coming through know that the gums felt a little full and uncomfortable, but they caused no real pain if there was no abnormality about them. The same ought to be true of baby's first teeth."

Advertising Raised the British Army

In the March American Magazine is an account of Hedley Francis Le Bas who was employed by the British Government to raise an army by advertising. He did it—at 57 per cent of the former cost of getting recruits. He also conducted the advertising campaign by which a $3,000,000,000 loan was placed.

Mr. Le Bas made his ads for soldiers interesting, just as he would have done for purchasers of tea, soap or tobacco. He formed a committee of the leading ad writers in the country and their posters have filled the gaps on the fighting line for over a year. When the loan of $3,000,000,000 was required by the government Mr Le Bas was once more pressed into service and the three billion was oversubscribed at the end of two weeks.

"Through these revolutionary successes of Mr. Le Bas the British Government has had good cause to endorse the business of advertising.

"Hedley Francis LeBas is a genial gentleman of about fifty-five, an old army man himself, and the son of Captain Le Bas of Jersey. He is the founder and head of the Caxton Publishing Company. He is also a director of George Newnes, Ltd., and C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd., two of the largest magazine publishes in Great Britain.

"Last, but by no means least, Mr. Le Bas is the honored possessor of a medal awarded him by the Royal Humane Society for saving the lives of two women two years ago."

COMMENT OF STATE EDITORS

With a working majority in both houses of Congress, the fact remains true that the only hope for any measures looking to national defense will come to naught unless the Republicans sink party lines and do the work demanded by the nation—a work the Democrats are incapable of doing. —Schenectady Union-Star.

The indications are that the Democrats are planning to sidestep the tariff issue at this time. They are shouting for a large increase in the expenditures for the preparedness movement, but when it comes to the providing of the funds to meet this extra increase they appear to be almost wholly at sea.—Oneida Post.

From present indications, the President will have to depend largely on the uniform patriotism of the Republican party to sustain the policies he has lately announced; an efficient army and navy, a tariff that will shut out the flood of pauper manufactures from Europe at the end of the war. This will be no hardship for the Republican party because the newer policies of the President is what the Republicans have consistently advocated. —Port Chester Item.

In New York an Italian by terrorism abducted a minister's daughter, mistreated her shamefully and auctioned her off like a slave, securing $55. This white slaver probably will be sent to Sing Sing. There he will join the Mutual Welfare league, spend most of his time in idleness, enjoy band concerts at dinner and attend picture shows at night. A little less sympathy for the fiends who get into Sing Sing and a little more of the milk of human kindness for the struggling decent men outside would make the world better.—Watertown Standard.

The Brown Committee's report to the Legislature on New York city finances is characterized by a disposition to be fair with the city as against the State. This is shown particularly by its recommendations that the city be given its share of the automobile tax and its share of the additional excise tax; that the State shoulder the regulative cost of the Public Service Commission for this district and the support of the city normal schools as normal schools outside of the city are supported; and that the city be given power to fix the salaries of its officers and employees.—N. Y. World. (Dem).

The Democratic platform of 1912 contained the following: "We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican congresses.

We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government."

These are brave words and had they been followed by brave performance the party in power would have deserved and received the thanks of the country. Today the leaders of that party are silent while it is charged that the sixty-third congress, wholly Democratic, appropriated, exclusive of postoffice, $1,604,325,816.57 as against $1,453,084,294.99 for the sixty-first congress, which was wholly Republican.

Thus Democratic "simplicity and economy" have cost the country just $151,241,522.58 more than Republican "profligate waste."—Albany Knickerbocker Press.

HAT TRIMMER GUARDED BY PIECE OF FEROCITY

Mr. Charles H. Sage of 363 Park st., is in possession of a bull pup today. He did not own the animal yesterday. Other people own bull pups and little is said about them, unless the bullships happen to lose themselves for a little while, and then, whoop 'er up, a lost ad si inserted in The Evening Times: result, the dog is found.

Now this is not a story with a moral; nor is it intended as an "ad" for The Evening Times; nor is it an "ad" for the millinery successes of the said Mr. Sage, who last night won a contest in the art at a measure social held by the State street church. It is a simple statement that Mr. Sage won, his prize being a bull dog whose glass eyes stared at him when he awoke this morning to find himself famous. It is not known whether Mr. Sage will follow his elected occupation, as the dawg is a hindrance, in this way, that he will not allow prospective customers to approach the house. Mr. Sage may rent millinery parlors in the downtown section.

"THINK FIRE" BEFORE IT HAPPENS!

DON'T allow children to play with matches.

DON'T block the fire escapes, you may need them yourself tonight.

DON'T leave everything to the landlord, inspect your own house from cellar to garret and locate all exists.

DON'T throw away lighted matches, cigars, or cigarettes.

DON'T go into dark closets, bed rooms, or cellars, using matches or candles to light your way.

DON'T use insecticides in the vicinity of open flame lights. Many such compounds contain volatile inflammable oils.

DON'T use kerosene, benzine, or naphtha in lighting fires, or to quicken a slow fire—it may result in death.

DON'T use use gasoline or benzine to clean clothing near an open flame, light, or fire.

DON'T use alcohol lamps, especially if made of glass; they often break and the fluid is ignited at once.

DON'T fill any lamp with gasoline, kerosene or other oils while the lamp is lighted. Keep the burners of all oil lamps thoroughly clean.

DON'T fill kerosene lamps after dark or within 15 feet of the lights or fire.

DON'T use oils with a low flash point.

DON'T put ashes in wooden boxes or barrels. Keep ashes away from boards. Don't place them on dumb waiters or in closets. Hot ashes take fire by themselves as they frequently have small bits of coal mixed in with them.

DON'T accumulate rubbish in premises, cellars, or workshops, and don't deposit such material on dumb waiters unless it is to be removed at once; while awaiting removal keep such material in covered metal-lined receptacles.

DON'T accumulate old beds and bedding or other trash in cellars.

DON'T keep matches in anything but a closed metal receptacle.

DON'T have storage closets under stairways or near dumb-waiter shafts. Fires in these places cut off your main exit.

DON'T store oils, paints, grease or fats in the house. Keep them outside if possible. If you must have such things on hand, use a metal box or bin with a lid.

DON'T have short gas brackets or place them close to woodwork or near curtains. Every gas jet should be protected by ag lass globe or wire cage. Swinging or folding brackets are never safe.

DON'T neglect to have the chimney flue cleaned once a year. You are responsible, not your landlord.

DON'T have lace curtains in vicinity of gas jets.

DON'T set kitchen stoves close to woodwork. Put a metal shield behind the stove.

THURSDAY FINAL DAY TO PAY ASSESSMENTS

It was announced from the City Hall this morning that taxpayers have until Thursday of this week in which to pay their assessments, or one-third at least.

A number of taxpayers have been misinformed by an erroneous notice in the newspapers to the effect that Saturday was the last day on which payment could be made, City Chamberlain Adkins stated today, and he desires this corrected.

QUEEN ESTHERS HELD VALENTINE SOCIAL

Valentine Day was celebrated at the home of Miss Lela Church, of Utica st., last night, when about thirty-five persons called there to enjoy the evening in music, games and refreshments. The guests were all members of the Queen Esthers of the First M. E. church, and included wives, sweethearts and husbands, and some who were neither of these.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Admirers of the clever Theda Bara will find in today's production of "The Galley Slave," in 5 parts, a film feature up to the usual Fox standard. Stuart Holmes, Jane Lee and Claire Whitney, all screen favorites, are in this great cast, Four acts put on by Jack Shea include the skating bear, a real novelty. Tomorrow, "The Catspaw," a Kleine-Edison feature.

AMERICAN MECHANICS TO GIVE ELABORATE BALL

At the regular weekly meeting of the American Mechanics held last night, plans were discussed for holding an elaborate ball in the near future. After the regular routine business of the order had been transacted, there was a "rummy" session.

WRESTLING

Two hundred forty wrestling fans attended the first carnival of the Independent Athletic club at Church's hall last night.

The main event between "Iron Neck" Mott and W. Webb, resulted in the visitor securing two of three falls. Webb got the first and third fall, Mott getting the second by an ear hold after 14 minutes of exciting grappling.

Webb got the first fal lin 46 minutes. The last fall in 32 minutes. Mott was 20 pounds lighter than his opponent.

In the preliminaries, "Young Tunk" won two straight falls against Charley Chip, of Oswego, while Fred Renous of Minetto, bettered Tony Ryan in two straight falls.

A challenge was issued by Fred Renous to wrestle "Young Tunk" in the best two out of three falls for a purse of $200, which was accepted by the Independent A. C. of which "Young Tunk" is a member. The match will atke place in Church's hall, March 6th.

I. O. G. T. OPPOSES REFERENDUM

State-wide prohibitory laws received a strong boost at the hands of the I. O. G. T., last night, when the lodge met in West Broadway, the occasion resulting in a free-hand discussion of the movement afoot to line up the order on the side of the anti-saloon forces, whose preference is for the local option bill, with the rider attached of a referendum. While the Good Templars are absolutely non-partisan in political matters generally, yet in such affairs as now confront the advocates of temperance reform, sides must be taken ,and they were taken last night,with the result indicated.

The action taken by the local lodge in opposing the Anti-Saloon forces and their Referendum rider, is in sharp contrast to the policy advocated by the National publication of the Good Templars, which stands pat on the bill now before the Assembly. Members of the order in this city are keeping their eyes upon the result of the battle in Albany, participated in by a representative of the State organization whose duty it is to watch legislative proceedings. It seems that this gentleman has been won over to the side of the Anti-Saloon forces, whose popularity is waning in the ranks of the I. O. G. T. throughout the State.

WOODMEN MADE COMPLETE JOB

One hundred and sixty-five woodchoppers, all members of the Fulton Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, last evening, invaded the forest of Syracuse by special train over the N. Y. C. On arrival, they immediately made a large clearing and with the lumber procured from the sturdy oaks they built for themselves comfortable homes. After transforming the primeval forest into a modern habitation, the minds of the pioneer woodmen were turned to pleasure and feasting.

All enjoyed the pilgrimage and at an early hour this morning were contented to leave the fruits of their labor to be enjoyed and remembered by those finding it necessary to remain.

The local axmen took all honors in the way of prizes, winning the State banner, for the largest increase in membership, percentage increase and also the largest number of candidates in the class adoption. Three Fultonians won in the prize drawing, L. Richardson, one ton of coal, Louis Gardner, one barrel of potatoes, and Mrs. Lena Brewer, one ham.

The affair was a complete success from beginning to end in each and every particular.

STATE OFFICIAL HERE TO EXAMINE SYSTEM OF COST ACCOUNTING

Deputy Comptroller Isadore Sach arrived in Fulton this morning. During his stay here Mr. Sach will examine books in the offices of City Clerk Allen and Chamberlain Adkins, with a view of incorporating certain of the officials methods in a proposed system for third-class cities of the State.

Mr. Sach was particularly impressed with the general atmosphere of interest in the city's affairs shown by the officials. It is unusual, according to Mr. Sachs, to find the same business-like air in cities of the size of Fulton.

The chart showing the costs in each department, which Mr. Adkins completed yesterday, received particular comment from the State official, and a number of pointers were given Messrs. Adkins and Allen relative to improving their methods.

Mr. Sach received a telegram while in New York city to come to Fulton without delay.

FEBRUARY TERM OF CO. COURT

The February term of County Court opened in Oswego yesterday, but no cases were tried at the opening session.

Jack Williams, a negro, and former member of the 24th U. S. Infantry, pleaded guilty to an unnatural crime and sentence was deferred until Thursday. Dennis O'Sullivan appeared for Williams. Thep risoner said he was born in Missouri and was 39 years old.

When asked his present residence he replied "why jail; I suppose." He admitted to having served a sentence of three months on a plea of corrupting the morals of a child made in County Court, in 1914.

James O'Brien and John Adams of Detroit, accusers of Williams, were brought here yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Potter of Minetto, from Industry, N. Y., where they were sent by Judge Gill last October.

William Ball, who was indicted with Williams, on a charge of attempted unnatural crime, refused to plead guilty and will be tried.

A native of Poland ,who gave his Americanized monaker as Mike O'Gorman, insisting upon the "O," was arraigned on a charge of being a disorderly person in refusing to support his family. He agreed to do this and was allowed to go.

Joseph Cantazarri was charged with violating his parole. He pleaded guilty at a previous term to carrying a revolver without a license and sentence was suspended. Judge Coville deferred sentence until tomorrow at 2 p. m.

The case of Walter A. Gannon vs. Robert McIver was dismissed by consent.

The case of Ward Foster, respondent, vs. R. S. Cunningham, appellant, was taken off the calendar.

The calendar was called and most of the criminal cases were marked ready for trial. The civil calendar was also called, but will not be taken up until the criminal calendar has been disposed of.

The following jurors were excused: Charles Peavy, Fulton; James F. Graham, Sandy Creek; William H. Davis, Pulaski; John J. Little, deputy county clerk, Fulton; AlvinH. Clute, Sandy Creek; Ernest Box, Pulaski; Jeremiah Collins, Oswego; Hudson J. Quigg, Oswego; William E. Clark, Oswego; Abram Nellis, Phoenix; J. D. Curtis, Richland; Michael Higgins, Oswego.

Kee-lock Screwless Mounting Attached to Your Old Lens

It makes no difference how loose your old lenses may be—or how badly worn the screw holes are—they can be attached to the new Kee-Lock mounting and be absolutely solid and stronger than before.

In attaching the Kee-Lock to old lens, the slot is cut in line with the old screw holes, (see round inner line) the key is inserted and heat cemented. This process guarantees a perfectly "wobble-proof" fitting. This new mounting is stylish, inconspicuous, strong and reliable.

The Kee-Lock is awaiting your inspection.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

Bowser Is Tender

He Comes Home and Finds Mrs. Bowser With a Headache.

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When Mrs. Bowser arose the other morning she found herself heavy headed, and black specks floated before her eyes. It was a billous attack, and she knew that she was in for a long day's headache. She said nothing to Mr. Bowser, knowing how he regarded such things, but went down to breakfast with false cheerfulness. The sight of food nauseated her, and he, being busy thinking of a deal he had on hand and being in a hurry to get away from the house, noticed nothing unusual.

Ten minutes after Mr. Bowser had departed Mrs. Bowser was in bed again with throbbing temples. The cook came up to say:

"It is what you call appendiceetus, ma'am. I had a brother who was seized with the mortal ailment, and he looked just like you do."

"It is nothing but a headache, Maggie," was the reply.

"Are you sure it is not typhoid fever? I had a sister who came down with typhoid fever, and her eyes had the same glare yours have got."

"I told you it was only a billous headache, and after you have laid a wet towel on my forehead I wish you would go down and leave me alone. It almost cracks my head open to talk."

"POOR GIRL! POOR GIRL!"

"I will do as you say, ma'am, and I hope it won't be a case of consumption. I had a cousin who was tooken down with consumption, and we who stood watching over his bedside saw his ears twitch. I don't think yours are twitching any, however, and you may recover from it. There you are with the wet towel, and here I go, and I will come up every half hour to see if you are dead or living. If I find you dead I will run for the coroner and the police and the fire department. I have studied to be a trained nurse, and I know just what to do."

Mrs. Bowser dozed at intervals all day, and she had a bad day of it. One of the things that she worried about, sleeping or waking, was the return of Mr. Bowser at dinner time. She knew just how he would act and just what he would say. He would declare that it was all her fault; that she had gone around barefooted and caught cold; that she had eaten a whole cocoanut and thus upset her stomach; that she had done a dozen things no sensible woman would do. Having brought the headache on herself she must get over it by herself. He could have no sympathy for such a careless woman. Then he would go downstairs to eat his dinner alone and grow more vexed every minute, and when he was through with the meal he would go down to the furnace and slam and bang the door and toss the poker across the cellar to make all the noise he could. Mr. Bowser wouldn't do these things to be mean, but just as a moral lesson to teach her to be more careful of her health.

Mr. Bowser came home.

Mrs. Bowser heard him open the door and shivered.

The cook heard him come in and saw that the way was clear across the back yard to the alley in case she had to make a skip for it.

Not seeing Mrs. Bowser in the hall or the sitting room Mr. Bowser descended to the kitchen and asked:

"Has Mrs. Bowser gone shopping?"

"No, sir," replied the cook. "Mrs. Bowser is lying on her dying bed upstairs and has been ever since you left the house this morning. If I knew how to work that telephone I should have had at least four doctors here hours ago."

Having said this, she prepared herself for the impending outburst, but none came. Mr. Bowser turned pale and walked softly up two pairs of stairs and still more softly opened the bedroom door. Mrs. Bowser lay with closed eyes, and he tiptoed to the bed and kissed her and smoothed down her hair and whispered:

"Poor girl! Poor girl! I am so sorry for you. I'll go down at once and telephone for the doctor and tell him to let nothing interfere with coming at once."

"I wouldn't do it, my dear," replied Mrs. Bowser as she opened her eyes. "I have had one of those beastly billous headaches all day, but I am getting the better of it now."

"Thank heavens!" exclaimed Mr Bowser as he raised his hands. "Maggie told me that you were as good as dead, and it took all my courage to come up here. Ah, yes, you are better, and probably by tomorrow you can be out of bed again. I am not a trained nurse, of course, but as any doctor will tell you, the first thing is for you to get some food in your stomach. Mrs. Bowser, how would you like some fried pork sausages?"

The invalid managed to restrain the smile which was coming to her face and the shudder which was going to shake the bed and feebly shook her head in reply.

"My grandmother always wanted fried pork sausages when she had a headache, but of course things have changed since her day. I wish Maggie had known enough to have a corned beef dinner. With a choice among the meat, cabbage, carrots, beets and grains you could probably have found something to tickle your palate."

"We will have such a dinner some day next week," replied Mrs. Bowser. "I do not want anything to eat tonight."

"But a doctor would insist," persisted Mr. Bowser. "I will run downstairs and counsel with Maggie."

Maggie was of the opinion when gravely consulted that a cocoanut pie would be much better than anything in the meat line, and Mr. Bowser was not more than a minute in getting under his hat and inside his overcoat and starting on a run for the bakery. He was back in less than ten minutes with a bland and good natured look and cocoanut pie, and with his own hands he cut it in halves and hastened upstairs. Mrs. Bowser thanked him very sweetly, but declined to eat. She said that in about three days she would eat three cocoanut pies all at once if he asked her to.

"But there must be something," he went on as he scratched his head in a puzzled way. "How about chicken soup? I can get the chicken at the butcher's in five minutes."

"Let it go this evening, dear."

"But mutton broth?"

"You are very kind, Mr. Bowser, but we won't talk of anything more in the food line. You may wet and wring out the towel, if you will, and then I will try to sleep again."

Mr. Bowser hastened to do as she wanted and then patted her cheek in a loving way and walked softly out of the room. He went down into the kitchen and told Maggie that he had pulled Mrs. Bowser through the crisis and was quite sure she would live. He warned her against rattling the dishes or the stove lids and then went up to the sitting room and took a seat and folded his arms and waited. He felt a glad relief and did not kick at the cat when she came around to rub against his leg. He thought of telephoning to the doctor. But what could the doctor do more than he had done if he should respond? He thought of the way he had conducted himself on previous occasions, and he felt ashamed of himself.

Mr. Bowser heard autos and wagons going past the house with a rattling and a banging, and he wanted to rush out and throw frozen potatoes at the heads of the drivers.

A cat wailed out in the back yard, and he softly raised a window and made use of such words as promptly sent her jumping over a seven foot fence.

There was a boy yelled out in front of the house, and he wished that that boy had no less than six boils on his legs.

There came a long interval of silence, and Mr. Bowser was dozing off to sleep when there came a sharp ring at the door. He started up with muttered imprecations on the head of whoever it might be and tiptoed down the hall and opened the door. There stood a man who whiningly asked:

"Boss, can you give a poor fellow 10 cents for a night's lodging?"

"I will give you ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred!" shouted Mr. Bowser as loud as he dared, and he surprised that poor unfortunate by throwing him off the steps headfirst into a snowdrift and then picking him out again and throwing him over the fence. Neither of them enjoyed the performance very much—the tramp because he was the victim and Mr. Bowser because he had to be quiet about it.

The tender hearted guardian and protector of Mrs. Bowser returned to the house and his watch, and nothing further occurred to create a disturbance. Even the cricket on the hearth buttoned up his lips, as they used to term it.

Bowser nodded. Bowser slept. In his dreams he saw Mrs. Bowser dancing around the room and declaring that she had never felt so good in ten years.

The bells struck midnight. Bowser awoke. Mrs. Bowser stood before him and was saying:

"My headache is all gone, Mr. Bowser, and I want to thank you for your kindness."

"Y-e-s," he replied, with blinking eyes. "You had one of your durned old headaches and made me no end of trouble. You brought it on yourself by some careless act, and if you ever do it again it will mean but one thing—divorce!"

Bowser had recovered from his tenderheartedness. He was Bowser again.

A Doll's House

By ELINOR MARSH

Train robberies, which had quieted down during the early part of 19—, broke out with renewed vigor in the autumn of that year. One of these attacks was not only well planned, so far as getting treasure was concerned, but in getting away with it.

Jim Charnley was the leader of the band that made the attack and chose the field of enterprise by personally investigating different points on the railroad he proposed to operate on. He discovered a cave concealed by thick undergrowth where a party of men might hide. So far as he could learn, no one knew of it. He proposed to rob a train as it passed within a few hundred yards of this cave. A part of the force would make off on horseback while another part with the plunder hid in the cave. A posse would follow those who had ridden away while the men in the cave waited till the excitement had died out and then make off.

The robbery was eminently successful. The train was stopped and the plunder taken from the express car. The robbers made off through a wood, dropping the treasure into the hands of four men who made their way to the cave unseen. Those who had ridden away were followed but not captured.

A surprise awaited those who had gone to the cave, among whom was Jim Charnley, the leader of the gang. He had not been to the cave since he had discovered it several weeks before. On entering it he saw a doll in a little bed and several articles of doll furniture beside it.

The presence of this inanimate combination of china and sawdust caused a commotion on the part of the robbers. Some of them, fearing that their presence there might be discovered, were for moving at once. But Charnley argued that the region of the robbery would be filled with persons moved by curiosity, if nothing more, and that any move for the present would be dangerous. If the child came to play in the cave she could be taken in and held from giving information of their presence.

Little Margy Bickford, who lived on the other side of the rise from the mouth of the cave, was the child who had made the place a playhouse. On the afternoon of the robbery she started to go there to get her doll and bring it home. Coming to the rise, she passed over the roof of the cave, where there was a break in the rock that formed it, not sufficient to let in light, but through which sound might pass. The robbers had closed up the mouth of the cave and supposed that they might talk with freedom. At the time Margy was passing over the break in the roof they were discussing whether they should get out or remain where they were. The question was a matter of life or death with them, and their arguments were by no means subdued. Margy, hearing voices in the bowels of the earth beneath her, turned and ran back home as fast as her little legs would carry her. Her mother, seeing that the child had been frightened, questioned her and was told that some men were in her playhouse and would take her dolly away with them.

Mrs. Bickford had heard of the train robbery, and it was not long before she began to suspect the truth concerning the voices her daughter had heard in the cave. She went at once to a neighbor and reported the case. Unfortunately most of the men thereabout had gone off after the robbers, who had ridden away, and not enough men could be got together to warrant attacking an unknown number of desperadoes ensconced in a cave, so nothing was done except to station a boy of sixteen to watch the hiding place.

Charnley decided to remain where the robbers were only till midnight, then to walk to the nearest station two miles distant and board a train that would stop there at a few minutes after 1 o'clock.

Billy Simpson, who was on watch, saw them leave the cave. He followed them to the station, near which they waited till they heard the train coming, and then went up on to the platform. Billy went to the rear car unseen by them and got aboard at the same time they did. There were four men in the gang, but they took separate seats. They paid the conductor their fare, and he passed on to the rear car, where Billy informed him as to the nature of the passengers who had just got on the train.

The conductor wrote a telegram, which he gave to Billy, instructing him to get off at the next station, five miles distant, and send it, believing that his own motions would be watched by the robbers. On reaching the station Billy stepped off on the dark side of the car unseen, and the train went on. The agent was in bed, but Billy routed him out, and the telegram was sent to a sizable town ten miles distant.

Meanwhile the conductor directed the engineer to slack speed that sufficient time might be given for preparation for a capture.

But few men could be got together in so short a time, and they were disguised, having boarded the train and went on with it. The robbers began to leave it one by one, thinking they were unsuspected. This rendered their capture easy, and they were all seized without a fight.

Little Margy, who had saved $40,000, was adopted by the express company. Billy was given a handsome reward and later a position on the railroad.

STILL ANOTHER.

This Hat Might Be a Modern Version of Moorish Taste.

SO ULTRA.

Headgear after this model resembles old Moorish styles somewhat. The jaunty high white feather is held by a knot of tan straw like the hat itself, which is of a pretty, fine weave. This design leaves no doubt in our minds about height being one of the season's features.

SHINING TRESSES.

A Doctor's Suggestions About Shampoos and Daily Care of Your Hair.

Although it may not be possible or indeed desirable for every woman to have tresses of Godiva-like abundance, it is within the power of almost everybody to have a fine head of hair or to possess what looks like one, whether her locks are long or short, thick or thin, dry or oily, dark, fair or just mid-brown. The whole secret lies in the state of the health and the daily care of the hair.

If the hair is in an impoverished condition, abnormally greasy or abnormally dry, showing a tendency to become brittle and break off short; if it loses its color and bulk, then it is no good in beginning any hair treatment without first attending to the general state of the health.

One should take sufficient exercise and rest and correct any indiscretions in diet. Where an anæmic condition exists a tonic often does wonders, so will a course of cod liver oil, while raw eggs and unboiled milk are articles of diet which directly beautify the hair.

As to the general care of the hair, it should be washed as often as it requires cleaning. Once a week is not too often for a very oily type of hair, and about once in three weeks is a good average for ordinary hair.

If it is washed at home liquid soap is the best thing to use. The hair should be thoroughly wetted with warm water, then a handful of the liquid rubbed in. If it does not lather at once use a little more water and a little more liquid till the whole head is in a perfect foam; rinse out the lather very thoroughly, take the worst of the moisture off with hot towels and dry by brushing and fanning. Do not on any account seek to dry it by the fire.

The daily care of the hair is most important. It should be well brushed every night, the scalp being first of all treated with a rather hard brush to stimulate the circulation and the long hair afterward brushed with long, sweeping strokes, two brushes with rather long, stiff bristles being used. This is to keep the hair clean and give it a natural gloss.

Some Tasty Sandwiches.

The Midnight.—One cream cheese, twelve olives stoned and chopped fine, moisten and spread between thin buttered slices of white or entire wheat bread.

The Boston.—Mash cold baked beans; add two tablespoonfuls horseradish to each cupful of beans, spread between thin slices of brown bread, buttered. Tomato catsup or prepared mustard may be used to season beans instead of horseradish if preferred, seasoning to suit the taste.

The Walnut.—Butter the bread, spread over each slice a layer of cheese, then a layer of chopped nuts. Sprinkle with salt and cover with another slice. Serve with olives.

The Onion.—Soak finely cut Bermuda onions in ice water for an hour, the water being previously sweetened and salted. Drain and mix with mayonnaise and place between slices of white bread.

Smurche.—Two packages of cheese, one hard boiled egg, a ten cent bottle stuffed olives, salt and cayenne to taste, one tablespoonful melted butter and a little chopped onion. Chop and mix all together and spread between slices of bread.

Homemade Tea Wagon.

A discarded gocart may be used for the purpose. Remove the seat part from the gocart, leaving the wheels and handle. Then saw the legs off from an old wicker table about five inches from the ground. Fasten the table to the gocart and paint all a dark green. Place on top of the table first a piece of cretonne, then a piece of glass over that. Hold both in place with four strips of molding nailed on firmly and painted the same dark green.

CHILDREN'S DRESSES.

Hints to Mothers Who Make Hand Embroidered Frocks at Home.

A mother can scarcely resist adding a few touches of hand embroidery on a frock she makes for her children, and yet she feels that it requires so much time to do the work that she must forego the pleasure and let her machine make all the stitches. But by picking out a few simple sprays and letting them ornament a yoke or a panel it would not take so long to embroider them on a dress. By using lace in combination with the hand touches it always looks as though there is more work on the frock than there really is. For instance, one dress which called forth much admiration has been made of finest nainsook. From the neck to the bottom in front there is a panel formed of two inch strips of lace and tucked material. Along either side of the panel there are embroidered sprays and leaves—only a few, yet there are sufficient to give the impression that a great amount of handwork has been added.

Another dress had a shallow yoke on which a few butterflies were embroidered. The baby waist was raised by the addition of beading through which pink ribbon was run.

Smocking is not to be forgotten when speaking of hand touches on children's frocks. For a child four years of age a very pretty dress might be made of natural colored pongee. Use the diamond shaped smocking to give fullness at the front and back of the dress and run some of it at the cuffs, so that the sleeves will be sufficiently full. Do the smocking in brown if you wish to gain a truly artistic effect.

A PRETTY FROCK.

A Winter Model For Young Ladies' Dinner Wear.

Over a base of black pussy willow satin is gracefully draped black silk net set off with iridescent sequins, as is the negligible bodice. A silvery rose accentuates the shoulder strap, while a flyaway strip of tulle in firefly green shades floats from the other shoulder, a fascinating implement to flirt with.

1916 [illegible]

Cream of Peanut Soup.

Materials: One quart of roasted peanuts, one pint each of milk and water, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one quart of thin cream, one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of flour, pepper and salt.

Utensils: Saucepan, spoon, cup, knife, chopping tray and puree sieve.

Directions: Remove the skins from the peanuts and chop fine; add the milk and water and simmer until the nuts can be rubbed through the sieve. Put through the sieve and return the mixture to the fire; add the cream, butter and flour, rubbed together; season with salt and pepper and simmer one-half hour.

Proportions to Remember.

Four eggs to one quart of milk for custards.

One teaspoonful of vanilla to one quart of milk for custard.

Two ounces of gelatin to one and three-quarter quarts of liquid.

Four heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch to one quart of milk.

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk.

The oven for baking bread should be hot enough to brown a teaspoonful of flour in five minutes.

For biscuits it should brown in one minute.

D'Orleans Sauce.

Tarragon vinegar, two tablespoonfuls; thick gravy, one tablespoonful; butter, one and one-half ounces; chopped parsley, one teaspoonful; pepper, a dust; sugar, a pinch.

Put the vinegar in a pan. When it boils add the gravy and warm up together; then work the butter in by degrees and add the sugar, pepper and parsley, which should be chopped to a fine powder. Serve very hot.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Gay with the colors of spring tin this frock in cream white silk crepe de chine and embroidery sets the pace for the correct thing in afternoon dress. ## THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE CAKE BOX.

M[illegible] ... a cupful of [illegible] to a cream, gradually beat in one and three-quarters of a cupful of fine granulated sugar; sift together three and one-third cupfuls of pastry flour and two tablespoonfuls of baking powder. Add to the first mixture alternately with half a cupful each of milk and water. Add the whites of five eggs, beaten dry, and a teaspoonful of vanilla or the grated rind of half a lemon. Bake in two layers or a large round poundcake dish. Bake in a slow oven.

Yum Yum Cake.—One package of raisins, two tablespoonfuls of lard, one cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful each of cassia and nutmeg, two and one-half cupfuls of hot water. Boil five minutes and then cool. Add three level cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, one-half teaspoonful of cream of tartar and one teaspoonful of salt. Bake in a moderate oven. This is good for a pudding by omitting lard and steaming two hours.

Pound Cake.—One-quarter pound of butter, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, one scant teaspoonful of baking powder, pinch of salt together, five eggs, leave out one white for frosting, one and one-half cupfuls of powdered sugar, eggs and sugar together, flour worked into butter. Flavor with vanilla.

Chocolate Jelly Cake.—One-half cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, three cupfuls of flour, one cupful of milk, four eggs. Cream butter, sugar, eggs and milk, then sift in flour and two tablespoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in jelly cake tins.

Pork Cake.—One pound of pork (salt and fat), chopped fine; three cupfuls of boiling water, three cupfuls of molasses, two cupfuls of sugar, three teaspoonfuls of soda, two pounds of raisins, two teaspoonfuls each of cloves, nutmeg and cinnamon. Make quite stiff with flour. Makes three large loaves of fine grained cake.

Cream Cake.—Break two eggs in a cup, fill with cream; one cupful of sugar; beat until the sugar is dissolved; one and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour, sifted, with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a little salt and flavoring to suit the taste. Bake twenty minutes in a hot oven.

BEAUTIFYING THE CITY.

A report of the city plan commission of Newark, N. J., says: "In regard to improving the appearance of the city streets and public places the practical plan appeals to the reason, the beautiful plan to the heart. The former makes a man passively contented and comfortable; the latter makes him actively proud of his city. It arouses an ardent patriotism that must express itself in deeds. The charming city is loved by the man who lives there. Practicalness without beauty leaves him cold. The complete city must be beautiful. Our better natures demand beauty. Unconsciously we want pleasing things for the eye to rest upon all about us."

The Important Thing.

They were speaking about looking on the practical side of things, and this incident was recalled:

One afternoon late in the fall Uncle Josh was driving slowly toward the town when an acquaintance excitedly rushed out to the road and hailed him.

"Say, Josh," he exclaimed in a palpitating voice, "have ye heard the news?"

"No; don't kalkerlate I have," responded Uncle Josh, sociably stopping his team. "What kind o' news is it?"

"Jim Smith committed suicide," answered the other. "Hung himself from a beam in the barn."

"Is that so?" thoughtfully rejoined Uncle Josh. "Wonder if he got all of his corn husked?"—Exchange.

The Turnip.

The turnip is supposed to be a native of Asia and Europe. It has been cultivated for centuries. The wild East Indian turnip is said to be remotely kin to the edible turnip. It is the size of a walnut and first tasted is sweetish, but in a moment the taster's tongue feels as though it were pricked by a hundred hot needles, and he feels like expectorating for hours after. It is the country boy's favorite medium for a joke on the visiting town boy.—London Tatler.

The Right Blouse For the Spring Suit.

A smart new waist of biege crepe Georgette trimmed with filet lace. The front and back are gathered along the shoulders.

It sometimes happens that the chic of a tailored costume is entirely spoiled by an unsuitable waist, therefore it is not the easiest matter in the world to find the proper blouse to top off the dressy suit. Here is a model that possesses unusual cachet. It is carried out in crepe Georgette trimmed with filet insertion and small satin buttons. The design, in medium size, requires 2 yards 36-inch material, with 2⅝ yards of lace for the trimming.

The waist may be made with or without the sleeve cap. To cut the design the crepe must first be folded carefully in half. Directly on the fold is laid the front, with the collar and flare cuff sections following, although these are on a lengthwise thread. If a high straight collar is preferred to the funnel effect, the section marked "D" should be laid on the lengthwise fold of the material. The sleeve cap and sleeve are placed last, to the extreme right end of the crepe. Going back to the beginning, as shown in the cutting guide, the strap is laid along the selvage edge, with the back and sleeveband, placed on a lengthwise thread, coming next.

If the sleeve cap is not desired, cut off the lower part of the shoulder strap on small "o" perforations.

In beige, with butter colored lace, the blouse is exceedingly smart looking and will transform into dressy effect the plainest of tailored costumes, although it is simple in design.

Huge Guns Keep Up Incessant Roar Along Entire West Front

The whole Western fighting front is the scene of heavy engagements. At some points the big guns have been roaring incessantly for days; the infantry have been engaged in hand-to-hand struggles; Grenade fighting and mining operations have played a prominent part in the battles, while airmen have fought each other above the lines and have been cannonaded from below by the anti-aircraft guns.

The Germans followed up their recent success in Champagne by the capture of an additional half mile of French trenches around Talhure, in that district and their artillery bombardments in the neighborhood of Massiges and Narvarin have been answered in kind by the French.

North of Soissons, around Terny and olang the river Aisne, the Germans started an infantry attack, but the French put it down with their guns and rifles. South of the Somme the Germans endeavored to surround outpost trenches, but desisted under heavy fire of the French.

In upper Alsace the Germans turned loose their guns on trenches the French had recaptured from them, but the French during the night had evacuated them and the shelling did no other damage than to shatter the emplacements.

Seventeen fights in the air is the record of Sunday reported officially by the British along their lines in Flanders. In addition there has been great activity south of La Bassee canal, where the Germans exploded seven mines. Heavy bombardments and an infantry attack in that section is also reported, the Germans succeeding in entering a British trench. They were driven out almose immediately.

In Albania the Arzerum river, which runs westward across central Albania and empties into the bay of Durazzo, has been reached by the Austro-Hungarian vaneguards, according to Vienna. The Bulgarians have occupied Elbassan, an important town in Central Albania.

There have been no important events on the Eastern front, but the Russians in the Causasus have occupied one of the Erzerum forts, and have taken a large number of Turkish prisoners. Several Turkish batteries on the Trebizond coast of the Black sea have been silenced by the Russian warships.

King Ferdinand, of Bulgaria, Vienna reports, has arrived there to visit Emperor Francis Joseph. This would seem to set at naught recent unofficial reports that Bulgaria had asked the Entente Allies for a separate peace.

An official proclamation calling up the remaining single men under the Derby plan and the military service act was posted today.

The call to the colors will have the effect of enrolling all single men of military age who have not been exempted.

OBJECTIONS FILED TO TERMS OF CASE WILL

Oswego—Objections to the claim of Dr. C. R. Lee, of Fulton, executor of the estate of Eva Case Lee, that he is entitled to about $50,000 worth of stock of companies subsidary to the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, which came into a trust fund created by George M. Case, were filed in Surrogate's Court yesterday by all the beneficiaries of this trust, amounting to some $100,000 without the stock of the subsidiary companies. Under the trust terminated by the death of Eva Case Lee, she was to get the income and Dr. Lee contends that the stock of these subsidiary companies, given to holders of stock of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, was a dividend. The heirs insist this should go with the principal.

Appearing for the heirs are Kellogg & Rose and Samuel C. Herriman, of New York, Henry D. Coville, of Hastings, and Hitchcock & Murphy, of Syracuse. Piper & Pendergast, of Fulton, represent Dr. Lee. According to the papers filed today the trust fund is divisible as follows: George W. Moody, 1-12; Anna Elizabeth Kellogg, 1-12; Cora L. Lewis, 1-12; Nellis H. Foster, 1-18; Carrie Hull Harbison, 1-18; executors of Herbert Hull, 1-18; Antoinette Sanders, 1-12; Victorine Lee, as executor of Albert L. Lee, 1-12; William Case or Harry Case or both jointly, 1-6; J. H. Case or F. Emma Case, 1-12; Howard E. Case, 1-12, and Albertine Case Lee, 1-12. The matter went over, until March 20th, when the case will probably be argued.

REFUSES LARGE LEGACY; LIVES IN A HOVEL

New York—Miss Edith Kitching, who lives in one room at No. 24 Bank street, in Old Greenwich Village, told today why she has refused to accept $40,000 at least and perhaps a great deal more of the estate left by her uncle, Francis F. Ripley, who was an eccentric money lender of Brooklyn.

Miss Kitching earns $300 a year and that is all she has.

WHOLESALE MURDER PLOT DISCOVERED

Chicago—Search was started today for the principals in what is believed by the police to have been a plot to destroy buildings and kill members of the clergy, bankers and others in a dozen cities in various sections of the United States. Discovery of the alleged plot, according to the police, resulted from examination of the personal effects of John Allegrini, confidant of Jean Crones, who is charged by the authorities with putting poison in soup at the banouet given Archbishoy George W. Mundelein at the University club Thursday night and causing the illness of 100 of the guest.

PRESIDENT THROWS ALL HATS IN THE RING

Washington — President Wilson has consented formally for the first time to the use of his name as a Presidential candidate in the coming campaign. At thes ame time he declared he was entirely unwilling to enter into any contest for renomination.

This definition of the President's attitude, in line with the plans of his political associates, is expected to bring into the open the campaign being made in his favor throughout the country.

Mr. Wilson's declaration was made in a letter to the Ohio Secretary of State, who had written that candidates for delegates from that state to the national conventions must signify their choices for President by February 25th and that no Presidential candidates could be named in that connection without their consent.

BILL TO ESTABLISH LAND BANKS IS REPORTED

Washington— The administration bill to establish a system of land banks drafted by a join congressional committee was favorably reported by the Senate, but with radical alterations by the banking and currency committee.

The joint proposal for a board of five commissioners to control the system was discarded by the committee in favor of control by a Treasury department bureau to be known as the Federal Farm Loan bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal farm loan board, of the latter consisting of the secretary of the treasury and four presidential appointees.

GOVERNOR LOOKS FOR ENDORSEMENT

New York—The important question in the minds of the delegates to the Republican State convention who assembled here today for the opening session tonight was whether Gov. Charles S. Whitman would head the delegation from New York State to the Republican national convention. That Governor Whitman would be designated as one of the four delegates-at-large was conceded by the party leaders at conferences which preceded the convention.

650,000 ACRES FOR CAMPERS AVAILABLE IN NEW ENGLAND

Government Will Lease Five Acre Tracts at $5 Per Year.

There has been widespread interest in New England states in the decision of the United States forestry bureau to open to summer campers and vacationists 650,000 acres of public lands in the White mountains of New Hampshire, and many have taken it for granted that the terms offered by the government, $5 per annum for tracts of five acres for each person, the leases to run for thirty years, will be taken advantage of by thousands of persons next summer.

But there are some aspects of the offer that are likely to make it less attractive on closer investigation. The rate specified is less nominal than would appear at first sight, for whereas $5 a year for five acres is cheap enough and a thirty year lease would cost only $150, it must be considered that there are in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts thousands of acres of land suitable for camping sites that may be purchased outright for $5 per acre, so that for a total outlay of $150 one may obtain not five, but thirty acres of very desirable land.

The waste lands in Massachusetts that may be obtained for next to nothing run into the thousands of acres, and inquiry at the state forestry commission shows that any quantity of such land can be purchased on lakes where the fishing and boating are excellent and in beautiful scenic surroundings. The state is buying up much of this land at an average price under $5 an acre and some of it on Cape Cod as low as 25 cents an acre, and what the state can do individuals may do if they possess the initiative.

Moreover, there is a law in Massachusetts which offers an even more attractive proposition than that presented by the thirty year leases in the White mountains. Waste land purchased by individuals under this law will be planted in white pine or other valuable trees and cared for by the state by scientific forestry methods at a trifling expense to the owner, the only requirements being a form of transfer back to the state for its protection in the event of default.

Some long headed persons are taking advantage of this law, and sportsmen's clubs are beginning to acquire considerable areas in this way, but the great mass of the people are not availing themselves of it, and most of them probably do not know that such a law is on the statute books. This act offers not only an opportunity to acquire a pleasant summer camp, but a permanent investment in growing timber.

PARIS OVERTURES TO U. S. IMPORTERS

To Form a Franco-American Alliance of Fashions.

SOME NOVELTIES FOR 1916

Barrel Skirts and Algerian Pelerines Are the Most Striking Features French Will No Longer Dictate the Modes to the American Woman if the Present Plans Go Through.

A circular letter has just been sent out in Paris to American buyers for the big stores and to leading New York importers by the Chambre Syndicale de la Couture Parisienne, signed by M Aine, the president, and by M. Doeuillet, the former president, inviting them to attend a meeting at the American Chamber of Commerce to form a "Franco-American alliance" to settle the difficulties affecting the dressmaking trade. The letter says that "owing to the importance given to the question of Paris models and to the measures taken by certain dressmaking concerns and by the American press" the chamber considers it advisable to study with the chief representatives of the New York houses what methods shall be followed for the common good.

As the Chambre Syndicale Parisienne includes all members of the Couture Defense Syndicate except Poiret and Worth, it is expected that a satisfactory agreement will be reached and the Couture Defense Syndicate eliminated.

At the recent fashion show in Paris the tonneau, or, barrel, skirt was a notable feature. It is quite distinct from the pannier, running in a convex line from the waist to the bottom of the skirt instead of puffing at the hips, as the pannier does. Tailor mades and evening gowns for young women attracted special attention. A striking novelty was serge satin faille walking coats embroidered in metal on the hips or in wide bands around the bottom. The predominating colors were mauve and various shades of violet.

The features of the Beers collection were cire gowns and coats and striking debutante frocks.

Premet and Bernard had larger collections than last year, the latter, as usual, showing elegant tailor made suits. Their tonneau skirts for gowns were less successful owing to the use of small hoops at the sides of the hips to produce the barrel effect, which gave a bunchy appearance instead of a harmonious line. The colors were chiefly somber.

Margaine-Lacroix, little heard of since the introduction of the Directoire skirt, came back with a very successful collection, whose feature was the red or blue Algerian coat copied from the voluminous cloak of the Spahi officers. Utilizable either as a cloak or pelerine, it is certain to be widely copied and worn everywhere. Long pelerines, almost reaching the ground, to cover the entire dress, shown by almost all the houses, form one of the season's most popular notes as the only style of over wear falling gracefully over the new skirts.

Some Styles For Men.

Buttons will be distributed on men's coats this season according to the height of the wearer, it was announced at the opening of the annual convention of the International Custom Cutters' association in Kansas City, Mo. The short man will have a one button sack coat; the medium sized man will have two buttons on his coat; the tall man will get three buttons, or four if he is tall enough. This decree was embodied in the report of the styles committee of the association.

The committee reported that the form fitting coat would still rule as correct, but that it would be longer and bear a narrower lapel and narrower collar than last season. Spring coats will be skeleton lined, unpadded and will run to crescent shaped patch pockets.

Full dress coats will be longer in front, the collar and lapels narrower, and there will be an outer breast pocket. The white silk vest should be "U" shaped, and there should be narrow braid on the trousers.

The coat to the dinner suit will have the outer breast pocket bound in a narrow strip of satin, and the lapels also will be faced with satin. The vest to the dinner suit will be of black silk, close fitting and "V" shaped.

PENSION FOR CARNEGIE.

If Bill Passes Congress His Civil War Services Will Be Recognized.

A civil war pension for Andrew Carnegie would be possible under the terms of the bill introduced by Senator Kern. The measure is designed to place on the pension rolls "any person who served ninety days or more as a military telegraph operator and who has received or is entitled to receive a certificate of honorable service in the military telegraph corps of the army of the United States."

Inasmuch as Andrew Carnegie served as a military telegraph operator in the civil war, the opinion has been expressed at the capitol that if the bill is enacted the former steel magnate would be entitled to the pension.

MRS. WILSON FIRM IN SHAKING HANDS

Vigorous Manner Expected to Replace Formal Method.

SOCIETY WILL FOLLOW HER

At First White House Reception the First Lady Stood Up and Shook 4,226 Hands In a Little Over Three Hours, or One Every Three Seconds. Was Not Fatigued.

Mrs. Wilson shook hands.

That was the one outstanding feature of the first official White House reception recently. It was not the limp and listless style of handshake which is at present considered good form. It was the old fashioned hearty handshake of our grandfathers' days.

All Washington fashionable society was interested at the news. Has Mrs. Wilson set a new fashion?

It has not been customary for the president's wife to shake hands on the occasion of public receptions. She merely smiles and bows.

In fact, the whole subject of shaking hands is in a more or less indefinite condition in fashionable society. There are many women of good social position who do not shake hands if it can be avoided. They maintain that a bow and a smile are sufficient greeting. If a woman makes no move toward extending her hand it is not good form to force her into action by extending a hand toward her.

A Big Undertaking.

But if a situation arises where a woman finds a hand extended she accepts the advance and perhaps feebly extends three fingers, just enough to save the situation from embarrassment.

Of course President Wilson's bride knows all this and had thought about it. When she took her place at the head of the line of the cabinet ladies the other evening she had decided exactly what she was going to do. Whatever women in fashionable society were doing or whatever had been the habit of other mistresses of the White House, Mrs. Wilson decided to shake every hand that wanted to be shaken. And she did so.

The job Mrs. Wilson undertook was no small one. She was obliged on the occasion mentioned to shake hands with no fewer than 4,226 persons. She began shaking hands at exactly 9:30 p. m., when the first guest was introduced to her. At precisely 12:45 a. m., three-quarters of an hour after midnight, she stopped.

No Fashionable Affectations.

The task occupied Mrs. Wilson continuously for three and one-quarter hours, or 195 minutes. In that length of time there are 11,700 seconds. Thus it seems that the average time consumed per handshake was about two and four-fifths seconds.

Mrs. Wilson is a strong woman physically, else she could hardly have withstood such an ordeal. As a matter of fact, she was so little fatigued that next morning she was up and out by 10 o'clock paying an informal visit to an old friend.

Mrs. Wilson is not and never has been a woman of fashion. Accordingly she has no fashionable frills and affectations. When she shakes hands she does not hold her own at shoulder level and waggle the other person's paw horizontally. Nor does she languidly extend two or three fingers.

On the contrary, she shakes hands in the old fashioned sort of way—not merely offering her own limply to be grasped, but with a warm and hearty clasp. It is a cordial, old fashioned handshake that she gives, meeting the party of the second part halfway, as it were.

Hand Traveled Over a Mile.

Mrs. Wilson's handshake is given at the level of her waist—a simple two up and down movement. It occupies not more than one second of time—the remaining one and four-fifths seconds (according to the time schedule of the other night's reception) being consumed by the guest in advancing and bowing.

Mrs. Wilson's right hand rose about five inches and descended five inches; it rose again five inches and fell five inches. Then the grasping fingers relaxed, and the hand withdrew to her side. The handshake was over.

Mrs. Wilson's hand traveled a distance of twenty inches, up and down, at each handshake. She shook 4,226 hands. Her hand therefore traveled 84,520 inches, or nearly a mile and a quarter, during the evening.

It might seem that Mrs. Wilson's manner of shaking hands was of no imaginable importance. But such a view of the case would be a mistake. For the president's wife is always the leader of fashion at the national capital, and whatever she does, whether she wishes it or not, is widely copied and imitated.

That Mrs. Wilson will continue to shake hands at White House receptions is by no means to be taken for granted. Indeed, the chances are that she will fall back upon the traditional custom and be content with a bow and smile. In the recent instance there was a reason for making an exception.

The reason lay in the fact that the reception was to all intents and purposes a wedding reception. The president's marriage had been so private an affair that even his most intimate personal friend, Colonel House, was not invited.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Back in the early days, adventurers westward-bound found a certain vehicle for the expression of their wit by inscribing upon the sides of their prairie schooners the legend, "Pikes Peak or Bust".

Today, those of us residing in Fulton might well and appropriately inscribe on the tablets of mind and heart, "In Fulton to Boost". And there ought not to be any half-hearted method about it either. To be in Fulton ought to mean to boost for Fulton. It is worth it. Perhaps we ought to look into the definition of words before we strive to exemplify them. What is meant by "Boost?" Literally it means "lift up." To give a "boost" means to elevate about the dead level to a higher sphere. Dead men never boost. Neither can you boost them. You may raise them up, but you'd better bury them. Let go of them and they fall by their own dead weight. You can tell a man is dead by his willingness to lie supine.

A booster is a fellow who tries to elevate the conditions of his business or his own or his fellows by raising them from the dead horizontal to a living perpendicular. A consistent booster is the fellow who keeps at it all of the time.

There is herein conveyed the idea that there may be inconsistent boosters. Suppose we classify them all.

First. There is the "hip-hurrah-boys" booster. All excitement, brass bands, waving flags, head line in red ink. He serves his purpose. Then we find the booster "with a chip." That is, the fellow who is willing to boost providing you boost his way. He takes offense easily and invites argument. He serves no purpose. In our way of life we have also found the "talky" and the "balky" booster. He is filled with advice for someone else to follow. Full of suggestions, but balks when the time comes to carry them out. Then in our classification we find "the worker," "the shirker" and the "jerker." The worker keeps at it; the shirker avoids it, the jerker works spasmodically. If there is some project or special thing that interests him he will work like a trojan. But for the long pull, and the strong pull, and the pull all together he proves a weak member.

Perchance you have met the booster who lives in the past. He will tell you that he has done more boosting for the town than anybody; paid out more money for the town than lots of people who are now doing something; was the originator of this idea and the executor of that project. He holds to the idea that he has done enough; that his day of usefulness has been well spent and that now he needs a rest. Let "George do it." This man is ready to be buried. No man has ever finished his work on earth as long as there is something left undone or unfinished.

Then there are three others who have crossed our path; the kind that SAY; the kind that STAY and the kind that PAY, and the two latter may be listed among the consistents.

Let's look into this—what is consistency—close adhesion! There you have it. Nothing can be brought to a consistency that will not assimilate, adhere, stick close together and CONTINUE SO.

The consistent booster talks but he works; he says, but he does; he forgets himself in the common interests of all. He has no axe to grind. He enters into the "Hip-Hurrah-boys" features of boosting with keen zest; he consigns his "chips" to the fire to be burned. He is too busy to shirk; too much in earnest to jerk; has too little time to argue and when he ventures advice he is willing to put his scheme to the test to become bettered by his own wisdom. Herein is consistency. He sticks. He adheres; he says and he stays and he PAYS! and he does it all the time. And this sort of thing wins. The consistent fellow is the man who makes the town. His motto is: MY CITY, FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS. He lives in the town because he likes it. He works for the town because he believes in it.

BRITISH SEIZE U. S. SECURITIES

New York—The British Government has seized millions of dollars of American securities dispatched from Holland to the United States.

American financiers are incensed. Protests and appeals are being sent to the State Department. Immediate and effective action is demanded.

The extent of the seizures cannot be computed, as the British censor does not tell what securities he has taken.

Miss Allen Sings Here Next Week; New Date Is Deemed Advisable

There is a saying, which, if applied to art sounds crude; but if used in an advertising sense will fill the bill. It is "Change of pasture makes fat calves." The saying is not included in terms musical and would not be introduced here but for the fact that good may come to a worthy cause—the Women's Auxiliary of the Lee Memorial hospital, for whose benefit Miss Julia Allen is to sing here next week.

Miss Allen was announced a few days ago to appear under the auspices of the Schumann Club on February 29th, but since then it has been learned by Manager Darleigh of the Quirk theatre that Victor Herbert's opera, "Princess Pat" was booked for that same date. Naturally a change of date was made necessary and desirable, for the reason that the Schumann Club committee on arrangements recognized the futility of trying to secure a record-breaking audience for Miss Allen upon a date quite close to the "Princess Pat" engagement.

It is hoped, therefore, that the change of pasture land may result in fattening the treasury of a society whose motives are so worthy of support.

There are so many published endorsements of Miss Allen's ability as a singer, that to add thereto would appear as almost a repetition. However, it is not amiss to quote from the Buffalo Express the following:

"Signor Caruso's managers have surrounded him with an excellent company of supporting artists. Miss Allen, the soprano, sang her two numbers so well that she greatly pleased her audience. She has a brilliant voice which has been well schooled. She sang the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" in the original key without cuts, a veritable "tour de force." She gave as an encore after this number "For Propriety's Sake," by Guy d'Hardelot."

SENATE VOTES IN FAVOR OF U. S. OWNERSHIP OF 3 PUBLIC UTILITIES

Washington—Senator Borah has forced the attention of the Senate to the growing demand for public ownership and operation of railroads.

Incidentally he embarressed the possessors of certain Presidential booms, forcing one, Senator Weeks, to cast a vote that will arise to plague him and leading others to flee to the cloakrooms between being counted for a quorum and being called to vote.

A resolution now pending providing for an investigation into the need for the Government regulation of the issues of railroad securities was made the subject of the following amendment by Senator Borah, providing that the investigation include:

"Also the subject of Government ownership of all public utilities, such as telegraph, telephone, express companies and railroads engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and report as to the wisdom or feasibility of Government ownership of such utilities, and as to the comparative worth and efficiency of Government regulation and control as compared with Government ownership and operation."

In the brief speech in which he urged his amendment, Senator Borah left no doubt as to his own position on Government ownership. He called attention to the menace to the country in the strike now threatened by the railroad employes, pointing out that one of the primary functions of true preparedness was for the nation to operate the roads by which its armies and materials of war must be moved.

Though stoutly opposed by Senator Newlands, the resolutions were adopted by a vote of 39 to 22.

The vote showed each party split along progressive lines.

Hunter Ore Land Sold At Fair Price, Says Attorney C. E. Guile

Attorney Claude E. Guile returned from Joplin, Mo., this morning. He attended the sale there of the mining property belonging to Mr. John Hunter. Mr. Guile states that the property was sold to Temple Chapman, a mine operator for $4,000, subject to the approval of the court. A motion to approve the sale will be made by Mr. Guile before Referee Wright at Oswego tomorrow.

"The fact that the plot of 20 acres was bought originally by Mr. Hunter for $15,000 and brought only $4,000 at the sale has led to the deduction that a good sale was not made," says Mr. Guile in speaking of a newspaper item; "but I am sure that the price of $4,000 is a just one, all things considered. In the first place, the mine was bought fifteen years ago at a time when it, as well as adjoining property had not been developed. In recent years, the Chapmans who own adjacent lands have worked their mines to such an extent as to give a pretty definite idea of the direction of the vein.

"It is safe to say that the vein cuts off only a small corner of the Hunter mine, probably about one acre of it. The purchasers own mines on both sides of the Hunter Land. The locality is known as the "10 o'clock range," due to the fact that the vein slopes in the same direction as the sun's rays at 10 a. m. in the month of June.

"Mr. Chapman and a young man were the only bidders at the sale. The bidding opened at $3,000 and ran up quickly to $4,000 and the young man dropped out. The statement made that the mine is worth $20,000 is not founded on any reliable basis. I think a good bargain was struck."

GERMANY AGREES TO CHANGED WORDING IN ITS LUSITANIA REPLY

Berlin (via London).—Germany's reply to the American Government's latest representations regarding the sinking of the steamer Lusitania was forwarded to Washington yesterday.

The reply accepts one of the two changes suggested by Secretary Lansing, but proposes a new wording for the other.

Washington—Germany is understood to have agreed to the suggestion of the United States that she substitute the words, "recognizes liability" for the words "assumes liability" in the tentative draft of the communication designed to settle the Lusitania case.

The revised draft was received here late tonight from Berlin. It will be submitted to Secretary Lansing tomorrow by Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador.

Several other minor changes desiredby the United States are said to have been made. In one instance, however, Germany is understood to have proposed a change in the language suggested by the American Government.

From high Teutonic authority tonight came the statement that it was expected the Lusitania case would be finally and satisfactorily settled at the conference tomorrow between Secretary Lansing and Count Von Bernstorff. The Ambassador is understood to be prepared to make the tentative communication a formal note.

"BIG FOUR" UNABLE TO KEEP GOVERNOR FROM TAKING LEAD

New York—A Barnes-Whitman death grapple characterized the whole of last night's session of the unofficial Republican State Convention in Carnegie Hall.

After adjournment State Chairman Frederick C. Tanner predicted the election of Dr. David Jayne Hill as a member of the Big Four. This would indicate a triumph for the Whitman forces.

But Chairman Tanner added that there seemed no prospect of an indorsement of the Whitman administration, indicating that the Whitamn triumph was but a compromise.

If Barnes maintains his hold this morning, this will be the unpledged and uninstructed quartette for Chicago: Chairman James W. Wadsworth, Jr., Livingston; Frederick C. Tanner, New York;

DIRECT PRIMARIES WILL STAY

Ex-President Taft is reported as saying in a recent speech that "The general primary is a fraud. You will get better men from the convention because the boss will want to put some good people into office in order to win some of the time. I hope the primary will disappear into the eternal." It is very probable that Mr. Taft has been misquoted and never said any such thing. If he is rightly quoted, it simply shows that he knows nothing about the operations of the direct primary. It is doubtful if he ever attended one or exercised his privileges in one or knows anything about their conduct or results. They have now been held in this state for two or three years and we certainly have as good a state administration as the state ever enjoyed and just as good or better local officials have been produced. The direct primary gives every voter an opportunity to name the candidate of his choice; he has had something to say about it. The old convention system did not give him anything to say about it. He had to swallow what was handed out to him. Whether he makes as good candidates as the convention system did or not, they are at least his candidates and not machine made. The direct primary system has given satisfaction to the people, although it has not given very good satisfaction to the politicians. The system has come to stay, for it establishes the rule of the people who have a right to rule in this republic and they will not give it up. —Watertown Times.

RULES FOR ANY WORKER

Harry C.Taylor, who is in charge of the Rochester branch of the State Public Employment Bureau, spoke the other day regarding the problems of employment. During the course of his talk, Mr. Taylor stated that he had helped thousands, of men into jobs within the last few years and that he believed he was in a position to give a little advice which was worth following.

Thereupon the speaker gave ten terse rules, which were the following.

1. Don't get drunk.
2. Don omst'deukri flf .O
2. Don't smoke during working hours.
3. Don't swear.
4. Don't talk back to the boss.
5. Don't watch the clock.
6. Don't loaf "on the job."
7. Don't quarrel with your fellow workmen.
8. Don't be above asking advice, if you are in doubt as to what to do.
9. Don't get the "I-know-it-all" swagger.
10. Don't talk too much.

Mr. Taylor's rules are as applicable to the man who sits in a swivel chair with his feet on a Turkish rug as they are to the man who stands in a ditch and wields a pick and shovel. —Batavia News.

PUT THE BLAME ON THE SYSTEM

A commission-manager form of government is one that can only be carried on successfully by an exceptionally well qualified citizenship, preferably a set of men who have had a large measure of the right kind of experience before entering upon their duties under the new system. Consequently there are only a very few really first-class commission-manager governed cities in this country—two of them being Dayton, Ohio, and Jackson, Michigan. This is not meant to convey an impression that men in other cities cannot be found capable of administering an efficient form of government—but these two are the only ones which have in a conspicuous way justified the form of government where the people are supposed to have their affairs administered without fear or favor; without robbing Peter to pay Paul; without showing favoritism to a man or set of men who prefer, at the expense of the majority, to escape the tax levied for a public commodity. Of course the millenium has not yet been reached, and even the two mentioned may fall down in some very important particulars.

We have been hearing a lot of the efficiency and fairness of the present system of government within less than a year from thinking persons who fail to see the disadvantages and inequalities arising under a ward-elected board of aldermen. That a set of commissioners working in conjunction with a manager would be no better fitted for the exercise of a truly representative form of government responsible directly to the people of the whole city with no greater ability than so often obtains in the best regulated municipal households appears clear. There was a time, a few dozen years ago, when the opponents of commission-manager form of government undoubtedly would have been considered dreamers or candidates for the funny foundry. But that is a long time ago and during the educational period intervening cities have become static communities—to be driven out of themselves by vigorous men, because the old form of government permitted just such equalities as have been made public in the affairs of the water department. If a city is to become greater than its competitors—a city of 25,000 in 1920 it will be because it has won its way by dispensing fairness and constructive, patriotic work. If commission-manager form of government is a good thing, and evidently it is, it is good enough for Fulton.

MUST NOT OUTLAW OUR BEST DEFENSE

The justice of the announcement that armed merchant vessels must expect to be considered naval vessels will hardly be questioned by the neutral powers.

An ARMED vessel is a WAR vessel, ready to make war upon any submarine she encounters, and cannot expect to be treated as an unarmed vessel by a submarine.

If we were at war with Germany today our submarines would be ordered to sink any German ship carrying cannon, whether the ship was called a merchantman or a naval auxiliary, and any suggestion that our commanders should expose their submarines to sure destruction by rising to the surface and hailing such armed vessels and sending warning shots across their bows before actually firing upon them would be received with derision by the American people.

We must not permit the unneutral press and political haranguers to blind our eyes to the common sense of the situation because they so bitterly hate Germany.

We are not at war with Germany. It is our business to recognize the sea rights of Germany because we are neutral AND BECAUSE THE TIME MAY COME ANY DAY WHEN WE SHALL HAVE TO DEPEND FOR OUR OWN SAFETY UPON USING SUBMARINES in defense of our country exactly as Germany proposes to use them in her defense against Great Britain's war of blockade and starvation.

Any attack, from either Europe or Asia, delivered against us MUST be a naval attack, and we would be sorry fools to put out of our hands the strongest weapon of coast defense and offense which we could command.

If the allies do not want their merchantmen torpedoed without warning let them cease to arm their merchantmen with naval guns and naval guncrews.

That is the just and simple solution of the matter.— N. Y. American.

No. 4.—AMERICAN IDEALS AND WEAKNESSES

Opinions may differ materially as to what is the leading motive in the life of the average American and what the leading ideal. We have been charged with being a nation of materialists, bent on getting money, getting money all the time and all we can of it—not to save particularly, but to spend. Our aim is not to save more, but to earn more. If we cannot have what we want, we do not do without, but work harder for it. We believe in gauging our pleasures by the cost and not the satisfaction we get out of them. When we make up our minds that we have been foolish and frittered away our possessions, we try to recoup, not by spending less, but by earning more.

It must be admitted that we can, as a people, make money. We can save only a small part in comparison with other nations, but we do have the knack of getting it. The salaries paid our officials and leading business men would make some European princes envious, and the wages of the American workmen have attracted hoards of European laborers to our shores.

No one denies that we make money, but is that the leading motive in American life? The questions: "What in your opinion are the leading ideals of the men with whom you associate?" and "What do you consider to be the chief points of weakness in American life?" were put to about one hundred leading men—lawyers, bankers, editors, business men, farmers, scientists and others, and the replies show that forty six consider service to one's fellows to be the leading ideal, while twenty-eight think the making of money for selfish enjoyment or personal power is the leading motive.

A Wall street financier and Vice-President of a large trust company said:

"I think that the leading ideals of the men with whom I associate are in general the ethics of Wall Street, where a man's word is of greater value than anywhere else in the country. I feel, too, that their attitude has become much less provincial than heretofore, and that often the good of the country, the State, and business at large is considered by them more than individual profit."

A prominent magazine editor replied:

"Our ideals are:

"Honesty and integrity.

"Intellectual achievement.

"Beauty in art and music as a solace in life.

"Domestic happiness."

A Congressman had this to say:

"Extravagance in living. Most Americans prefer to spend money rather than not to spend it, and therefore very many spend money foolishly and upon things which were better not purchased.

"The feeling that what we do ought to meet the approval of other nations, for example, rather than our own approval. This is because as a nation and as individuals we are still rather more vain than proud."

A Boston banker said:

"The passion of 'getting on,' with accompanying failure to see what one is getting on toward.

"Pride in power and in the ownership of things. Too great reliance on the finality of material.

"The lust for spending and having others know that one spends."

A religious director of 6,000 university students answered:

"One weakness is that of indulgence. Our life is crammed these days with opportunities for relaxing; the picture show, the ball game, the theatre, the novel, and the canoe grip the lives of a great many and absorb their best engeries."

A bank examiner gave this list:

"Materialistic tendencies.

"Striving for effect at the expense of any or all ideals.

"Lack of simplicity.

"Lack of serious application to present or future problems.

"Loss of early ideals through the breaking up of what formerly constituted 'home life.'

"Lack of interest in religious thought."

The President of one of the largest life insurance companies answered:

"In business—

"To succeed. Success means more than mere money; it means the power to advance methods and thereby benefit others.

"Socially—

"An utter contempt for 'society' as that word is usually applied. No especial program that does not aim directly at intellectual quickening and social betterment."—American Bankers Association.

NEW ANTHEM FOR NATION IS PROPOSED IN HOUSE BILL

First Since Forty-sixth Congress $2,500 Prize Offered by Elks.

A fine, stirring and high sounding anthem has been introduced into the house by Representative Dyer of St. Louis, who has asked that congress adopt the resolution containing the verses as a national hymn. The introduction of this poetry as a joint resolution, according to Joel Grayson, the walking encyclopedia of the house document room, is the first since Representative S. W. Downey of Wyoming startled the Forty-sixth congress with a 200 page epic.

Representative Dyer's proposed anthem is the effort of Henry McEuen Jones of St. Louis to win the $2,500 prize offered by the Elks for a national anthem that congress will accept. The last verse of the resolution reads:

Give us peace by upright arbitration,
No death dealing shot to be hurled,
But if forced into war just remember
That Old Glory will never be furled.
For our union's cemented forever.
We have honored the blue and the gray,
Then we'll righteously follow Old Glory
With a power no nation can stay.

MAY BREAK GREAT ESTATES.

The British Government May Adopt Scheme of Land Purchase.

One of the results of the war, according to reliable information, will be the adoption by the government of a big scheme of land purchase for England such as has been so successful in Ireland.

Confronted with the twofold problem of providing employment for discharged soldiers both during and after the war and the desirability of increasing home grown food supplies, the home office, the board of trade and the board of agriculture entered into consultation with the war office and the admiralty, and the outcome was the appointment by the board of agriculture of a special committee presided over by Sir Harry C. W. Verney.

The report of the committee is said to recommend extensive state acquisitions of land by compulsory purchase for the establishment on a large scale of colonies of small holders and the development of co-operative buying and marketing and of agricultural credit banks, together with a provision for a large state grant to put the proposals into operation.

DID ROOSTER WALK 88 MILES?

Lost in New York, He Turns Up in Port Jervis With Swollen Feet.

Edward and Albert Monroe, who have a large poultry farm near Port Jervis, N. Y., recently exhibited some Plymouth Rock fowl at the poultry show in Madison Square Garden, New York city, where one of the roosters won first prize.

When the birds were crated and ready to be expressed back to Port Jervis the prize rooster, valued at $250, escaped and for four weeks was lost. The other morning when the Monroe brothers went out to feed their feathered stock they were amazed to find the missing prize winner in the yard. His feet were swollen and calloused, and he was weak from exposure and lack of food. But he crowed lustily.

Port Jervis is eighty-eight miles from New York.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Don't Cough.

"Don't cough" has become as much a health slogan as "Don't spit." Like the spitting habit, the coughing habit to a great extent is unnecessary and to no purpose. The dry, hacking cough especially is unnecessary, and when persisted in as a matter of habit it becomes detrimental in its influence on the lungs and larynx. Of course, there are times when coughing is necessary and helpful, as in the case of consumptives, to rid the respiratory tract of accumulated noxious material. But there is a right way to cough. Never cough without pressing a folded handkerchief or cloth firmly over the mouth, meanwhile inhaling deeply through the nose. This avoids infecting the air about you with the spray; it muffles the noise and relieves the throat of the irritation caused by the air inhaled through the mouth.

ESSAY ON SUNRISE.

Some Things About Which, Perhaps, You Knew Nothing.

Sunrise is what people are always sentenced to be shot at.

In some cases this is the first time the victim has ever either seen the sun rise or been shot at.

If he has been half shot the night before he doesn't see the sun rise.

Being shot at sunrise isn't such an awful fate for some folks.

Many people would just as lief be shot as to get up in time to see the sun rise.

Those who have seen the sun rise speak very highly of it.

But we do not let them fool us.

Associating with the sunrise is poetically presumed to make men better.

But look at the milkman!

Getting up with the sun is a much overestimated stunt.

To begin with, the sun is neither benefited nor impressed with our efforts.

It doesn't help him get up to have us rise at the same time, and he goes right off and leaves us, anyway.

For our own part, we think it is excruciatingly bad taste to stand and rubber while anybody gets up.

The orb of the day has little enough chance for privacy, as it is, with everybody gawping while he goes to bed.

HOPEWELL RECEIVED WARNING OF ITS FATE

Hopewell, Va., was warned of its fate. It passed the warning by lightly, and went to its doom in a night just as it had come into being. It was Chief William Guerin, Chairman of the Fire Prevention Committee of the Safety First Federation of America, who foretold the conflagration in a report to the Business Men's Association of Hopewell, after an inspection of the city, which hem ade at their request.

Chief Guerin's letter, which accompanied the report, throws much light on conditions in Hopewell, and it is also a fair example of the thorough-going methods of the former head of New York City's Bureau of Fire Prevention.

"Conditions in your city" Chief Guerin wrote," are ideal for a conflagration that would destroy it in less than two hours, unless Divine Providence interfered to save you. As it is, a daily miracle is performed when the sun rises and finds your city intact.

"Every building, almost, is of frame construction, and each one touching its neighbor; floors laid on joints, and in such manner that fire could travel a whole block under your floors without any way to control it.

"You have no Fire Department, and no water supply; there is no gas or electric current for lighting, and the majority of stores and buildings are lighted with gasolene open flame torches.

"I am reliably informed that no insurance company will issue a policy in your city unless forced to by clients carrying large policies on properties in other cities, and then will carry only 30 per cent. of the value at a premium charge of ten per cent.

"That you are quite alive to your peril is evident by the poster you issued to the citizens generally, to provide one quart Fire Extinguishers in each building, and I commend you for doing it, but may I suggest this to you, that in as much as your most evident peril is from the use of gasolene so generally for lighting and cooking, you use the only extinguisher adapted for gasolene fires, and that is the one quart Extinguisher." No other type will extinguish gasolene fires, but the one quart will handle any fire in its earlier stages, and that is what counts. The Baltimore conflagration began a spark, which, if extinguished, would have prevented the conflagration.

"May I suggest that as your only insurance from a conflagration at present is a reliable fire extinguisher, you get them at once. It is odd that a man, who has a large sum of money invested in a paying business, should hesitate to spend the small amount for safe-guarding that investment, by the purchase of a fire extinguisher. Care should be used in placing gasolene torches and stoves near woodwork or inflammable articles; the stoves should have a piece of sheet zinc or sheet iron under them, and the edges of the metal should be turned up for at least 4 inches to catch any leaking gasolene, and preventing its spreading on floors or counters; waste paper and inflammable rubbish or waste, should be kept in large ash cans with covers, and emptied in the collecting carts every day if possible.

"A number of fires result from throwing away lighted cigarettes which continue to burn long after. They should be extinguished by stepping on them or putting them in metal or stone ash trays. So too in throwing away lighted matches, they fall in the right spot to start a fire.

"What you have to fear most is fire, for if it once got any great headway, your city's name would be "Hopeless."

Chief Guerin is now a lawyer devoting his time to the legal problems raised by the new demand for fire prevention rather than the old idea of waiting for fire to come before taking steps to strangle it. There are few men in the Fire World who are better equiped than he is for this task. Starting as a plain every-day smoke-eater, in 1889, Chief Guerin rose by his own efforts through every rank in the New York Fire Department, demonstrating that promotion can be earned and that the highest grades are open to the man at the foot of the ladder.

At the last examinationChief Guerin missed becoming head of the New York Department by less than one per cent, but he was at once chosen to organize and head the Fire Prevention Bureau which was started by the city. Here he remained until the Bureau was on a firm basis, and until he had seen millions saved to the city by its work. Only then did he choose to retire to take up far greater work of fighting the legal battle against fire.

WOULD BAR LABOR LAW APPEALS

Albany—The right of appeal to the courts from decisions of the Industrial Commission in enforcing the labor laws would be withdrawn under the terms of a bill introduced in the Legislature by Democratic leader Wagner of the Senate.

Thep rovision granting the privilege of appeals was enacted last year as a part of the Spring bill consolidating the Labor Department and the Workmen's Compensation Commission.

Mr. Wagner maintained that his provision opened the door to at least three years delay in the enforcement of Commission rulings.

Other proposed amendments to labor laws, introduced by Mr. Wagner would hold the entire Industrial Commission responsible for the administration of the commission's business, would provide that the minutes of the commission shall be public records and would increase the penalty for a violation of the law requiring exits in facsories to be unlocked.

RADIO CENSORSHIP PROTESTED IN BERLIN

Washington—Indications were given today the censorship of German official wireless communications by the United States is likely to prove an issue of considerable importance between the two governments. It was learned Colonel House, President Wilson's confidential emissary to Europe, will bring back a sharp protest from Berlin on the subject.

This censorship, Berlin contends, is discriminatory, inasmuch as diplomatic representatives of the allies in the United States have the freedom of the cables.

TOWNS PETITION FOR GOOD ROADS

Two County Towns Want to Share But Are Without Needed Equipment.

The Oswego Times says concerning the proposed improvement of county roads as follows:

Under the section of the highway law which provides for the county road system the towns are required to make the road ready for improvement by excavating and grading, etc. Towns that are not equipped with the machinery recuired to do this work can not work quickly and at the smallest expense possible. Amboy and Williamstown are without the necessary machinery and the mass mteeings will be held with the obiect in view of so presenting the situation that the public interest will be aroused and the town boards warranted in going ahead with the expenditures. The rule requiring the machinery is ironclad and cannot be evaded.

Petitions from Towns

The following towns have already made application for roads under the new system in their towns; and these petitions signed by the town boards are on file in the office of the superintendent of highways.

Town of Redfield—Orwell-Redfield road. 4 1-3 miles, from Redfield Square to the town line of the town of Orwell. This is the only road in the town of Redfield on the may of the proposed system, but the town is desirous of having it constructed in one year, if possible.

Town of New Haven—The North Road, 1½ miles, from the Four Corners at New Haven to the railroad station at Dempster.

Town of Parish—Union Square-Williamstown Road, 1½ miles, from the town line of the Town of Mexico to the town line of the Town of Albion.

Town of Richmond—From a point near the Davsville church at Bethel cemetery, 2½ miles.

Town of Scriba—North Road, 2 miles, from Graves Corners toYoungs Corners.

Town of Schroeppel — Phoenix-Caughdenoy Road, 1 mile, from the village line of Phoenix to the foot of the hill at Peter Scott Creek.

Will Consider Petitions

When the Petitions are in from all the towns that wish to share in the proposed improvement the highway committee of the Board of Supervisors will meet and apportion the work to be done in the several towns. A report will be formulated and presented to the Board of Supervisors at a special meeting to be held in March.

An appropriation of $30,000 for the initiation of the road plan was made at the annual session of the board, but this amount may be added to by another appropriot'on at the special session. It is desired that a good start may be made on the system this year. The plan is to complete the work in six years. The total expenditure will be about $450,000.

LACK OF FAITH IS AN INSULT

The Sheldon meetings are well attended and congretions increasing. Last evening Rev. H. F. Barnes of Alton, N. Y., preached a practical sermon from the text, "Have faith in God." He said, "People do not treat each other, in the line of faith, as badly as they treat God. You believe in the bank or you would make a run on it tomorrow morning and withdraw your deposits. When you buy your ticket at the station, you believe the railroad company that it will deliver you to the destination designated. When one presents you with a check, you receive it believing your friend has the proper amount of cash deposited in the bank. If you take it with difference, your friend feels insulted. God's promises of salvation are checks with full amount on deposit in the bank of heaven. But men refuse to receive them, thus offering insult to God." Mr. Barnes presented the matter so clearly and forcibly that all, both saint and sinner were convined, and when he asked, "Ought we not all to believe God?" nearly every hand went up in response.

Tonight Miss Evangeline Crockett will preach. Tomorrow noon there will be a shop meeting on the second floor of the Hunter Arms Co.

Mirizm Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott, featured in "The Catspaw," an Edison five-reel photodrama, have occasion to rise to great dramatic heights in theirr espective roles, each succeeding admirably.

The story of "The Catspaw" deals with the exploits of a daring adventurer, aided by a woman accomplice. Unknown to the woman, the crook employs a double to represent him in society. While he is doing this, his employer is robbing banks. The woman's unfounded jealousy induces her to put the police on his track; he is finally caught. The curious twists given to the story by reason of these "duplicate identities," gives the picture the needed "punch," and it grips attention from start to finish.

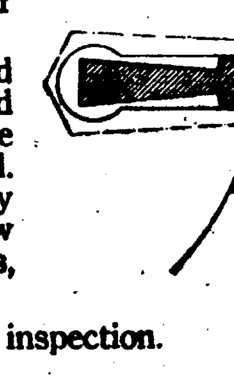
Kee-lock Screwless Mounting Attached to Your Old Lens



It makes no difference how loose your old lenses may be—or how badly worn the screw holes are—they can be attached to the new Kee-Lock mounting and be absolutely solid and stronger than before.

In attaching the Kee-Lock to old lens, the slot is cut in line with the old screw holes, (see round inner line) the key is inserted and heat cemented. This process guarantees a perfectly "wobble-proof" fitting. This new mounting is stylish, inconspicuous, strong and reliable.

The Kee-Lock is awaiting your inspection.

FIVE N. Y. BOROUGHS FACE HIGHER RATES

New York—Four of Greater New New York's five boroughs will be called on to pay tax rates this year ranging from twelve to seventeen points higher than in 1915. These are the estimates of Comptroller Prendergast, following receipt of calculations made by accountants of the Finance Department.

The greatest advance—seventeen points—is in the Manhattan rate. The smallest is in Queens. Richmond alone enjoys a reduction—from 2.24 to 2.14. In spite of that its rate remains the highest in the city.

ALLIES CONFIDENT OF UNITY OF ACTION

Rome.—Military circles in Rome are confident that unity and simultaneous action by the allied armies, as a result of the new allied war council, will achieve decisive results.

The Central Powers will be unable to resist a simultaneous and violent offensive on all fronts. Critics here believe that no longer will a great Teuton offensive be possible.

The allies soon will be ready to take the offensive everywhere.

ALLEGED BOMB THROWER PLEADS

Oswego Italian to Be Sentenced Monday---Confesses to Carrying a Revolver.

Oswego—Cologio Triana, one of the three alleged blackhanders believed to have been the instigators of threatening letters and a bomb outrage against the family of Joseph Cosentino, wealthy Oswego Italian, plead ed guilty to an indictment found against him by the January Grand Jury, in County Court.

The indictment charged him with having in his possession a revolver without a written license, after a prior conviction on a felony charge. When arrested last November in connection with the blackhand cases, the revolver was found in his possession.

He admitted having served a term of five years in the New Jersey State Prison at Bayonne ,having been convicted on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the murder of a fellow countryman. The maximum sentence which the court may impose upon him is five years in Auburn Prison. He will be sentenced at 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Triana was also indicted with Mariano Pagone and Tony Pasco on charges of blackmail and conspiracy in connection with the Cosentino affair. Following Triana's plea, Mariano Pagone, alias Manny Perri, was placed on trial on one of the indictments charging him with blackmail. When court adjourned at 5:30 o'clock last night nine out of twelve jurors had been secured. A large number of talesmen who were questioned were excused. Attorney John R. Pidgeon appears for Pagone.

Several others against whom indictments had been found were given an opportunity to change their former pleas of not guilty or guilty. They were: Fred Parker, grand larceny, second degree; Antonio Capelino, carrying concealed weapons; Tomasso Demarco, carrying concealed weapons and John Holz, criminally receiving stolen property. They will be sentenced Monday afternoon.

The first case tried in County Court yesterday afternoon resulted in an acquittal. William Ball was charged with attempt to commit an unnatural crime, his accusers being James O'Brien and John Adame, two 16 year old boys. Jack Williams, who was indicted for a similar offense, pleaded guilty yesterday morning. The evidence against Bell was given by the boys and evidentl ythe jury did not believe it.

Ball appeared to be a negro but declared on the stand that he was of Mexican Spanish blood. Letters sent by him to a brother in Nashville, Tenn., and signed Robert J. Abernathy, were read and Ball finally admitted that was his name and he changed it because of trouble with his brother. The intercepted letters were sent to the same brother. B. Coe Turner was attorney for the defendant.

John Cuyler, who was indicted with John Holtz, for criminally receiving stolen property, pleaded guilty late yesterday and sentence was deferred until Thursday afternoon.

Pleas of guilty were also made by Ira Carlton, robbery third degree, and Harold Burcham, grand larceny, second degree.

LETTERS GRANTED IN SURROGATE'S COURT

Oswego—The inventory of the estate of Richard W. Quigg, the hardware dealer, who died on January 4, was filed yesterday in Surrogate's Court by F. L. Smith and J. Carroll Smith. The inventory is of the decedent's hardware store in East Second street. The stock is valued at $16,897.48, but $142.44 was sold during the time inventory was taken, leaving the net value $16,755.64. The value of fixtures is given as $439; the good accounts amount to $1,995.91, making a total of $19,189.95. The accounts not good are estimated at $757.15 and the value of those not ascertainable as to collection is put at $3,138.39.

A petition for the probate of the will of Charles B. Hillard, late of Sandy Creek, was filed by Mary J. Hibbard, the widow and executrix. Mr. Hibbard's estate is valued at $5,000 personal and $2,000 real, and he leaves the residuary estate to his wife also giving her the life income from a mortgage for $3,000 on property in Orwell. At her death it is to go to Carrie H. Hibbard, a daughter. Mr. Hibbard states that he does not leave his daughter, Cornelia Van Hoen, any part of his estate, because he has alread made substantial advances to her.

Mr. Hibbard was formerly a prominent jeweler in Pulaski but retired several years ago.

Letters of administration were granted to Catherine McCormacko of Oswego on the estate of Patrick Moran, late of that city. A bond in $5,500 was filed. Mr. Moran died a number of years ago, but a change in administrators was recently made. The estate is valued at $6,000 personal and $400 real.

THE MARCH OF CIVILIZATION

Before the coming of the white man, the Indian roamed New York State, so we are told.

But with the coming of the white man came civilization.

While the Indian ruled and roamed he caught fish as best he could. He may have used a hook, he may have used a seine, he may have used a spear or an arrow, and he may have used his hands. But you can not do that now.

Before you can catch a bullhead you must examine the statues of the state. It makes no difference if you are going to catch him through the ice or with a net in midsummer. There is a law for catching bullheads through the ice, and there is a law for taking bullheads with nets; there is a law for fishing through the ice for eels; there is a law for the use of weirs and pots; there is a law as to the use of explosives; there is a law for frost fish and for ice fish; there is a law for lake trout and a law for muskallonge; there is a law for pickerel and for pike; there is a law for pumpkinseeds and likewise a law for salmon; there is a law for spearing suckers and a law relating to striped bass in the Hudson River, a law for sturgeon and a law for suckers; there is a law forbidding thumping on the ice and a law regulating the use of tip-ups.

In fact, there is a law for everything pertaining to the fish tribe from the beginning until the end.

In fact, there is more, because the law is changed every year.

The law relating to fish and fishing, and the annual change of these laws, marks the advance of civilization.

As a matter of fact, to know the law and to be able to appreciate the degree of your civilization, you must be arrested.—Albany Press.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Firmin Cassignol, Noted French Billiardist.

Firmin Cassignol, who has challenged Willie Hoppe for the 18.1 or 18.2 billiard championship, is acknowledged to be the only player in the world who compares favorably in point of skill with the title holder. The professionals in this country themselves admit that they cannot compete against Hoppe with more than a slight possibility of victory.

But now comes Cassignol from France, not expressly for the purpose of playing Hoppe for the championship, though this undoubtedly had some bearing on his making the trip. If nothing else has been accomplished, Cassignol, by his challenge, has aroused an interest in the professional game. In practice he has clinched the belief in many minds that he is better than Hoppe. In touch and closeness of play he is the master, but many are of the opinion that a match between the two will depend on temperament perhaps more than playing ability. There is agreement that Hoppe is one of the coolest exponents of the game, never a flutter of excitement being reflected in his work with the cue.

Perhaps no billiard match ever staged would attract such wide interest as one between Cassignel and Hoppe.

Baker Not In Demand.

J. Franklin Baker, the so called home run king of the American league, seems to be more anxious to find a berth in the major leagues than managers and club owners are to engage him. Several clubs would be glad to sign Baker on account of his reputation as a hitter for the Athletics in recent years, but none seems willing to give a fortune for a player who never was a fast fielder and base runner and whose batting eye may have become dim after a year's layoff. Connie Mack asserts that he is not blocking any deal whereby Baker might become a Yankee, but it seems that Baker wants to tie up any club that bids for his services with a contract that might exceed his worth as a player.

The Temperamental Hal Chase.

Since peace was declared between the National, American and Federal leagues no club has made much of an effort to obtain Hal Chase of the Buffalo Federals. Although Chase was a star in an inferior league, his eccentric conduct while with the Yankees and White Sox has caused major league clubs to hold aloof from the one time great first baseman. It is said that no club in the American league wants Chase, but that if he can obtain a position in the National league no opposition will be offered by the American league.

New Golf Links For Florida.

According to recent announcement, Florida will have two of the finest eighteen hole courses in another year. Contracts have been awarded for their erection, and at Palm Beach work has already begun. The other links will be at St. Augustine, which has not yet a golf course. The new course at Palm Beach will be situated a mile and a half north of the hotels on a strip of land a third of a mile wide and extending from the Atlantic to Lake Worth.

National Bowling Tourney.

The tenth annual national bowling tournament will be held in the Grand Central palace, New York city, from March 18 to April 1 under the auspices of the New York Bowling association. The National Bowling association will again manage the tourney, and Major Gage will be in charge. There will be matches in singles and doubles and for five man teams.

Opening of Baseball Season.

President Ban Johnson of the American league, Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pittsburgh club, and Secretary Heydler of the National league have finished the task of putting into final shape the major league schedules already agreed upon for 1916. It has been definitely decided to open the season Wednesday, April 12.

Navy to Row Syracuse.

JAPAN HAS HER "WAR BRIDES" TOO

Millionaires Made by Selling Goods to Belligerents.

ARMS SALE IS $34,500,000

Shipping, Mining and Other Industries Thrive and Invention Fee's Big Spur. Munitions on Hand Are Being Sold to Russia—Scientists, Spurred by Necessity, Make Many Inventions.

While because of the war depression prevails in certain lines of industry and business, yet in shipping circles there is tremendous activity, says a Tokyo dispatch. It is reported in the Japan Times that several new millionaires have been developed since the outbreak of the war.

The paper gives the names of certain fortunate ones. One young clerk in the Kobe office of the Mitsui company is said to have made 2,000,000 yen ($1,000,000) in one year by chartering small vessels at first and afterward larger steamers. Almost fabulous prices are now paid by charterers, who also make big money. The Tokyo small shipping companies have been suddenly metamorphosed into big and busy concerns. One such company is reported to have netted $5,000,000.

The mining industry also is having an unusually good season. The price of zinc, for instance, has run up fivefold since the beginning of the war.

In this connection I may add that Mr. Asano, who is already a multimillionaire and is also president of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the chief steamship line running between Japan and California, is reported to have decided to establish a ship building yard. It will be at Tsurumi, near Yokohama, and will cost $2,500,000. Mr. Asano deems this step necessary to keep pace with the progress of the shipping industry.

Stimulus to Invention.

One of the best phases of the bene fit that the war is bringing to Japan is evident in the stimulus to Japanese invention. This is especially seen in scientific lines, in which Japan had been too content to follow the lead of Germany. But now that trade with Germany is cut off and supplies of many materials are lacking the Japanese are thrown on their own resources. In consequence Japanese scientists are busily engaged in experiments, some of which have already produced good results. For instance, Professor Inouye of the Ueda Sericultural college in Nagano prefecture has discovered a method of getting chromin from the silk worm chrysalis.

The necessities of the time have also given an impetus to the plan for the establishment of a great chemical laboratory, which has long been a pending question in the imperial university circles.

Gun Throws Grappling Iron.

That "necessity is the mother of invention" has again been illustrated in the matter described in the following paragraphs from the Japan Times:

"The anti-entanglement gun on which Captain Ochi has recently obtained a patent is intended to throw a specially prepared grappling iron to the wire entanglements, which can be manipulated so as to destroy them by an operative remaining out of range of hostile fire. Even if the wires be highly charged with electricity, the operative can efficiently work the grapple with impunity, as it is completely insulated. The invention is expected by the experts to bring about a revolution in position tactics.

"The captain is a youthful officer. The recent invention is said to have had its inception during his bitter experiences with the entanglements when he took part in the siege of Port Arthur. For ten years since then he has worked upon the idea. He intends to apply for a patent on his invention to England, France, Russia and the United States and to have it employed in the European war if possible."

The paymaster general of the army has given the diet some figures of the sales of munitions of war, which he figures have amounted to more than 69,000,000 yen ($34,500,000), of which almost 40,000,000 yen's worth were sold in 1915. In addition to this, almost 20,000,000 yen has been realized from the sale of military shoes and clothing. The arms and other munitions sold are those taken as prizes and those purchased for the imperial army in the Russo-Japanese war. Japan will have a new supply.

The minister of war assured the diet that there was no fear of a deficiency in the supply of ordinance for national defense. He also explained how the government was taking means to replace the arms sold; how the arms necessary for the mobilization of troops were prepared, and how the necessary arrangements had been made with private factories to supplement the work of the arsenals.

These arrangements were temporarily suspended because of misunderstandings, but seem to have been resumed.

Veteran of 1870 Again Fighting.

Corporal Sarrugue, aged seventy-six and a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, is today fighting in the ranks for France. Forty-five years ago he won the Legion of Honor medal; today he wears the war cross, recently bestowed upon him for gallantry.

The Only Fool

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Sarah Martin married Jim Hewson because she was a hired girl and working for $2 a week; because, again, she was tired of work and wanted a home.

Jim Hewson married Sarah Martin because he also wanted a home and because he knew that she earned $8 a month. That would pay the rent on a cottage in a village in those far back days.

Jim was lazy. He was born that way and couldn't help it. He hadn't energy enough to sweat a shirt collar, and therefore when he worked he got paid according to his energy, which pay seldom exceeded 15 cents a day.

The bridal tour of the newly weds consisted of walking a mile arm in arm, each with a basket on the free arm, to a huckleberry swamp a mile away. There they picked twelve quarts of berries—that is, Sarah picked ten quarts and Jim two. Then they walked back to town and sold the berries to a grocer for 60 cents in cash.

"You see," said Jim as he jingled the money in his hand, "we can get along as easy as grease. This money would buy us provisions for a week."

The bride half laughed at the remark, but soon felt serious and hadn't much more to say. Two weeks later, however, she had. Jim had gone to see her in the kitchen in which she worked and was feeling glad that he was a married man when she said:

"Jim, I have been thinking things over."

"Well?" was the query.

"I have come to the conclusion that I was either a lunatic or an idiot to have married you. You are all wrong. You are lazy and shiftless. You haven't got the energy of a potato bug. You want me to work and support you instead of it being the other way. If you were the best husband in the state I wouldn't do it."

"Well, what are we going to do?" asked the husband after a lapse of a minute.

"I can't get a divorce from you, Jim, for I haven't got the money to put one through. If we agreed on a separation it would do me no good, for I'd still be bound to you. If I was free altogether I might stand a chance of getting a husband who would provide a home and comforts for me."

"You mean if I should die you'd have your chance?"

The wife didn't reply. She only looked at him.

Jim rose up and left the house without a good night and went to his bed of hay in the stable, and for an hour he did more thinking than he had done in a year before.

In about a week he tried suicide. He went over on the railroad track in midafternoon, and when the 3 o'clock express came along he was standing between the rails and facing it. The whistle screamed and tooted, but Jim stood there as if spiked to a tie. The engineer tried to stop the train, but the pace was thirty miles an hour when the cowcatcher did its work. Five minutes later a man who had witnessed the accident from forty rods away came running up just as the victim was climbing the fence of a cornfield into which he had been hurled. He had a slight limp in the left leg, but that was nothing for Jim to kick about.

Sarah had heard of this attempt and started out to look for Jim, but she didn't have the luck to find him. He was missing from his usual haunts for three or four days, and then he turned up on a bluff overlooking the mill pond half a mile from the bridge. He was going to try the water cure this time. The bluffs were thirty feet above the water, and Jim couldn't swim a stroke. Instead of striking the water, however, he struck a strip of mud.

"You blamed idiot! What did you jump for? I saw you when you made the leap!" said a passerby.

"I wanted to die," replied Jim.

Sarah got every loose boy in town to hunt for Jim, but they hunted in vain. He had one more attempt coming to him, and if found at all he wanted to be found dead. He went two miles away from town and hired to a farmer to sprinkle paris green over the potato vines of his patch. The farmer left him alone for an hour, and Jim mixed a big dose of the powder and drank it down. It was an overdose, however, and it was thrown off, and his life was saved again.

It was when poor Jim was tottering down the road toward the village that a man in an auto overtook him and halted to say:

"If you aren't drunk, then you are sick. Get in here. Now, what's the matter?"

Jim told him all, and, curiously enough, the autoist proved to be an uncle of his whom he had not heard of since his boyhood days. When the uncle had heard the story to its end he said:

"Jim, you had a fool for a father. You have got three fool brothers and fool sisters and about five or six fool uncles and aunts and the Lord only knows how many fool cousins, but you are the first fool in all the family that ever owned up to being a fool. You shall be rewarded in consequence. I will buy you a house and lot in the village, give you $5,000 to set you and Sarah on your feet and bet that you'll come out very near the top. A man who is a fool and knows it is a better man than one who thinks he is wise and doesn't know it."

And Jim and Sarah made up and have lived happily ever since.

Woman's World

A Prima Donna Gives Her Home For War Sufferers.

MME. MELBA.

After sixteen months of personal service to war victims Mme. Melba recently gave the use of her apartment in Paris for an army hospital. Dr. Jane Wells Craven of Pittsburgh is superintendent in charge. The apartment will be known as the Melba Home hospital and will be used for the benefit of all soldiers of whatever nationality.

The gift of the hospital came as a surprise, topping the singer's systematic economies in dress, food and personal comforts.

"See my tight skirt," she said, pointing to a much worn serge. "I have bought neither gowns, hats nor blouses since the war began. I can't afford new garments until every suffering man, woman and child has food and shelter.

"This war was declared without consulting women, but our jobs as women seem to be well laid out for us, and where there is a will there's a way. I have lost all my men folk in this war, either by shot or insanity."

Mme. Melba said her apartment at 91 Avenue Henri Martin has large, airy rooms, with solarium and roof garden, and will accommodate 200 beds. Equipment for each bed will cost $25.

Mme. Melba has pledged even the maintenance of the majority of these, in memory of Arnold Quilter of the Grenadier guards, who fell at the Dardanelles.

TRAYS FOR EVERY USE.

A Variety of These Useful Articles For Every Household.

One of the most interesting details of the modern china closet is the tray. Trays for muffins, for sweets and services for tea and after dinner coffee are as popular as the breakfast tray. Whether or not the present status of breakfast as a movable feast is the result of the hectic existence mankind leads today it is hard to say.

If this meal is to be served in bed a delightful individual tray would be one with folding legs. Such a tray naturally contains only service for one. A variety of designs, however, may be found in this style of tray with individual sets of china suited to every purse.

For the member of the family who wishes only a cup of black coffee or tea with a dash of cream perhaps a small tray containing three pieces of silver to which is added the cup is a convenient service.

The after dinner coffee set has its own tray and is easily carried into the drawing room or library. At the country house, where all sorts of impromptu meals are served in the garden, the pantry must be supplied with trays of every description—black or white painted ones to accord with old furniture and quaint cottons, glass covered chintz ones set in wicker; even perfectly plain white enameled trays may be used. The housekeeper's soul will delight in the variety and beauty of this practical adjunct to housekeeping, and her only difficulty will be in selecting.

Eggplant Straws.

Cut into one-fourth inch slices an unpeeled eggplant. Salt each slice and press them for an hour or so under a heavy weight. Now cut the slices into equal lengths, about a fourth of an inch wide, discarding the skin; dry in a cloth and roll them in a mixture of equal parts of fine cornmeal and flour; season with pepper, salt and a slight dash of nutmeg. Drop a few at a time into salad oil (hot) and fry them until they are a delicate brown. Dry on a soft paper as you would French fried potatoes and serve at once while they are crisp and tender.

Attractive Blotters.

Guest room blotters are covered with stiff chintz covers, the blotter leaves inside being held in place by narrow satin ribbons. The chintz is the same as that used in the hangings of the room. On the outside cover of the blotter a picture, clipped from a magazine or Sunday paper, is pasted, and then the entire cover is shellacked. These blotters are very handy for guest room use and may be renewed cheaply and often enough to keep them fresh and inviting in appearance.

The Spot Light

What can we do when the world is at war?
What can we do but wait?
We have welcomed Teuton and Slav and Celt
In at our friendly gate.

Danebrog, tricolor, union jack,
Eagle and crescent unfurled
Rally their kin to the tap of the drum—
But we are the kin of the world.

What can we do when the world is at war?
Refrain from love or hate,
Stay our hand or give tongue to our grief—
There is nothing to do but wait.

Peace is our portion, bitter with herbs;
Little our talk is worth
When we have no power to be heard by our kin—
And we are kin to the earth.

Richard Knight, for pride and slighting, 2s. 6d.

William Hetherington, for not being ready to go to church three Sundays, 10 shillings.

Thomas Birdall, for being at Nuneaton from morning to night, 5 shillings.

Cook, dead drunk, 10 shillings.

Anne Adams to be washmaid at Lady day. She went away the 29th of June for being wanton and careless. She lost five pairs of sheets and five pillowbeers, for which my wife made her pay £1.—Diary of Sir Richard Newdigate.

Passion Play Christ's Fate.

Persistent rumors from Germany fail to substantiate the one that Anton Lang, the famous Christus of the Passion Play at Oberammergau, has been killed in the fighting in Champagne. Lang, who is a potter by trade, was reported several months ago as having yet failed to join the German army, but as preparing for Red Cross work.

CHEESE AND CITRON SANDWICH.—One Neufchatel cheese, three tablespoonfuls citron and a few grains of salt. Put the citron through a meat chopper twice, mix with the cheese and add the salt. Spread on one side of thinly sliced bread and on the other spread butter.

Cheese and Olive Sandwich.—Take one Neufchatel cheese and two tablespoonfuls chopped olives and cream together with just enough milk to make a smooth paste. Spread on a thin slice of brown bread.

Cheese and Nut Sandwich.—One Neufchatel cheese and two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped English walnuts. Mix cheese and ground or chopped nuts with just enough milk to make a smooth paste that will spread easily. Spread one thin slice of bread with butter and the other with the cheese paste, press together and cut into fancy shapes.

Cheese and Cherry Sandwich.—One Neufchatel cheese, one tablespoonful chopped candied cherries and one tablespoonful chopped citron. Mix cheese, cherries and citron with just enough milk to make a smooth paste. Spread one thin slice of bread with butter and the other with the paste. Press together and cut into fancy shapes.

Cheese and Parsley Sandwich.—One Neufchatel cheese, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, a dash of paprika, a dash of white pepper and a pinch of salt. Mix the cheese, parsley, salt, pepper and paprika together with just enough milk to make a smooth paste. Spread one thin slice of bread with butter and the other with the cheese paste. Press together and cut into fancy shapes.

Peanut Kisses.—Shell a half pint of peanuts, removing the brown hulls, and chop rather fine. Beat the whites of four eggs to a stiff froth, but not dry, add carefully two cups of granulated sugar, stir in the nuts and drop by teaspoon on oiled paper. Bake in a moderate oven till a delicate brown.

Stomach Trouble Cured

Mrs. A. M. Spears, Chadwick, N. Y., says: "About a year ago I was suffering from indigestion, biliousness and dizzy spells. The food I ate made me sick at the stomach. I tried a number of medicines but nothing did me much good until I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets. They helped me at once and two bottles of them cured me."

Becoming Coat For a Schoolgirl.

Blue serge of fine twill variety is used for this springtime coat. The front may be buttoned high or rolled back and the fulness in the back is laid in deep inverted pleats.

Graceful of line and ample in fold this coat of light weight checked serge is exceedingly attractive. It is designed for girls ranging from the ages of eight to fifteen years and combines service with style in a thoroughly pleasing way. For a girl of eight years 2⅜ yards 54-inch material are required. One feature of the design that adds to its serviceable qualities is the fact that contrasting trimming may be omitted if desired. Belt, collar and cuffs are of the same material. Blue, brown or green serge is stylish, but it is a temptation to employ white after seeing the smart designs in this color.

If the various sections of the pattern are arranged on the serge as illustrated, one is assured of good lines and the most economical use of material. Study the cutting guide and see how the back is laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods, with the collar directly to the right of it. Next comes the underfacing, but this is placed on a lengthwise thread. The upper sleeve section and the side back are placed opposite the back, on a lengthwise thread, while the cuff lies above the collar. Between the underfacing and the front the lower sleeve section is placed. It is most important to follow instructions regarding the laying of the pattern on the lengthwise thread if a good line is to be obtained.

The fronts of the coat may be rolled back to form revers, or the collar may be buttoned close up to the neck, giving the coat a double breasted effect. The fulness at the back is laid in deep inverted pleats.

There is no end to the new cotton materials for coats, many of which show a mercerized finish. The Oxford weave is novel and exceedingly smart. Non-crushable are whipcord and cotton gabardine, a likable and serviceable material as well.

TO VOTE ON LIQUOR ISSUE.

Three Hundred Illinois Towns to Settle Question at the Polls In April.

Some 300 cities and towns of Illinois will vote on the wet and dry question next April as the result of petitions filed both by the saloon and anti-saloon forces. In about one-third of the localities the wet faction is seeking to regain control of the districts, while in the remainder the drys are trying to drive out the saloons.

In the district surrounding Chicago most of the petitions were filed by the wets in an effort to recover ground lost in the last test, which, coming soon after women were given the ballot, resulted disastrously for the saloon forces. Among the cities are Elgin, Sterling, De Kalb, Rochelle, Batavia, Plainfield, Geneva, Plano, Yorkville, Hinckley and Sycamore.

Apparently the wets have given up hope of regaining Rockford, the largest dry city in the state. No petition was filed there, despite the fact that the city for years has been one of the principal battlegrounds of the wet and dry forces. The wets also ignored a large number of smaller towns which were voted dry at the last election.

In addition to these larger cities the anti-saloon forces filed petitions in nearly 200 towns in the western and central parts of the state.

The drys are counting to a great extent upon the increasing number of women who are going to the polls at every election.

FROM THE NORTHLAND.

A Serviceable Rug Quaintly Designed and Beautifully Made.

This interesting example of handiwork is a sample of the Grenfell mission exhibits from Labrador. Ten years ago Miss Jessie Luther went to bring cheer and manual training to these families of deep sea fishers, who must needs pass so many dreary, unoccupied months of cold. Miss Luther writes:

"Another very salable product is the hooked mat. It is, of course, a native industry, generations old, as it is in all rural districts. The mats, made without suggestion as to design and color, are for use and as such justify their making, for they are the only covering used for the floors, but as a rule they are very ugly, though often beautifully made. In many cases the material is what remains of some family garment. In many others scraps of all colors are used, and the designs, which are stamped on burlap and sold by the trader, are meaningless or ugly and not worthy the fine work so often put into them.

"It seemed particularly advisable to use designs of local significance, and those I have given out have been seal, reindeer, dogs, ships and even the jelly fish, with its four central rings. The most elaborate designs have the komatik and dog team and the Laplander and his little herding dog, with their tent in the corner. I have also given out designs of bears, walrus ducks and rabbits. All these subjects have been treated conventionally as a border and the center left plain in nearly every case. They have been very popular and have sold at once for prices varying from $6.50 to $25, according to size, design, coloring and workmanship. They are made of new material, some of flannelette and some of woolen flannel, dyed the soft colors that will harmonize with ordinary surroundings. They are designed as furnishings to live with and not as curios, and we aim to have the colors fast and the rug durable enough to last many years with its attractiveness unchanged. These mats are made by people who are often very poor, and it is their only means of earning extra money."

Feed Winter Poultry Well.

During the winter it is impossible for most people to keep the food bills for the fowls very low, for not only is more food required for maintaining bodily heat, but where the coveted "winter egg" is desired, feeding must be on a liberal scale or that result will not be attained.

During the cold months, unless a large supply of house scraps is available, it will cost much to keep each hen.

Of course this sum could be reduced if no soft food were given, in which case corn would form the staple diet, but it is doubtful whether any profit would really be made by this, as egg production would be reduced also.

In the same way it does not pay to buy inferior food for the sake of economy, for if there is no nourishment in the materials supplied it is impossible for the fowls to lay many eggs.

Of course overfeeding is just as harmful as underfeeding, and the amateur poultry keeper should specially beware of this danger, for fat hens will not lay.

Meat in some form is a necessity for winter layers, and there is no finer egg producer than fresh cut bones.

Oyster Bisque.

Materials: One pint of oysters, one quart of milk, one stalk of celery, one sprig of parsley, one slice of onion, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, salt, pepper and one-half cupful of whipped cream.

Utensils: Double boiler, saucepan, spoon and cup.

Directions: Scald the milk in a double boiler with celery, parsley and onion. Reserve the liquor of the oysters; remove soft part and chop fine the remainder, free from shell. Put the butter and flour together. Remove the celery, parsley and onion from the milk; add butter and flour. Heat the chopped oyster and liquor. If you wish add the soft portions, though this does not make as delicate a soup. Combine the oysters with milk and add the whipped cream.

About Wedded Bliss

The old fashioned diagnosis of rheumatism is coming into disfavor. Too many distinctly different types of ailments have been classed under rheumatism.

The old fashioned verdict of incompatibility is bound, too, in time, to come into disfavor. Too much of marital infelicity that is caused by selfishness or unrest or unpreparedness for marriage or unpropitious circumstances in marriage is laid at the door of incompatibility.

Of course incompatibility exists. It is present in every marriage in a greater or lesser degree. It is an inevitable concomitant of every marriage. But unless it is pronounced, as in some cases where a man and woman marry in haste, without any community of thought and interest, it does not cause serious trouble.

The average couple are attracted before marriage not only by the call of sex, but by many attributes of mental and spiritual affinity. After marriage it is apparent that they are not as completely in unison as they were before marriage. Traits that were hidden by the glamour of courtship come into the foreground. For husband and wife are each the product of dissimilar environment and heredity, and, being so, many of their ideas, tastes and habits are bound to clash. Then, too, as they are man and woman, their inclinations and emotional natures are fundamentally different. Thus it is to be expected that at times the unlike natures of man and wife should cause discord.

The couple who are idlers or one of whom is an idler find incompatibility a bugbear in their lives. With real work—with something serious to think about and something worth while to do—they would find little time to worry about their discrepancies in opinion and taste.

To those who are unready for marriage, who are bad tempered, eccentric and shiftless in habit and management—to this type of people incompatibility is a scapegoat for all their misdemeanors.

Conventionality.

Woman is much less conventional than man. She does all the conventional things and attacks other women savagely for breaches of convention. But you will generally find that where a man may with impunity break a convention he will not do so, while if secrecy is guaranteed a woman will please herself first and repent only if necessary. It follows that a man is conventional because he respects convention, women conventional because she is afraid of what may happen if she does not obey convention. The typical Englishman of the world wrecked upon a desert island would get into his evening clothes as long as his shirts lasted; his wife alone in such circumstances would wear a low cut dress to take her meal of cocoanuts, even if her frock did up in front.—Atlantic.

RUSSIA PREPARES FOR ORGANIZED ATROCITIES, SAY OFFICIAL ORDERS

Herman Bernstein, in The New York American, says:

"While England is silent about Russian atrocities, while France is singing the Czar's praises, while the powerful nations are talking of their sacrifices in behalf of the small and weaker nationalities, Russia is systematically and brutally resuming her persecutions of the Jews. She is hounding them and starving them, driving them from province to province, branding them with false accusations of disloyalty, treachery and espionage.

England and France are silent on this point. Naturally the governments of these countries dare not tell the truth about their ally, for what explanation could they give to their people for having entered this most terrible of slaughters in history in behalf of the government that is murdering its own people, and settin the stage for a wholesale massacre of the Jews at the close of the war. Such a massacre can be averted only by universal public denunication and condemnation.

Russian agents in England and in France have been busy for many years buying organs of the press to influence public opinion in favor of Russion despatism and Russiam tyranny. I had this information from no less an authority than Count Sergius Witte, the late Premier of Russia, Russia's foremost statesman, who was mysteriously removed shortly after the outbreak of this war.

Russian agents, Russian grafters, Russian loan-seekers, are swarming this country, endeavoring desperately but clumsily to influence the American press to disbelieve the accounts of anti-Jewish atrocities committed by Russia during this war. They urge a new commercial treaty with Russia without settling the passport question. They are denying the facts of Russia's inhumanity to the Jews by calling these charges false, by saying that the facts were "made in Germany."

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike;
For you'll only find what you left behind
For there's nothing that's really new,
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town.

For it isn't your town—it's you;
Real towns are not made of men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead,
When everyone works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a town from the dead;
And if while you make your personal stake,
Your neighbor can make one, too,
Your town will be what you want to see;
It isn't your town—it's you.

The difference between Fulton and other cities is just what YOU choose to make it.

Real men don't go into a thing with the query on their lips, "What do I get out of it?"

TRADE IN FULTON!

It is Wise, Fair, Right, Just, Loyal, and IT PAYS.

See if you don't figure it out this way:

Profit.

It pays, because the more trade I give to Fulton stores the better they can do by me, and furthermore, the Home merchant stands back of his goods. I am sure of value for my money because his very existence is dependent upon just such trade as mine.

Loyalty.

It is loyal, because my Home is here, my interests are here.

Justice

It is Just, because some part of the dollar I spend stays here and helps work for the section and the City in which I live.

Right

It is right, because if this part of the county is good enough to live in it is good enough to buy in.

Fairness

It is Fair that I should patronize the Home merchant who helps pay taxes with me, who helps me support my church, who helps me in my lodge, in my club, and who extends credit to me when I need it.

Wisdom

It is wise, because it is a chance to do myself, my neighbor and my city a good turn by keeping a good dollar circulating here where I have a chance of seeing it again.

FULTON ENGINEER GOES TO HIGHLAND PARK, N. J.

Friends of John Hopkins, of this city, who has for the past two years been employed in the City Engineer's office in Oswego, will be glad to learn that Mr. Hopkins has secured a position as borough engineer at Highland Park, N. J.,at a salary of $1,800 a year, to begin with. He has tendered his resignation from the position at Oswego, which paid $1,200 a year.

The history of Mr. Hopkins' rise in the engineering world is interesting from the fact that he received his earlier education in engineering principles in this city under the tutoring of O. C. Breed and George W. Hackett. Mr. Hopkins servted under the latter in the city engineering department in 1910. He later went to Utica where he worked two years.

Mr. Hopkins is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson F. Hopkins, of 151 W. 1st st., north,

CITY CHARTER FAILS TO MEET APPROBATION OF DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL

"The Fulton City Charter, from cover to cover, is deficient and to properly manage the city, a number of amendments should be made to provisions in the charter." This statement was made yesterday by Deputy Comptroller Isadore Sach, who after making an examination of the city's books left for Albany to submit his findings to his department.

Notwithstanding the objections to the Charter, Mr. Sach declared himself as well pleased with the present system, devised by City Clerk Allen and Chamberlain Adkins. Mr. Sach said that a detailed report, containing recommendations, etc., will be shortly received here, covering the result of his inspection.

While here the official indicated that his department at Albany will complete at a future date an accounting system (standard) for use in all State cities of the third class. Chamberlain Adkins is hopeful that the model shall be constructed after the pattern found here.

Mr. Sach left a number of blanks here as aids to systematizing city departments. He also recommended that a purchasing department be established. This will be done at once, Mr. Adkins and Mr. Allen co-operating in bringing about the organization.

"THE ORACLE" WILL BOW BEFORE YOU FEB. 25TH, ALIVE AND LITHESOME

"Number 30" has been signalled by the editor of "The Oracle"—the High School student publication—to the printer and the February issue, it is believed, will appear next Friday.

A valued feature of the coming number is a complete list of high school studies which are preparatory to academic and college courses.

The purpose of publishing this list, Editor-In-Chief Wallace states, is to give graduates an opportunity to decide upon the subjects they may desire to pursue after leaving high school. He says the average high school student is not as a rule placed in position to map out the college course in advance, which works to his or her disadvantage.

Another student paper is to be released this month, "Fulton Between Times," containing twelve pages of witty saysings. Fred King is editor and Harry Oscar Lynch and the Oracle staff is asisting him.

BRITAIN TO VOTE GREAT CREDIT

London.—The Daily Telegraph's Parliamentary correspondent reports that the Premier, Mr. Asquith, on Monday will ask Parliament to vote a war credit of $400,000,000 ($2,000,000,000), thel argest sum ever asked for in the annals of the Empire.

The debate in Parliament pesterday on the air defence of Great Britain was remarkable chiefly for the frank admissions made by the Cabinet's spokesmen that the present conditions are far from satisfactory. Mr. Andrew Bonar Law, Secretary for the Colonies; Mr. A. J. Balfour, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Mr. H. J. Tennant, Under Secretary for War, all spoke in this vein. They declared however, that the government was doing all that was humanly possible.

Mr. Balfour scored the sensation of the day when he declared one of Great Britain's great mistakes in the days prior to the war was her failure to develop a dirigible airship fleet along lines similar to that of Germany

"With regard to Zeppelins," he said, "looking back on events, I am sorry we did not develop that type of vessel, not so much for aggression and defence as for maritime and other scouting. Such airships might have played for us an important part. Certainly Germany has had an advantage in possessing them.

"We are doing what we can to remedy this state of things, but I do not pretend that, when we began the race ten years behind the enemy, there is any reasonable probability of catching up. However, something must be done and what can is being done."

U. S. PROBES PLOT IN PIER BLAZE

New York.—Local and Federal authorities are cooperating to trace the origin of the mysterious $5,000,000 fire in the Atlantic Basin at the foot of Pioneer street, Brooklyn, early yesterday.

Two large ocean steamships, chartered to carry munitions of war to the Allies, were partially destroyed, while another was badly damaged. Thirty-seven lighters, with their cargoes and a 900-foot pier, piled to the roof with merchandise, were consumed.

Two Government investigations are under way. One is in charge of Captain William Offley, head of Department of Justice agents in this city. The other is being prosecuted by Special Deputy Lamb, of the Neutrality Squad of the Customs Service.

They are in possession of information that the fire was preceded by explosions and spread so rapidly as to confirm suspicion it was of incendiary origin.

After an all-day investigation by Chief Fire Marshal Brophy, Fire Commissioner Adamson last night said no evidence of incendiarism had been discovered. He declared that the fire was due to defective electric wiring.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS ARE TO HONOR MEMORY OF GEN. WASHINGTON

It remains for at least one fraternal organization in this city to observe, in an elaborate way, the anniversary of the birth of the father of our country, General George Washington, which will be done by the Knights of Columbus, Tuesday, February 22, evening, in the club rooms, Oneida st.

There will be no booming of cannon, no firing of crackers and no loud noises of any kind to mark the celebration, but simply a quiet get-together spirit of about 300 Knights, who will sit around a dinner table, listen to addresses from the lips of eloquent speakers, and music—vocal and instrumental—delivered by the K. of C. orchestra. The event will be strictly informal—a fact that adds to its attractiveness, celebrating as it does the birth of the great American patriot.

The large hall will receive careful attention by the committee on decorations, and the speakers will do all in their power to admonish the audience to emulate the good points in the life of the man in whose honor the event is to be held. This dinner promises to be a leader among the many that have been held in the past by the Knights and for that matter, in the history of Fulton. It is the desire of the committee that reservations shall be made at once, so that no one may suffer disappointment at the last moment.

The menu is in charge of a committee, comprising Messrs. D. M. Sullivan, William E. McCormick, J. W. Branche, George B. Moore, J. H. Connors and William Watson .

Messrs. Frank Massaro, A. E. Krause and Edward Welsh, will furnish thev ocal music, and Professor David Carroll may preside at the piano.

Mr. D. M. Sullivan will hold the interest of the banqueters by presiding at the table, and responses are to be made by the Rev. Timothy Howard, of Oswego, Rev. John L. Lindsman and Professor James E. [illegible], both of this city.

Fall of Erzerum Lays Open Paths for Russians

London—The fall of Erzerum, which had been confidently awaited since the news of the taking by the Russian forces of nine of the eighteen forts guarding the gateway to Asia Minor, is the cause of great elation in Petrograd.

Controlling the roads through Armenia, with access to Trebizond, Tabriz and Mesopotamia, the capture of Erzerum is calculated to have immence strategic importance in the Russian campaign in the Caucasus, and it will indirectly affect the Balkan campaign by relieving thep ressure on the Allies at Salonica.

The conviction entertained by all Russian military observers that Erzerum ultimately would be forced to capitulate was based on the face that the remaining nine forts were of considerably less importance than those already in Russian hands and could be readily flanked or even ignored in forcing the evacuation of the Turkish stronghold.

In spite of the intense cold and deep snow the Russian troops took Kop Mountain by storm and dealth the Turks the first staggering blow. Having driven them from this position, the Russian artillery broke through the flanked the other positions, which went like a house of cards, the result of the Russian onslaught exceeding all expectations.

The Cascasian campaign derived great benefit from the Russian domination of the Black Sea, which enabled the army to receive a plentiful supply of provisions and munitions. The number of men garrisoning the Turkish position before the recent retreat of the Turkish army was estimated at 80,000. These numbers are believed to have been considerably augmented by the falling back of the Turks upon this position.

It was before Erzerum that the Russians suffered defeat in the Russo-Turkish war. Since then a strong line of forts has been constructed on the ridge in front of the city, greatly strengthening the position. The failure of the efforts to stop the Russian onslaught along this ridge is pointed to as evidence of the vast recent improvement in the Russian artillery.

That war has not been declared on waterway improvements is the assertion of former Senator Burton, with particular reference to the defeat of the river and harbor bill in the upper house last year. The ex-senator argues that wasteful appropriations in $50,000 and $100,000 bunches have led to a conservative policy. If is suggested that all the expenditure for waterway repairs and improvements should be considered and provided for as one appropriation. In this way broad discussion and thorough illumination would be invited and worthy improvements could be made promptly. Under the piecemeal plan it seems that one improvement, that of James river, has been thirty years in getting two-fifths finished. At that rate the work is barely done when it becomes necessary to expend the same amount of money again on the same job, with a vast increase, probably, to meet new conditions.

Brand Whitlock and Henry Holt find fault with the drift of American literature. It is too trivial, inartistic and insincere. The writers do not give the readers the best that is in them, but write to meet a false standard. This standard is set by magazine editors and publishers merely having an eye to immediate sales and profits. It is a sharp indictment. The fact that the current output sells and is read cannot be denied. Perhaps a wholesome deduction could be drawn from knowledge of which of the numerous varieties are most read and best liked. But that knowledge is diffi- 't to obtain.

The neutral world may as well settle down to a term of five years more of the terrific strife. observes the Baltimore American, unless Germany shall make overtures that will place an imperative moral responsibility upon the allies to desist. Germany can be counted up to keep up the war to the end of its resources if the way of peace is blocked.

CONSIDER THE POSTAGE STAMP

The Evening Times is in receipt today of a communication bearing no name, but written evidently by a person familiar with conditions in Jackson, Michigan. Also it is evident that the writer of the letter was inspired by reference in yesterday's issue to the commission-manager governed Michigan city. Included in the anonymous communication is the question: "Why does The Evening Times persist in sticking to a proposition that is a dead one—commission-manager form of government." Continuing his remarks, the writer predicts dire disaster for this city in the event of another campaign in behalf of a modern form of government for this city.

In reply to the anonymous writer we refer to old Josh Billings' advice to his son: "Consider the postage stamp. Its usefulness consists in its ability to stick to one thing until it gets there." There is both wit and wisdom in the quotation—homely though it may be. IIt is the 'here's how" of the language. Who can give a better way of accomplishing a thing than by sticking like a postage stamp to it.

By way of making further reply to the anonymous writer, we quote from a recent issue of The Indianapolis News, as follows:

"The institute for public service has taken the case of Jackson, Mich., with 35,000 population, as an illustration of what good may be accomplished under the commission-manager form of government when rightly conducted. One year ago Jackson turned over its affairs to a manager and a commission. A deficit of $20,000 carried for years, has been done away with. The city's net indebtedness has been reduced $50,000. Ten thousand dollars' worth of service in addition to that provided for in the budget has been supplied, and there is a cash balance of $10,000, exclusive of the sinking fund. Yet the tax rate was not raised.

"Jackson has made a better record than Dayton. The city's health was greatly improved. Relief work was consolidated so as to avoid duplications. One day a month for rest was provided for firemen without weakening the service. New boulevard lights were installed. Municipal employes were taken out of politics. The city's income was increased when $383,000 of property, formerly escaping taxation, was returned to the rolls. Purchasing agents did all the buying for the city departments. The city water system was improved, and an effort was made to prevent waste. Sanitary inspection was made efficient for the first time. Plans were prepared to rebuild the entire sewer system.

"The list of achievements is long, and to the dweller in the ordinary politically controlled city it reads like fction. It seems that the manager only attempted to place the city's finances on a business basis. This made necessary many changes and improvements. In making purchases advantage was always taken of the cash discount, and in buying coal the heat unit and ash basis was followed instead of the named quality or amount; thus a considerable sum of money was saved. The time may come when larger municipalities will become convinced that it is just as economical for them as for smaller places to conduct their business scientifically."

THE NEW CONVERT

At the end of the revival season the pastor and the deacons and the lesser pillars of the church look over the list of converts and speculate on who among them will stand fire and who will go back to the fleshpots and to the leeks and onions of the heathen. It is well known fact that conversion, like vaccination, doesn't always "take." That is, the conversion may seem to be genuine and the convert may feel that he could fight the Lord's hardest battles and never flinch, but like Peter of old, he turns coward on the first show of danger and falls into the arms of the enemy.

So there is always more or less shrinkage in every crop of converts, and when the revival closes it can be counted on to a moral certainty that there are some who will not have the courage to stand up and be counted. And when one of these weak-kneed and wobbly mortals slips out of the side door and re-joins the ungodly multitude on the outside, the pillars of the church take it as a matter of course and charge the desertion up to profit and loss.

We haven't much patience with those who will not stand fire for a good cause, but sometimes there seems to be a preety fair excuse for the new convert's taking to the wood's. The matter of taking on church obligations is not and should not be a one-sided affair. The new convert has a right to expect the church to be as good as it looks and as good as it pretends to be. He has a right to expect that the pillars of the church shall be solid oak throughout and not merely so many pieces of veneered furniture. He has a right to expect that those who talked and prayed him into the church shall talk and pray to keep him there and shall make him feel that he is both welcome and wanted. He has a right to expect that those who make profession of religion on Sunday shall practice it during the other six days of the week, and especially on election day.

The man who vetoes his prayers with his ballot should be kept away from the new convert until all danger of infection is passed. The new convert has a right to expect a great many things from the church and it is up to the church to make good.

There is not much good in holding revivals unless the church warms up to the new convert and not only makes him think, but proves to him beyond all reasonable doubt, that christianity is all and more than the church claims for it. It pays to be square with the new convert and to deliver the goods that were bargained for. If the new convert gets away before his religion "takes" there is probably a reason. The church that leaves it all to the evangelist or the pastor, will never make a success in holding the new convert.—Danville (Ill.) Press.

A BROKEN HEART

(Song)

By I. E. Hyde

It was just a broken heart
By the pathway of life
That had strived to do it's part
But had failed in the strife,
It was crushed by human scorn,
Battered, seared, cast away
Just a heart that had been torn
By the tongues of yesterday.

Now a pilgrim passing by
Hears the heart sadly moan,
It was just a human cry
Of a soul he had known
Hear the Christ of Calvary
Who had died in the mart,
Pouring out His sympathy—
"Come to me, broken heart."

MAIL ORDER COMPETITION

Retail merchants of Seneca Falls believe they can check the inroads of the mail-order houses in that vicinity. At a recent meeting representatives of various business houses spent several hours working out plans for their campaign.

Among other things, the Seneca Falls men decided to get samples of some of the articles which are used by mail-order houses as leaders, and display them, for the purpose of comparison by the side of similar articles sold by local merchants. It is maintained that when postage and money order charges are considered, an article which is sold for a certain sum by a mail-order house cannot be equal in value to a similar article sold by a local merchant for the same price. Seneca Falls men intend to prove this to the satisfaction of all concerned.

It is said that 600 catalogues were distributed recently in Seneca Falls by one mail-order house.—Batavia News.

MUDDLED STATE TAXATION

The report of the joint Legislative committee recommending a State tax on incomes frankly states that it is not proposed as a means of raising additional revenue, but as a substitute for the personal property tax.

It cannot be denied that the latter is easily evaded by persons who should pay most and falls with relentless force upon the weak and defenceless. The personal property tax is archaic and ridiculous, and the methods of taxation in this State are unsystematic, unscientific —a wretched jumble.

They certainly cannot be rectified by the imposition of an undiscriminating tax on incomes, which would be double taxation, inasmuch as the federal tax gatherer is already taking toll of incomes regardless of whether they are derived from inherited wealth or earned by the labor of brain or hand.

As the suggestion of the Mills committee is confessedly not calculated to produce additional revenue, there is no reason why it should be seriously considered by the Legislature. It is merely a contribution to the voluminous existing literature on an interesting subject.—N. Y. Herald.

LETTING FOODSTUFFS ROT ON THE FARMS

Farmers are in no way responsible for the "high cost of living." That is the reply of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture to the charge that the present prices are due to the determination of the agriculturists to get more for their products. The secretary of the board further says that prices are so low that during the past season "thousands of tons of perfectly good foodstuffs were left rotting in the fields" because the farmers "could not get enough to pay even the cost of harvesting and shipping, to say nothing of the cost of production." City residents, as a matter of fact, find altogether too few bargains in foodstuffs. But the statement as to crops rotting on the ground need not be doubted and, unfortunately, New Jersey is not the only state in which good material is wasted.

Letting foodstuffs spoil is a practice peculiar to America. In countries like Denmark, Belgium and Holland such waste is not tolerated. —Providence Journal.

COST OF COURTS

Jefferson county is agitated over the cost of jury trials. At a recent term of court at Watertown 13 cases were tried by jury and the average cost was $140.70 per case. That is not an extraordinarily high average. It costs the county a great deal of money to pay jurors, court attendants, and other court expenses.

The expense that is complained of, however, is the waste due to lawyers being unprepared to go ahead with cases. Although there may be 50 or 60 cases on the court calendar, it is not unusual that not a single one of them will be prepared for trial. A jury list of 40 or 50 men will be on hand, and the county must pay them $2 or $3 each for their presence in court as well as their mileage. When a case is on trial all the jurors not in the jury box may be excused during the trial, and that, of course, saves money. But whenever a juror has been called to court, even for a small part of the day, he is rightfully allowed compensation. The expense comes in where jurors are called to court and find nothing to do.

It is sometimes arranged so that the lawyers having cases at the head of the calendar may come to an agreement as to which shall go to trial on the first day, but that is not a common practice, nor does it work with entire satisfaction.

It has been suggested that when a lawyer causes a postponement he should pay a fine, but his client would have to pay it ,and the clients aren't ordinarily responsibile for the delay.

Responsibility rests largely upon the judges, for it has been observed that when the court speaks out on the subjects and demands action, he gets it.—Utica Observer.

FRANCE'S MOST IMPORTANT DISTRICT

The Nord department, all but a few square miles of whose coast lands is in the possession of the enemy is in agricultural and industrial importance the first department of France. In this department, and the departments of the Pas-de-Calais, Meuse and Muerthe-et-Moselle are the great metal-working plants of the French, the huge Pittsburgh and Cleveland mills, foundries and machine works of that country. In these departments, further, is a great part of the land's textile industry, the cotton, woolen and linen weaving, the working of lace and embroidery, the weaving of carpets, and dyeing. Flour mills, brick kilns, distillers, glass works, pottery works, shoe and hat factories, tobacco factories, and large plants for the production of hardware, enamelel iron hollow ware and edge tools are strewn through this thickly populated section in profusion. In thes hops situated within these departments most of the French cabinet work is done, and here, near by the best fields, much of the French sugar is refined.

Moreover, here, where is the greatest industrial development, is, also, the most intensive agriculture. Neighboring Belgians have not brought their farms up to a higher standard of production than has been reached by the fields of these northern French departments. Everywhere throughout this region, where there are no mines and factories, smiling gardens and fertile, well-cultivated farms take their place. All of the cereals, sugar beets, fruits, hops, tobacco, flax and large droves of cattle are grown upon them. Some of the best known dairies of France are in this territory.

The stretch of a bare 10,000 square miles with its population of 4,000,000, its bounteous agriculture, its rich coal and iron mines, and its teeming manufacture, is one of the most important districts in all Europe. Some idea of its richness can be had from the fact that while the average per acre value for all France is about $150 that of these northern departments is $235.—Buffalo Times.

THEY LOVED TEACHER SO MUCH SHE FLED

Had So Many Proposals of Marriage She Couldn't Stand It.

Oroville, Cal.—Miss Dorothy Jones, who has been teaching school near here, has thrown up her job. The schools of the Kanak Peak district can go teacherless so far as she is concerned. She handed her ultimatum to the school board, and since her demands were not met she has quit, resigned and fled.

In her communication to those who hold the destinies of the Kanak Peak youngsters in their calloused palms Miss Jones says that a man is needed. During the four months in which she has been wielding the chalk to improve the budding native sons they have learned one thing well—the art of proposing. Sixteen of them have suggested that Miss Jones abide permanently in Kanak Peak and change her name to something less commonplace than Jones.

It got so that every time one of the ardent pupils raised his hand the teacher feared he was about to pop the fatal question. When it came to adding up a column of figures the Kanak Peak boys were not there, but at proposing they were unanimously present. Miss Jones admits that she can stand it no longer. There is a limit to everything, she avers. To be a successful schoolteacher in Kanak Peak, she says, one must have a husky husband near by or else be a man.

West Virginia Man May Have Found a New Health Cult.

Wheeling, W. Bleifus has not only gone hatless for two years, but he has gone coatless. In all kinds of weather he has gone about without hat, coat or overcoat, and he has not been sick during that time.

Bleifus is a big strapping fellow not yet out of his teens and with his brothers conducts a meat market. He is regarded as one of the finest specimens of physical manhood in the city. Bicycle riding induced him to shed surplus clothing. He found hats and coats cumbersome and superfluous, got out of the habit of wearing them and then passed them up altogether.

Four-year-old Ran Two Miles For Aid For Injured Parents.

Springfield, Mo.—Members of Florence lodge of Elks of this city have forwarded to the Carnegie hero fund commission at Pittsburgh the name of four-year-old Cleta Comstock, who lives near Cabool, Mo., as deserving of recognition for an act of heroism.

Cleta was the only one not hurt when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Comstock, her baby sister and herself were hurled from a wagon in a runaway accident in the timber near their home. The wagon collided with a tree. Both legs of both parents were broken, and the baby was bruised. Cleta ran two miles through the dark woods to the home of the nearest neighbor and summoned help. The accident occurred last November. The father and mother have recently been released from the hospital.

SPAIN'S KING WINS PRINCESS' LIBERTY

Austrian Army Head's Daughter and Spouse Get Freedom.

WERE PRISONERS OF BRITISH

Through King's Kind Offices Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm and Her Husband, Imprisoned at Gibraltar, Have Been Exchanged—All Previous Efforts to Free Them Were Failures.

Madrid.—Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm, the eldest daughter of Archduke Frederick, commander in chief of the Austro-Hungarian army, who, with her husband, has been a prisoner of war in the hands of the British, is to be given her liberty, her husband likewise to be freed, this being the latest knight errantry of the king of Spain.

When war was declared in August, 1914, the prince and princess were in South Africa on a hunting trip, the first time they had ever been so far from home. They were at once arrested and placed in a concentration camp, later sent to Gibraltar in captivity after months of negotiations between the American ambassadors in London and Berlin with the British government.

All efforts to obtain freedom for them to return home were failures. The prince is of military age, a man in his early forties, a very competent cavalry officer in the Prussian army as well as in the Austrian army and, besides, a person of great official importance. He is to be exchanged, it is reported, for Colonel Gordon, a special friend of Lord Kitchener, who was captured some time ago by the Germans.

Princess Emmanuel of Salm-Salm was the Archduchess Marie Christina of Austria, and her bad luck in this war, which was brought on by the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, is a curious coincidence since she was the wife selected for the archduke by Emperor Francis Joseph. He fell in love with Countess Sophia von Chotek, lady in waiting in the household of Archduke Frederick, and the royal lady was jilted. Her marriage to Prince Salm-Salm has nevertheless been a happy one. They were married in Vienna fourteen years ago and have five children, three girls and two boys, who will be glad to see their parents after a separation of nearly two years since they left their castle in Westphalia.

It was at first reported that the prince captured by the British was the son of Prince Felix of Salm-Salm, who married the American actress, Miss Agnes Leclercq of Baltimore. He came to the United States during the civil war, having had some experience in both the German and Austrian armies, and President Lincoln gave him a commission as brigadier general. He was killed at the battle of Gravelotte, having returned to Germany for the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. His widow died at Karlsruhe in December, 1913, as Mrs. Charles Heneage, having made a second marriage in 1876, but spending most of her life in Germany. Her marriage with the prince was never recognized by his family, she never had the legal right to be called Princess Salm-Salm, and she left no son who assumed that title.

Kansas City.—Not until his six-year-old grandson took him in charge did Peter Franklin McCubbin of Virginia, eighty-two years old, ride on a railroad train. He passed through this city recently with the grandson, Morris Williamson, on the way to Salt Lake City, where he will live with his daughter, Morris' mother.

At the Union station Mr. McCubbin showed a keen interest in things around him and said he had enjoyed his trip a great deal.

"It wasn't because I was afraid of trains that I didn't ride on them," he said. "I just never had occasion to go anywhere I couldn't drive.

"I raised a family of eight children and, although they all insisted, I never went to see any of them. They usually came home once a year and saved me the trouble. My wife traveled considerably, considering, and one of my daughters has been to Europe, but I always got along fine on the farm. When I got tired there I would hitch up and drive to Pittsville, and if the conversation there didn't suit me I would drive over to Eldredge, twenty miles away."

WARN LEAP YEAR GIRLS TO AVOID FLAT HEADED MEN.

Phrenologist Also Tells Them to Carefully Inspect Lips.

To all daughters of Eve who have leap year intentions the vocational guide and well known bachelor, William J. Kibby of Cleveland, O., offers advice concerning the habits, characteristics and dispositions of various sorts of men, which is intended to help the girls win their hearts' desires without suffering rebuff in the process. A good deal of what Kibby says is based upon phrenology.

A man who has thin, straight lips is branded a cold blooded, stony hearted creature, upon whom the dearest girl's appeal would have no effect. This sort of man will do his own proposing, run his own wedding and rule his household, and he'll do it more with his head than his heart. But if the man of your choice has full, well formed lips Kibby says you may depend upon his capacity for and inclination to love. He also is susceptible to the right sort of feminine approach.

Kibby says the way to tell whether the one you love loves you is by the coloring of the under lip when he is with you. Every human emotion gives some physical demonstration when it is aroused. The evidence that love has been aroused is given by the deep crimsoning of the under lip. If his under lip is perpetually pale when he is with you he doesn't love you. If it is crimson and you want him, grab him quick; he won't run.

A man with a broad, square, massive forehead is a good business man. He can plan ahead, has good business judgment. If the crown of his head is high and round he is absolutely conscientious, too, and if the back of his head is well rounded out he will love his home, his wife and his children and show them consideration above everything else in the world. The man whose head is flat on top, flat and almost even with his ears in the back and narrow and foreshortened on the front, whose lips are thin, whose eyes are cold, will not make a good husband in any sense of the word, says Kibby. The longer a man's jawbone the greater his capacity for affection, according to Kibby.

All these things are as applicable to women as to men, in the expert's opinion.

TESTING GREATEST CABLE.

New Design Stands Pull of 746,000 Pounds Without Breaking.

A section of the largest hoisting cable in the world, made under a new design, withstood a pull of 746,000 pounds in a tension test at Lehigh university, South Bethlehem, Pa.

The cable was designed for use in the Mayari mines, in Cuba, of the Spanish-American Iron company and will be attached to fifty ton ore cars operating on an inclined plane of more than a mile, with a grade of 25 per cent.

In addition to the high strength demonstrated in the Lehigh test, the new cable is expected to have superior wearing quality because of its design, which includes six strands of thirty-seven wires and an independent wire rope center.

DANISH PRINCE TO WORK ON A FARM

Erik, King's Cousin, to Study Advanced Methods.

EXPECTS TO DROP ALL RANK

Wishes to Learn Scientific Agriculture So as to Help Both Himself and the People of Denmark—Son of Ranking Admiral and Is Young and Democratic—Likes a Simple Life.

New York.—When the Scandinavian American liner Hellig Olav made her way into quarantine a pleasant faced young man stood beside her rail, peering through a mist and trying to get a glimpse of the quarantine station that loomed indistinct and shadowy off the port bow. Almost as the vessel let go her anchor to await the arrival of the health officer of the port the coast guard cutter with the customs officials nosed a way out of the fog.

On the cutter were Georg Bech, Danish consul in New York, and Dudley Field Malone, collector of the port. They were on board to welcome to the United States Prince Erik of Denmark, son of Prince Waldemar and cousin of the King of Denmark. The prince was the smiling young man on the steamer's deck.

The cutter ran alongside, and as the officials started up the ladder an officer of the Hellig Olav appeared and "presented the skipper's compliments," but told reporters, photographers and moving picture men that they were not to be allowed on board. He was unmoved by their protestations and the cutter, with a disappointed crowd on board, backed away into the fog. The ship's officer smiled as he gravely touched the visor of his cap.

There was no wait for customs officials to examine the prince's trunks, for the courtesy of free entry had been extended to the royal visitor. Prince Erik was described by his fellow passengers as having pleasant and democratic manners. He was popular with the cabin passengers. His traveling companion is Johannes Plum, a friend. The prince, instead of traveling incognito, as European royalty sometimes does, registered at a hotel here as "Prince Erik of Denmark."

The prince intends to study scientific farming as it is carried on in America and to drop all rank and to settle down to the life of a real farmer. He speaks English, for he has lived two years on a farm in East Gloucestershire, England, where he made his home with a gentleman farmer and lived in a simple way.

Erik is the son of the ranking admiral of the Danish navy. His mother was Princess Marie of Orleans. He has a brother who is also devoting his life to agricultural pursuits.

DISAPPROVAL OF LAND BANK LAW

Savings and Loan Associations Benefited, According to Rochester Leader in Mutual Societies.

The New York Land Bank act, which provides for furnishing farmers of the state with loans for long terms at 3 per cent. has seriously impaired the safety of the system by which savings and loan associations operated and has given thefarmer little or no help, according to an article by R. Ingalls in the February issue of the Journal of the American Bankers Association.

The Homestead Loan Association of Rochester is a member of the Land Bank. George W. Thomas, is treasurer andattorney of the association, and is am ember oft he Supervisory Committee of theb ank. He takes exception to every particular to the article written by Mr. Ingalls,

"The legislators," says Mr. Ingalls 'have inaugurated a ruinous scheme of centralization by creating one large institution and by empowering it to pyramid upon the credit of the association and to utilize their other resources. This institution ,the Land Bank of the State of New York, has permanent headquarters in New York.

Censure of Land Bank

"It does not possess the essential elements of co-operation or even of thrift; and yet its organic act has superimposed it upon co-operative thrift, savings and loan asociations, and, in order to bring it into existence destroyed their characterizing features and abolished their statutory safeguards. Savings and loan associations for encouraging thrift and assisting home-building no longer exist as such in New York, as a matter of law.

"A New York association has ceased to be a co-operative thrift society, since it is no longer financed exclusively by members' savings, but may be financed by money coming from the outside. Moreover, it is no longer automatically safe, because it can incur heavy debts and contract liabilities with outside parties. The right which an association formerly had, to obtain a small advance in an emergency, has been enlarged to a borrowing power. If it should avail itself of this power and the other provisions of the new law, an association could encumber itself with debt up to 210 per cent. ofi ts total resources and involveits assets and credits in liabilities to outside parties—to the creditors and bondholders of the Land Bank—which might run for forty years and amount to millions of dollars."

Criticism Called Mistaken

"Mr. Ingalls seems to have a very erroneous idea of the character and object of the Land Bank of this state," said Mr. Thomas. "It was organized and is conducted under the direction and supervision of the State Banking Department and its principal object is to furnish quick and easy money ot associations in which the demands of its members for loans exceed its receipts.

"Sixty of the principal saving and loan associations of New York state are members of the bank. It has been capitalized for $100,000, which is fully paid in. Under the provisions of the Land Bank act, farmers may borrow money on their farms for periods up tof ortyyears. Those mortgages, approved by the individual associations, are deposited with the state comptroller, asp rovided for by the bank law, and the Land Bank officials are permitted to issue debenture bonds foramounts covering the mortgages. In this manner the public is given an opportunity to purchase bonds secured by first mortgages on farms, the values of which are fixed by members of savings association well acquainted with property values in their respective communities.

"Mr. Ingall's assertions exhibit an absence of knowledge of the law governingthe operation of the bank and its practical working. The Land Bank is in no sense a savnigs and loan association, is not intended to perform and does not perform any of the functions, and does not in any way intertion, and doesn ot in any way interfere with the operation of any savings and loan association connected with it. It has not destroyed any of their characteristic features or abolished their statutory safeguards.

"Savings and loan associations for encouraging thrift and home-owning exist in New York today as sound and thrifty as they have for thelast half century, and will continue to exist without doubt for centuries to come, aiding the thrifty and encouraging the systematic habit of saving and home-getting, and providing for the present and future.

"The Land Bank is an aid to their operations and stands in practically the same relation to the savings and loan associations of this State as the Reserve Bank of the United States does to the banking institutions of the United States. It enables them to obtain money readily at all times at a low rate of interest and for as long a term as they need it. The expenditure of the money is governed and controlled in all its details by the state Banking Department.

"The savings and loan asociations are not and never were financed exclusively by their members; they have always had by law, and have exercised, thep ower to borrow money from private sources, and they have not ceased to be co-operative, thrifty organizations. Their safety and security is, if anything, enhanced by their connection with the Land Bnak, which enables them to meet their financial obligations in times of need.

'Thef unds of these asociations are all invested in bonds and mortgages upon realp roperty,to be repaid in small periodical amounts. At times it happens that thed emand for ready money exceeds their income and then it is that the Land Bank comes to the rescue and readily converts their securities into cash, so that they can promptly satisfy all thed emands on them.

"The Lank Bank has just distributed $50,000 among the savings associations of thes tate Another distribution of $150,000 will be made soon. The Homestead Association will begin this week, for the first time, to make loans with funds obtained from the bank."

JUDGE WILSON AS AN UMPIRE

Judge H. J. Wilson, and not Editor A. P. Bradt, will be master of ceremonies at the Odd Fellows' smoker, to be held Monday evening, February 21. While the Judge's services as a speaker are in demand at all times—in and out of Court—he will not upon this occasion conform to a set speech. Everything is promised to be informal, which is to the Judge's liking—giving him ac hance to be at his best. But the Judge is not to have all the say, as Messrs. John Painter, sr., R. E. Crandall, W. H. Spanswick, Grove Seymour, Fred Vogelgsang and E. P. Cole are preparing a line of defence.

It is apparent that the smoker will prove a successful venture, as a majority of the invitations sent out by the committee have received responses, some of them coming from Syracuse and Oswego. Quite a number of members of old Neahtawanta who are in receipt of invitation cards are tardy about making reply, and these men are urged to get busy at once, so that Mr. Fred Ure may know before retiring to bed tomorrow night just how many do or do not intend to eat and smoke to their heart's content.

The musical program promises to be a winner, for in addition to a Diamand Disc, there will be a quartet there to sing, comprising stars of the first magnitude. Grand opera singers barred from singing at this event.

THERMO-SYPHON COOLING SYSTEM

The Haynes Light Six, Sold by E. M. Ellis of Minetto, Rejects the Centrifugal Idea

"There is a great deal of difference between the thermo-syphon and the centrifugal pump methods of cooling the water in an automobile engine," states Mr. E. M. Ellis, of Minetto, distributor for The Haynes Light Six.

"In both systems the water in the water-jackets takes up the heat from the engine cylinders. The hot water then passes into the radiator at the front of the car, where it it cooled and subsequently passes again to the water-jackets of the engine. It there absorbe more of the heat from the cylinders and again returns to the radiator for cooling.

"If this circulation is rapid and constant, there will never be trouble from overheating of the motor. But if the circulation is sluggish and slow the water will not cool rapidly, which will result in an overheated motor and consequent motor troubles.

'The thermo-syphon depends entirely upor the relative weights of hot and cold water for circulation. The cold water, being slightly heavier, will displace the hot water in the cylinder-jackets, pushing it up into the top of the radiator. When it, in turn, has become heated by the engine it will slowly pass up into the top of the system being displaced by the cold water from the bottom of the radiator.

"This natural circulation necessitates a radiator of very large capacity and also large water-jackets and pipes so that the rather uncertain flow of water will not be impeded by small water spaces. This means heavier construction of the parts and heavier weight of water to be carried.

"When the motor is working hard and efficient cooling is absolutely necessary the hot water does not move rapidly enough to cool the engine. This is because the more uniformly hot the water becomes the slower the circulation, due to the smaller difference in weight

"When a pump is employed to facilitate the movement of the water, the entire cooling system may be made lighter because less water is needed, so that the pipes, radiator and jackets around the cylinders may be made smaller. The pump is driven by mechanical connection with the engine crankshaft, so that as the speed, and consequent heating, of the motor increases, the circulation of the water becomes more energetic and the cooling more efficient." adv.

LONG ISLAND THE SCENE OF "PRINCESS PAT"

Victor Herbert's new operetta, "The Princess Pat," which will be heard at the Quirk theatre Tuesday evening, February 29th, has scored a success. The new piece is produced under the auspices of John Cort. The book and lyrics are by Henry Blossom. The Princess di Montaldo, who was before her mariage Patrice O'Connor, plays with fire in order to incite her rather luke-warm husband to more affectionate demonstration. In this particular case, the object of her wiles is a rich old German, Anthony Schmalz. Here arises the usual complications, Bob Darrow, while playing the confederate to the Princess, succeeds in bringing together his friend and the latter's sweetheart, thus frustrating a marriage of convenience with the Elder Schmalz, into which the sweetheart would have been led but for his timely aid.

It all takes place on Long Island. The music is the ca llof life and youth the night to merriment and the banishment of sorrow. In the cast are Ruth Welch, Paul Nicholson, Phillip H. Ryley, Earl Benham, Effie Toye, Edward Metcalf, Ben Hendricks, Georgio Sregario and Tots Marks.

MAIN FEATURES OF MILLS BILL

No Recognition Given Single Tax Theories—Sliding Scale Upon All Incomes In This State.

The report of the Mills Committee to consider the taxation question in this state has now been presented to the Legislature and it recommends an income tax in place of the present taxes on personal property and on business corporations.

The Mills plan taxes the income of corporations three per cent, and a sliding scale upon all income derived in this state. Non-residents are taxed for incomes earned here. Unmarried residents are allowed $1,500 exemption; married residents $1,800 exemption and $100 additional exemption for each child under 18 years up to a total exemption of $2,000.

There are many experts in taxation who believe that the single tax will be the only fair solution of the tax problem, and it is strange that the Mills Committee ignores the doctrines of Henry George in its conclusions.

The objections to the bill which has now been introduced are so numerous they will probably not come forth in their full meaning until the measure has been debated.

Governor In Opposition

It is said in Albany that Governor Whitman is opposed to the bill, and that some of the oldtime politicians will favor it in order to handicap the governor in his quest for renomination. We cannot see where it will harm Governor Whitman to oppose such a measure. On the contrary if he is opposed to it he will gain strength the longer the matter is argued.

We already have a federal income tax. The plan of the Mills Committee to add a state income tax that will go still lower down the scale in reaching for sources will surely be very unpopular, nd the burden upon the proponents is very heavy, because they will have to show that the proposal is really as fair as they claim.

It is evident to the small salaried man who will be subject to taxation if this bill goes through that he will surely have to meet his proportionate share, because his income is his salary and is easily determined. On the other hand the menof big incomes will have clever lawyers to show them the way to dodge, to transfer possible sources of income to other states, to earn incomes outside of the bounds of this state, and other wise to pay taxes upon a minimum earning, not upon the entire sum which such individuals will really accumulate.

Discouraging Features

A study of thep rovisions of the proposed tax measure shows that it is merely lifting burdens now spread over men who are earning only moderate pay, and its main effect will be to discourage men who are striving to get into the class that lays by a small annual saving to create the fund that is to take care of the individual in old age.

The man who is earning $1,500 or $2,000 needs his money far more urgently than the man who is earning $5,000, $10,000 and upwards. Practically all the income of the minimum size is used up for living expenses, insurance and very moderate savings for old age, Incomes above $3,000 (that is the federal exemption) are able to meet the demand of taxation in increasing ratio. Payment of taxes from such latter incomes entails no actual hardship.

"The income tax reaches everyone in accordance with his ability to pay," says Senator Mills, but that depends upon the type of income tax proposed. We cannot see that the Mills bill meets that assertion in any way. The minimum is set too low.

Thed iscussion to ensue when the Mills bill is reported to the Legislature, should it ever reach that stage, will merit the attention of all citizens.

MANY EXPERTS GAVE EVIDENCE

The trial of Mariano Pagone, alleged Black Hander, for blackmail, growing out of threats against the life of Joseph Cosentino, wealthy Oswego fruit dealer, was begun before Judge Coville in County Court yesterday The jury was drawn yesterday afternoon but the taking of testimony was not started until this morning.

This case is regarded as the most important resulting from the Black-Hand plot, as the prosecution considers Pagone the prime mover in the conspiracy to extract money from Cosentino. A letter in Italian received by thef ruit dealer in June, 1915, demanding $1,000 under penalty of death to himself and members of his family was offered in evidence today. The letter is signed with a crudely drawn skull and crossbones and a bleeding heart pierced by a dagger. The letter directs that the money be brought to a spot in West Utica st. within a certain time or Mr. Cosentino and his family would be blown up. It is claimed that the bomb explosion at the Cosentino house at West Fifth and Albany streets, late last October was the carrying out of this threat by the Black Handers.

Following an investigation of the plot by a detective from Buffalo, Pagonne (also known as Mariano Perry), Tony Pasco and Colgio Triana were arrested and held for the grand jury on charges of blackmail and conspiracy.

Albert H. Hamilton, expert in letter writing, finger print identification and chemical analysis, was on the stand for more than two hours and when adjournment was taken his direct-examination had not been completed. The expert went deeply into the proposition of handwriting and explained to the jury how the samples made by the defendant corresponded with the writing in the letter.

Mrs. Concetta Cosentino, wife of the fruit dealer, was the first witness to testify. She told of the receipt of the letter and of a visit of Pagone to her home at the request of her husband. Patrolman Frank Gillen, who was the next witness, told of the arrest of the three Italians.

Superintendent Shetland, head of the finger print and Bertillion Bureau of Auburn State Prison; Detective John Regan, head of the Bertillion Bureau of the Rochester Police Department; Frank B. Treadwell, assistant cashier of the Second National Bank, and C. J. McDowell, assistant cashier of the First National Bank, have been called into the case by the District-Attorney's office and will testify.

CONVERTS GIVE EXPERIENCES

Last night there was a largely increased congregation at the revival services held in the Free Methodist church. Miss Evangeline Crockett preached. She chose for her subject. "The Attraction of the Cross." using for her text, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John 12:32. After a selection by the quartet, the pastor gave the altar call to which four responded. In the testimony service which followed a recent convert gave an interesting account of how God had saved him from the tobacco habit. Miss Crockett said in part, "There is no person on earth but that at some time has felt Christ drawing him to himself. Some are attracted to Jesus Christ by admiration for his sinless life which they desire to imitate. They admire the greatness of the purpose for which he lived and died, which was to save the lost. The steel is irresistably drawn by the magnet, but not so with men. They can resist. Those who yield receive the benefits of the cross which drew them —a heart cleansed from sin and a deliverance from all evil habits." Miss Crockett will speak to the children Sunday at the Sunday school hour and will preach in the church at 3 p. m. Tonight Miss Sheldon will preach.

C. F. McDonald, editor of "The Lobster," a miniature newspaper, similar to "The Oyster" of Oswego, announces that the first issue will be circulated through the advertisers on Saturday. Mr. McDonald expresses confidence in the future of the publication, as the success attending the first issue is beyond all expectations.

Editor McDonald promises to give his readers a few side glimpes of the men in and around City Hall, which may bring smiles to their faces. Inasmuch as the paper upon which "The Lobster" is printed lacks stretching qualities, many quips andn ames may be omitted from the first issue; but no one should feel slighted, for in ways that are unexpected, "The Lobster" will catch on. If, however, there be a City Hall employe who has not won "The Lobster's" recognition, let that man seek consolation from Mr. Edward Rugg, assistant editor. ## $2,000,000 MUNITIONS SENT TO EUROPE DAILY

Washington— American made war munitions are now pouring into Europe at the rate of nearly $2,000,000 worth daily, with the figures swelling rapidly. Not until the middle of 1915 did war materials contracted for begin to move in considerable quantities.

Department of Commerce estimates today put total munitions shipments since the war began close to $250,000,000. At the present rate of shipment The next four months would see this total doubled even if production remained at a standstill but production is declared to be growing faster now than at any time since American manufacturers began turning their plants into munitions factories.

More than $100,000,000 worth of high explosive shells have left American shores. Powder comes next with shipments of nearly $100,000,000. Small arm cartridges are third with $30,000,000. Firearms, including ordnance, exports are put at less than $20,000,000.

OSBORNE TO PLEAD IN PERJURY CASE TODAY

Thomas Mott Osborne formerly warden of Sing Sing, is expected to plead to an indictment charging perjury in White Plains today. Consent for the entering of a plea was given by District Attorney Weeks to George Gordon Battle, representing Osborne.

The District Attorney also informed Mr. Battle that he expected to go to trial with the perjury charge next Monday.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

Yours for

THE FIRST VIOLIN

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Fraulein Bertha Hauck left Germany just before the breaking out of the pan-European war to come to America. She was to be followed by a lover, Gustav Schultz, a young musician. They were both of the more refined class of Germans, but not noble. Their finances were cramped, and it was impossible for them to marry and live among the people with whom they had been used to associate. In America they could earn a living as they would not like to earn it where they were known.

Bertha had enough money saved to enable her to cross the ocean, and it was decided that she should come over in advance of her lover, who was serving his time of military service, which would not expire for several months. Bertha was to look into the new country and, if possible, make an engagement for him with an orchestra. In this way they might be self supporting at once on Gustav's arrival.

Bertha arrived in New York, found friends who had come over years before and as soon as she had settled herself went out to look for an engagement for Gustav. She met the leader of an orchestra, who promised her that as soon as her lover arrived he would give him a trial. All was arranged, and the girl was expecting her lover to sail for New York when news came that Germany had declared war upon Russia, and the rush of German troops into Belgium commenced.

From that day forward the fraulein heard nothing of her lover. She knew that, since war had been declared, he would not be permitted to come away even if he had chosen to come. Then came news of the fighting in Belgium, followed by more than a year of warfare. Bertha heard nothing from Gustav nor from any of her relatives. She had no great expectation of hearing from her lover, but thought she should hear from her mother and sisters. That she did not was probably because the censorship had caused the destruction of letters that might have been mailed to her.

At last, after waiting a year, a letter came stating that Gustav had been reported among the missing several months before, and since nothing later had been heard from him he was undoubtedly dead.

Bertha mourned for him as lost. True, if he were dead his identification badge should have been found. But if a man is buried under tons of earth caused by explosion or blown into numerous fragments what good is an identification badge? Nevertheless the poor girl had a ray of hope that Gustav lived and that they would one day be reunited.

Bertha was very handy with her brush and had the faculty of designing cards and other things needed at social functions. In this way she made quite a snug sum of money and, being frugal, had held on to nearly all of it. She met a countryman of hers, an artist much older than herself, who paid her a great deal of attention and ended by proposing marriage. But Bertha's heart was with her lover, be he alive or dead, and she would not listen to any other man.

Bertha's friends endeavored to cheer her by trying to induce her to go about with them to amusements. She yielded so far as music and pictures were concerned, but would not go anywhere else. Finally by holding up to her the fact that many scenes of moving picture plays were beautiful they excited some interest in them. When they told her that pictures of scenes in the great European war were given she was only too ready to see them.

She had been a number of times to see pictures embodying military service when one night the marching to the French rear of a number of German prisoners was given. What was her astonishment to see, pale and haggard, a bandage on his forehead, walking on a crutch while he held up one foot, Gustav Schultz. She at once became hysterical and was taken out of the building.

When she became sufficiently calm to tell what had moved her, inquiries were made in her behalf as to the time the picture which included her lover had been taken. An approximate date was given and was found to be nearly coincident with that at which Gustav was reported missing.

Thinking it possible that her lover was alive and in a French hospital, Bertha determined to go and seek him. She crossed the ocean to England and from there went to Paris. At Paris she learned at what camp the prisoners taken in the fight after which Gustav was reported missing were interned, and there she went. Upon examining the rolls she found her lover's name as an inmate of a hospital.

One morning while Sergeant Schultz was lying on his cot reading a newspaper, an autumn sun shining at a near window, he heard a cry, and, looking up, there was Bertha staggering toward him with open arms. In another moment she had clasped him and he her in an embrace.

Schultz was expecting that if he was ever returned to Germany he would be discharged from the service, for his foot had been so shattered that he would never be able to walk upon it again except with difficulty. He had exchanged a good foot for the iron cross, which he considered a fair exchange. Bertha's story excited a good deal of interest and sympathy among the French officers, who finally obtained permission for Gustav to embark for America.

He is now in New York, first violinist in an orchestra.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Birds and the Railroads.

The crow gathers many a meal from the grain that is dropped from passing cars and has been strewn along railroad tracks. Owls in the long, cold nights of winter have been known to seek as favorite feeding places empty grain cars that have been placed on sidings, where there are usually mice to be found. These furnish the birds with their favorite article of food.

Bluejays, pigeons and sparrows all obtain a goodly supply of winter rations from grain elevators that are stationed all along railroads throughout the country, and the doughty English sparrow even enters grain cars whenever opportunity offers.

To the railroad tracks, which are the first places from which the snow disappears, the birds flock and find what a kindly Providence has ordered for them.

Quail and pheasants also obtain the necessaries of life from the roadbeds of railroads.

The water tanks at various points are never allowed to freeze, and many birds make a habit of drinking the water that trickles from such never failing sources of supply.

Homesick Crabs.

Who would suppose that the humble crab had an instinct for home? "Once under the water we might expect one part of the sea to be as homelike as another," says St. Nicholas, "but that shows how little the average human being understands the crab's point of view. Some one, however, suspected them of the homing instinct and, catching a pair on the Yorkshire coast of England, marked them and carried them south fifty miles or more, returning first one and then the other to the water at different points. Then the crabbers carefully watched their traps on the lookout for the possible return of the wanderers. Strange to say, one day not one, but both of the crabs were caught. They had made their way back to their Yorkshire home."

"The Day's Shopping."

"The day's shopping" is a very nice game for a party.

The players sit in a ring. The game is begun by one saying to the next:

"I've just come back from shopping."

"Yes," is the reply. "And what have you bought?"

The first speaker has to name some article which without leaving her seat she can touch, such as a pair of boots, a necktie, a watch chain or a bracelet. Having done so, the next player takes up the character of the shopper, and so on around the ring. No article must, however, be named twice, which means that when the game has gone on for a round or two the answers become very difficult to find.

"The Piercing Eyes."

The following game is called "Piercing Eyes" and is supposed to deal with magic.

A girl is blindfolded and locked in a vacant room, while her secret partner remains with the rest of the girls. The girls choose an article of furniture, and the blindfolded girl is brought back and asked by her partner what article has been chosen. The blindfolded girl answers no to all the questions asked until the one immediately following "Is it the leg of the table?" or "Is it the leg of the chair?" etc. The right article is always named after a question concerning the leg of some article of furniture.

"Stagecoach."

Every chair in the room is supposed to be occupied. Each player is given as a name the part of something on a coach, as axles, wheels, the lady on the box, the bandbox, etc. Then one player stands in the middle and starts a story about the ride that the lady took in the coach. Whenever the speaker mentions the axle or any one's name they must stand up and turn around three times. When she says, "Stagecoach," they all change their seats, and the one without a seat must continue the story.

Jumping Letters.

Jump the first letter backward to the end of the word and change the meaning completely.

1. Jump scornful laughter and find a wedding necessity.
2. Jump to show contempt and find afflictions of the feet.
3. Jump a store and find little jumps.
4. Jump a Scotchman and find beds.
5. Jump to decrease and find made over again.

Answers.—1, grin-ring; 2, scorn-corns; 3, shop-hops; 4, Scot-cots; 5, wane anew.

Boy Scout Signs.

A scout can make himself known to a brother scout wherever he may be by a method which only scouts can know. He has brothers in every city in the land and in every country in the world. Wherever he goes he can give his signs and be assured of a friendly welcome. He can talk with a brother scout without making a sound, or he can make known his message by imitating the click of a telegraph key.

Charade.

My first is domestic.
She loves the warm fire.
She's lazy and happy
When comfort is nigh her.

My second's a bite
Jack Frost gives your ear,
A gentle reminder
That winter is here.

My whole is an herb
Which my first loves quite well.
Just give her a mite of it;
Watch her delight of it,
How she will toss it, roll in it and smell
Answer—Cat, nip—catnip.

A Singular Case of Resurrection

By F. A. MITCHEL

The investigators of the Rockefeller institute may be very proud of themselves. Indeed, they have reason to be. They have substituted live parts of the human body for dead parts; they have set heart substance beating outside its proper place in a man's breast. If they keep on they may in time make a man out of parts of other men. But if the stories of what Indian fakirs have done in keeping persons alive in a comatose condition for many years is true these Rockefellers or scientific fellers or whatever they are have yet much to learn from an antique and apparently undeveloped civilization.

There is a story going the rounds among the undergraduates of a certain university which, if it can be substantiated, puts the modern scientific investigator to shame. Arnold Gereau, assistant professor of chemistry—he has charge of the laboratory—is one of those phenomena who spring up once in a century. He is very young, and it is well known that he was born with certain mental powers, a certain supernatural knowledge of things on which many a man has studied for a lifetime without making any progress whatever.

Wilbur Stockbridge, a member of the class of '15, so the story goes, one day went to Professor Gereau with a yellow bit of paper on which was written in old English style:

> This is the body of William Arbuckle, private in his majesty's —th foot. Captured in the patriot lines with maps showing our fortifications on the upper part of Manhattan Island. He was condemned for a spy. An Indian serving with the same regiment—he had joined it at Singapore—proposed to General Washington to put the man to sleep for an indefinite period instead of executing him. The general, who was averse to the execution, consented, and Arbuckle was turned over to the Indian, who claims that any time after fifty or even a hundred years life will still be in the body. But not one man in many millions will be able to effect a resurrection.

Young Stockbridge told the professor that in excavating for building purposes on the upper part of Manhattan Island on property owned by his family a tomb had been discovered containing the body of a man in British uniform of a former period. The paper had been found in the lead coffin in which the body had been buried.

Gereau—mind you, I don't vouch for this—arranged with the student to bring the find to the laboratory, which at the time was closed on account of the spring recess and would therefore be at the professor's individual disposal. No one has attempted to give the process by which Gereau manipulated the remains of Private Arbuckle, but it is claimed that he effected a resurrection. The professor avers that he worked on lines which are being followed by modern scientific investigators. He must have had an inkling of the method by which animation was suspended by the Indian or he would not have been able to restore it by reverse action, which, he says, he applied. He gives as a fundamental principle that the Indian knew how to suspend—not kill—the action of the heart, and Gereau restored the pulsations, which are the basis of animal life.

Whether the story is true or false there is one part of it that fits in with modern scientific investigation. It is said that Gereau found that certain members of the body had suffered from the long suspension of their functions. The resurrected man showed signs of decay, and the professor feared that, though he had remained in an ordinary condition of health for more than 130 years, he would die within a few hours after resurrection.

A test was begun of different organs, and the first tested—the kidneys—showed decay. Gereau at once telephoned to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for a pair of sound kidneys and, removing the ones affected, introduced the new ones. He supposed for some time that Arbuckle had died under the operation, but half a bottle of Irish whisky brought him round. The liver was next tackled, and half of it replaced. There were other parts to be substituted, but those mentioned were the principal replacements.

These operations required several hours, and another hour passed before Private Arbuckle spoke. Then he opened his eyes and cried out in a voice that seemed to come through dry leather:

"Corporal of the guard!"

Gereau was delighted. It looked as if he might save his patient, for while the man had doubtless been deanimated in good health his being brought back to consciousness was not only a difficult matter, but a dangerous one.

There are several versions of the rest of the story. Some say that Arbuckle was sufficiently restored to remember and speak of his expected execution. Others aver that Gereau, finding his breathing defective, worked his arms vigorously, but in spite of his efforts the man died.

It is said that at one time Arbuckle sat up and was given a stiff drink. Raising the glass he shouted in a hornlike voice:

"To his gracious majesty King George: God bless him and confound his rebellious subjects!"

Stockbridge and Gereau have both been asked to make a statement, but have refused either to affirm or deny the story. It is suspected that they are afraid of coming under the ban of the law, which might involve them in a charge of murder.

A THREE PIECE SUIT.

A Smart Outfit For the Matinee Girl This Late Winter.

SO MODISH.

Quite the fascinating link that connects the hat, coat and frock is the clever introduction of elaborate metal brocade. Joffre blue panne velvet is used to fashion the coat and make the hat's foundation and the basque of the gown. The fur is black fox.

A UTILITY BAG.

Directions For Making One That's a Regular Carryall.

A utility bag which answers the purpose of a laundry and shoe bag, with two other pockets for various articles, will be found very convenient when traveling. This bag can be taken from the trunk or suit case and hung up without disturbing its contents.

Cretonne is perhaps the best material for such a bag. It would require two pieces for the foundation of the bag. One piece should be a yard long and twenty-one inches wide, the other a yard and one-fourth long and twenty-two inches wide. Before joining the two strips attach pockets to the longer piece. Turn up one-fourth yard at the bottom for the flap of the laundry bag. Slightly round it and bind the raw edges with tape. When the bag is completed this flap will snap or button over the back of the bag.

Across the bottom after the flap has been measured off attach shoe pockets. Bind a long piece of material with tape across one side, then lay it into four box plaits, dividing them by means of a stitched piece of tape; also stitch a piece of tape across the bottom after the pockets are basted in place.

Above these pockets attach another bag the width of the strip underneath and any desired depth. Bind top edge with tape divided into two sections and stitch tape acorss the bottom.

Now lace the long strips to a depth of five inches with satine and stitch casing for double drawstrings. Stitch the two pieces together on the right side and bind with tape. Snap the flap at the bottom over the back of the bag.

Candy Apples on the Stick.

Select nice apples that are not too large. Mount them on thin sticks—meat skewers will do. Have them ready so that by the time the sirup is ready for dipping no time may be lost.

Sirup.—One pound of sugar, one-half cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of water, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one tablespoonful of butter. Cook until when dropped in cold water the sirup is hard, or to 390 degrees F. on the candy thermometer Keep hot while dipping the apples. Coat thoroughly. Lay in a greased dish, and then they will harden immediately.

A reliable candy thermometer can be bought for $1. As an investment it will pay for itself time and time again. Learn to make jelly by using the thermometer.

Stewed Okra.

Three cupfuls of okra, one cupful of canned tomatoes, one tablespoonful of butter and one teaspoonful of salt and pepper to taste. Wash the okra and cut it into thin slices. Put it into the saucepan with tomatoes; bring them to a boil; then lower the heat and let them simmer half an hour. Add the salt ten minutes before they are done and the pepper and butter just before serving.

Braised Veal.

One and one-half pounds of the neck of veal cut into cutlets. In the stewing pan place two tablespoonfuls of fat, then dust the meat lightly with flour and brown in the fat. Add one pint of boiling water, cook gently until tender, add one medium sized carrot and onion. Dish on hot dish, garnish with finely chopped parsley.

TRAMP DWELT IN STYLE.

But Police Cut Short Vacation of Uninvited Guest.

New York.—William D. Lowery of Kingston, N. Y., moved. Lowery, it is charged by Police Chief Howard, made himself a lone and uninvited guest in the luxurious home of Mrs. John Brown on Peconic bay at Greenport, N. Y., after she had closed it for the winter.

The intruder, it is charged, helped himself from a well stocked wine cellar, lived on canned food and in the guest bedroom covered his couch with a Persian rug and a silk portiere because his unknowing hostess had thoughtlessly taken away the bed linens.

Chief Howard followed Lowery to the house when he saw him staggering through the streets. Lowery, who had supplied himself with candles, went into the house through a window. Some silverware and trinkets are said to be missing. Lowery is in the Riverhead jail, awaiting the action of the grand jury.

REFLECTION SAVES BABY.

Hogs Attack Infant, but Flee When They See Own Likeness.

Elkins, W. Va.—Sanford Phillips, Jr., two years old, owes his life to the fear of wild hogs for their own likeness when reflected from a mirror.

Wild hogs which exist in the mountains of Randolph county came down into the foothills and charged into the home of Sanford Phillips, upsetting furniture and attacking Phillips' two-year-old son.

The animals had torn nearly all the clothing from the child when he ran into a corner where a big mirror hung. The hogs followed, but soon stopped when they beheld their likeness in the big glass. Only a second did they hesitate, however, then turned, plunging from the house back up the mountainside. The child was only slightly injured.

Montenegrin Caps Speak.

The Montenegrins carry on their caps a reminder of the history of their race, in the shape of a deep black border surmounted with five semicircles of gold. The black border is symbolic of mourning for the fatal battle of Kossovo, which shattered the Servian empire, while the five lines signify the five centuries which have elapsed since that event, and stand also as a sign of hope that one day the glories of the old Serb' empire will be restored.—London Globe.

Feline Agility.

A cat can turn completely over and land on its paws in a fall of fifteen inches.

Information Wanted.

"Nora," said the mistress to the new servant, "we always want our meals promptly on the hour."

"Yis, mum. An' if I miss th' first hour shall I wait for th' next?"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Animal Peculiarities.

All animals, hens included, have peculiarities, and to obtain the best results in working with them we must take this fact into consideration. Not only is it true that each class of animals has its peculiarities, but individuals in the same class have their distinctive traits. To illustrate this take for example two horses. One is a heavy work horse, and when you speak to him it is quite awhile before he obeys. Yet he may be as willing and obedient as the other horse, which is of driving stock and quick in its thoughts and actions. In fact, it is wrong to both to drive such horses together.—Farm and Fireside.

  And another rime for "daunt,"
For the former I use "aunt,"
  For the latter I use "aunt."

Blouse Costume In Taffeta.

Joffre blue taffeta blouse worn with a flounced skirt and trimmed with braid.

This costume shows a novel blouse and is carried out in Joffre blue taffeta. The blouse closes at the left shoulder and under the left arm, extending below the waist-line and forming a peplum with an inverted pleat at the sides. The underbody closes at the center-front. In medium size the blouse requires 4 yards 36-inch material, if made separately. The entire costume calls for 8½ yards of taffeta.

To make the underbody, close underarm and shoulder seams as notched. Hem the front, pleat front and back, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack.

Next, gather lower edge of sleeve, between double "TT" perforations, first having cut off the lower part of the sleeve to allow for the deep cuff. The side front, side back and sleeve are cut in one piece. Close underarm and sleeve seams as notched. Close cuff seams, leaving outside seam free below small "o" perforation. Gather entire lower edge of sleeve, sew cuff to sleeve. Gather lower edge of side front and side back and arrange on underbody.

For the outer front and back, first close right side and right shoulder seams as notched; finish left shoulder and side edges for a closing. Form inverted pleat at side seam, bringing "T" perforations together on small "o" perforation and tack to position. Form plaits in front and back above side seam, placing single "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Arrange on underbody. Tack pleats near side seam to position on underbody; sew an ornament over the pleats.

Pictorial Review Blouse No. 6609. Sizes 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Price, 15 cents. Skirt No. 6610. Sizes 22 to 32 inches waist. Price, 15 cents. center-backs even.

For the Children

Two Playmates Out Having Fun on Roller Skates.

Children who live in the city often miss much of the fun that country youngsters enjoy. Soon as snow falls in big towns hundreds of men are sent out to shovel it into piles quite inconvenient for sliding downhill and snow men. So city children have to plan a bit, and one of the best loved sports is roller skating in the parks, where asphalt walks are good and smooth. The picture shows Helen Maxwell, daughter of Mr. Howard Maxwell, and her playmate, Virginia Smathers, roller skating in Central park, New York, just after the last snowstorm.

The Daisy.

Did you ever hear the story of the daisy which looks like a star? Once upon a time there was a little star up in the sky that belonged in no group of stars at all, but just had to wander around by itself all the time. Every evening it watched the evening star tow the new moon over the edge of the dark and envied it. It heard much talk among the other stars, some of them of less magnitude envying those of greater magnitude, and the little lone star thought to itself that no one saw it even to envy it. Down on the earth it looked so much easier to get into a group and have companions, so one day when the earth was swinging over from dark to daylight the little star did not try to preserve its equilibrium, but just dropped down, down, until it came to earth. It fell so far that it fell deep down into the earth, but some star seeds at its heart shot up from the earth, changed through the influence of the soil, and there stood a beautiful star flower, and never is it lacking for companions of its own kind.

About Matches.

Every boy and girl in the west knows who Lewis and Clark were and what great work they accomplished for the country, but they may not know that when they were starting on their great journey of discovery Dr. Saugrain of St. Louis made them what was called at that time chemical matches. He showed them how they could make phosphorus for themselves, and you no doubt know the story of how these matches affected the Indians, who would not sell the "wapato" until they saw the miracle of the matches, and then they gladly gave it.

Before these chemical matches were made it was necessary to draw fire by means of flint and steel, and it was often a very hard task to do it, so fires seldom went out, but were fed constantly or covered so that they could blaze up in a short time.

Pencil and Notebook.

There is a satisfaction and a very certain educational value as well in being able to record one's impressions by rough notes and sketches and to show others one's ideas in the same manner. Every boy, even though he possesses no talent whatever for drawing, may learn to roughly sketch an outline if he properly develops a simple sense of proportions. The noting of interesting facts, read over often more than once later, fixes them in the memory and is good practice in expression if one tries constantly to set forth these notes clearly and correctly. Try it.

Frost Cracking Trees.

The traveler in the winter woods during extreme cold and especially after nightfall is sometimes startled by sounds like pistol shots and as loud, near and far away. It is not difficult to locate these sounds as coming from the larger trees around, the frost so shrinking the wood as to cause the fibers to separate in the weakest places, and they do this in such a hurry as to resemble an explosion.

Poverty of Language.

Travelers tell us that there is a very wild tribe near the upper Amazon that possesses a language singularly devoid of needed words. For instance, they have nothing to express a number greater than three, but this word is one of nine-syllables.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SEASONABLE LUNCHEONS.

SARDINES BROILED ON TOAST.—Carefully open a box of good sardines, twelve or so in a box, and neatly wipe after draining off oil. Arrange on a double broiler and broil on a brisk fire for three minutes on each side. Have ready toast strips a little longer and wider than the sardines. Place a fish on each strip, pour a little hot melted butter over them and serve, or garnish with slices of lemon and a sprig of parsley. Arrange on plates, serving not more than two to each person.

Corned Beef Balls.—Two teacupfuls of finely chopped corned beef, one onion minced very fine, three teacupfuls of mashed potatoes, salt and pepper to season and one egg. Beat all together well, form into balls, roll well in flour and fry in deep fat as you would fry doughnuts. Garnish with parsley or celery leaves and serve hot.

Fried Liver.—First cut all hard, white pieces out and cast aside, and then cut all into pieces about two inches square or less. Then cover with cold water and let stand fifteen minutes. Into your frying pan put several bits of fat salt pork cut very small. Let this cook till almost done; then drain off the liver and put quickly into the fried pork. Do not cook long or it will be tough. Turn once, and in a few minutes it is done. Of course if you prefer bacon to the pork that can be used instead.

French Stew.—One and one-half pounds fresh pork cut in small pieces; stew until tender, place meat in shallow baking pan with plenty of broth, add four medium sized potatoes diced, one small onion and season with salt and pepper. Bake one-half hour; then make biscuit dough and cover top with small biscuit placed closely. Bake until golden brown.

Chicken en Casserole.—Have chicken unjointed; have your casserole or baking dish ready, but in the meantime let your chicken simmer with just water enough to cover; cook fifteen minutes. Then have ready can of peas, four large diced carrots, two large cut-up onions, bunch of celery and diced sweet potatoes. Place layer of chicken, then layer of vegetables. Place cover on and bake from three-quarters of an hour to one hour. Serve on same dish.

A Minister's Salary In 1756.

According to an account book of the Second parish in Falmouth, Me., dating back to 1755, which is in the possession of Henry S. Thrasher of Portland, the minister received $31.33 for preaching seven Sundays. His salary for the year 1756 was $400, and the salary of Widow Elwell the same year for taking care of the meeting house was $6.66.—Indianapolis News.

ELIHU ROOT'S NAME WILL GO BEFORE CONVENTION; WHITMAN SIDETRACKED

New York.—Without even consulting with Governor Whtiman, who had aspired to be chairman of the delegation, three members of New York's "Big Four" to the Republican National Convention last night practically decided to declare for Elihu Root for President.

The three are Senator James W. Wadsworth Jr., who will be chairman; Senator Elon R. Brown and Frederick C. Tanner. With what amounted almost to a ruthless disregard of the Governor's wishes or counsel, these Old Guard republicans met soon after the convention had designated them and, after agreeing that they will lead the battle for the nomination of Mr. Root, decided, merely through a desire to be decorous, or, as some republicans expressed it, "rather than to be too rough on the Governor," to arrange a conference with him before formally declaring for Mr. Root.

It is a fair assumption from the attitude of the delegates and the resentful attitude oof the organization leaders that Mr. Root will be the official selection of the Empire State's "Big Four," no matter what the Governor, who is the fourth member of the delegation, may do or desire, furnished a climax to a sensational party quarrel which seethed and steamed beneath the peaceful surface of one of the most remarkable conventions ever held. The conclave ended at three o'clock in the afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The Whitman administration and the Governor were "commended." A platform, dealing solely with national issues, was unanimously adopted. It may serve as the basis for the national platform which will be adopted at Chicago. In the preparation of the document the framers took the cue from the speech which Elihu Root, as temporary chairman, delivered Tuesday night. It is for a big navy, for preparedness all along the line, for a soldiery under national supervision, for rugged preservation of all international agreements and law, for a complete readjustment of the tariff, and for a broadening of the spirit of Americanism.

GERMANY NAMES PRICES ON PORK

Berlin—The Bundesrat has fixed maximum prices for swine in stalls at from 63 to 120 marks per hundred metric pounds, live weight, according to size of animals.

The various provincial authorities are to set wholesale prices for dealers, while municipal authorities must establish maximum retail prices. The municipal authorities also much prescribe what proportions of pork on hand must be sold fresh and how much may be pickled.

Imported swine are not subject to the maximum prices, but they may not be sold in the same shops which handle domestic pork.

The previous maximum prices applied only to the retailers, and as a result producers withheld their swine from the market or demanded a price for them which left no profit for middlemen and retailers.

BRANDEIS CHARGED WITH BAD FAITH

Washington—Two witnesses charged Louis D. Brandeis with unprofessional conduct today before the Judiciary Sub-Committee of the Senate, investigating his fitness for confirmation as a Justice of the Supreme Court. They were Sidney W. Winslow, president of the United Shoe Machinery company, and Hollis R. Bailey, a Boston lawyer.

Senator Walish surprised the subcommittee by reading a telegram from Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New Haven Railroad,

"I am not at all unfriendly to Mr. Brandeis and I know nothing about his career except hearsay," said Mr. Mellen in his telegram. The sub-committee decided to let the question remain open. C. W. Barron had alleged that Brandeis at one time had been employed to "wreck the New Haven road."

DEATH KNELL OF SUFFRAGE IS TOLLED

Washington—The death knell of nation-wide woman suffrage legislation at the present session of Congress was sounded today. The House Judiciary Committee voted to postpone action on the suffrage constitutional amendment until Dec. 14.

An effort to postpone the nation-wide prohibition amendment for consideration on the same date failed by a tie vote. Both suffragists and Prohibitionists were all tangled up by the action of the committee.

The suffrage difficulty arose out of a controversy between rival organizations of women who have been fighting over the privilege of lobbying for suffrage for some time. One insisted upon a vote in the committee, and another warned supporters of suffrage among the committee members to postpone a vote temporarily. When the votes were counted some pro-suffragists voted to postpone, and the proposal was carried, nine to seven.

Church Steeples.

The church steeple was originally designed as a means of advertising the situation of the church. Among the low buildings which originally prevailed the steeple was an impressive beacon, but under modern conditions it is a failure, as even the most towering steeple is lost among the higher industrial structures reared around it. The steeple is really being replaced by electricity, which answers the purpose much more satisfactorily. Electrically illuminated signs are being introduced quite extensively for this purpose.

Secretary Hollenga Matched With the "Silver-tongued Orator of the Platte" When Introduced to 150 Members of Elks' Lodge

Mr. L. E. Hope's presentation to an audience of about 150 members of the B. P. O. E., in the large lodge room, in Elks' temple, last night, was somewhat borne out by the speaker to whom he referred, Mr. D. S. Hollenga, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hope's introductory remarks contained one sentence, "He is the most eloquent speaker I have ever heard, with one exception, the exception being William Jennings Bryan." From that time until Mr. Hollenga uttered the closing word of what should be termed his most eloquent and able address since his advent into this city, he did all that could be expected of a man to sustain the reputation given by the genial hardware merchant, Mr. Hope.

The Respecter of Riches

It is a fact conceded by everybody who has heard Mr. Hollenga at his best, that he does not use "hog-wash" to change the color of things as he finds them. It is one of his privileges to paint his pictures in the style of the impressionist in art. This he did last night. He divided humanity into different classes; the smart and stupid, the rich and the poor, saying that there is no material difference between the classes, as we are all children of the one Supreme being. It too often happens that the rich man is placed before us as the good man, and the poor man in the class of bad ones. It was made apparent by the speaker that he does not attach much importance to the possession of riches. In speaking of friendship he said that too many of us view a bank account as man's best friend. "What is friendship?" shouted the speaker. "We call this person and that person friend, but you cannot prove the friendship unless you measure the bank account," was another of his telling remarks. He plead for unanimity, for a solidifying of the community by pointing to instances of what comes of allowing the majority to rule, which must cause when men get together. "We have too much of the 'third party'—too much talk about He and She; someone who is not present; and somewhere, perhaps at the same time, He and She are returning the compliment," said Mr. Hollenga.

A Deterring Influence

"Forces make cities, and what are cities?" he queried. Are they not merely groups of homes minus roofs? Then why in the name of common sense do we not live together in our cities as we aim to live in our homes? But instead of that we mind the other man's business. It is no man's business what the other man does; we are all gossippers. It is said of woman that she is a born gossipper; that she tears down; but man is just as bad." These were sentences used by the speaker to carry his point as to one reason why communities drag behind the procession.

In speaking of power he said: "The minute a man becomes powerful enemies multiply; envy eats the rungs of the social ladder, and people try to tear down instead of praising the good they find in men and women. We speak of our fellows as brothers. You men of this lodge—the largest lodge in the city of Fulton—call yourselves brothers. Let me tell you that if we were brothers in the real and tremendous sense of the word, the human brain would be unable to grasp the immensity of the good things that could be accomplished in the world. We would stick to our problems until the last ditch should freeze over. But we fail in the literal sense of things, and when a man is down we knock him harder. When he is up we envy him. Hence our organization is no good."

In the following lines it will be seen that Mr. Hollenga recognizes here an apathetic attitude toward the very things which should arouse a spirit of pride in the hearts of the people. He said: "You have been told that Fulton is no good, and you accept the statement as a fact, never stopping to refute t he lie, because, in fact, you don't know whether it is a good city. Who knows today the excellence of the articles produced in Fulton's industrial establishments? Why do we not know these things? Simply because we are WRAPPED UP IN THE BIG KINGDOM I. We pursue a course unorganized, and must never hope to build up the city unless we co-operate in furthering the interests of the manufacturer, the merchant, the government—which includes the schools."

In answering Chamber of Commerce critics who howl about what they think is inactivity and neglect in securing industries for Fulton, Mr. Hollenga said that factories cannot be pulled from trees, and "if anybody thinks he can, let him come down to the Chamber of Commerce and I will give him my salary in payment of his efforts." He summed up his thoughts on this subject by pointing to the unsound financial condition of the city, adding that men of industry fear to tread upon ground that is not backed by a sound financial standing. "Bear this in mind, the manufacturer hestitates to stop in a city whose credit is bad. It is a business proposition, pure and simple," said Mr. Hollenga, as he entered upon a defence of the Chamber of Commerce directors who give so freely of their time in the interests of the city, but who are condemned for mistakes which they may happen to make.

Why Not Demand Quality?

The people who ignore the presence in this city of as good bakers as are found elsewhere came in for a rapping on their heads. "They tell you that Fulton-made bread is inferior to other products, but why do not those people go down to their local baker and demand a better quality of bread?" he demanded.

The value of unity of action was impressed upon Mr. Hollenga's mind while in Washington last week. In a certain building he saw twenty-six chairs, chained together, and carved on the back of each was the coat of arms of a Pan-American republic. The significance of the sight was "as one chair so we are one in principle." He plead with his audience to talk "trade at home," and keep on talking until the people of this city are talked to a standstill. He said that the subject has been and is yet agonizing, so why not eliminate the agony. He described the man who spent $3.60 in carfare to and from Syracuse in selecting and having fitted a suit of clothes as "the bummest citizen in town." The merchant who told a caller in his store that, in the absence of a certain kind of thread on his shelves, she would have to go to Syracuse to get what she wanted, was classed as a fool. He asked that all such instances shall be referred to the Chamber of Commerce whose secretary is one of servants of the people.

How a Merchant Looks at It

Mr. Hollenga was told recently by a merchant of this city that the Chamber of Commerce was no good. The Secretary expostulated by asking the merchant to attend the next open meeting of the Chamber. The latter replied that he wouldn't do it; that if he wanted a luncheon he would buy it himself. Mr. Hollenga declared that he is in possession of about 50 examples of the same nature, but strange to relate, the men who kick the hardest out of meeting have nothing to say upon making their appearance in public meeting. He plead with his audience to forget isms in the interest of Fulton; to be broad enough to point to the good and bad spots and to proclaim them; to guide the footsteps toward co-operation and co-ordination, "and may the Lord of your fathers help you, were the concluding words of the man who can deliver the proper punch upon the vulnerable spots of civic phlegmatism.

The luncheon served at the conclusion of the meeting was of the kind that helps to justify the reputation for hospitality that shines from the windows of the B. O. P. E. home in East 1st st.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

It is only of recent years that a full realization of the powers and possibilities of advertising have been arrived at, and even now the art has not received the attention of, or been made use of by, the retailer to anything like the extent it deserves.

The manufacturer, the manager of the big stores, the head of multiple shop concerns, and the mail order magnate, have all realized the immense possibilities of the publicity campaign, and having acted, have reaped—are reaping—and certainly will go on reaping an ever-increasing harvest.

At the same time the retailer has got to learn the lesson sooner or later, that whilst advertising is an educational force, always leading the public to realize new wants, thereby creating new business, it also operates in the direction of pulling existing business out of the hands of those who either will not, or do not know how to, hold what they have. Until the retailer learns the very obvious lesson that advertising can be made to do as much for him as for his great competitor, the pull will always be on the side of the big advertising concern, and the retailer will go on complaining of the strenuous competition. It is only reasonable to assume that, bad as things are just at the moment there is some money available in this city as well as in many other towns and cities, and if you do not advertise in your own immediate and surrounding vicinity (through our own local papers, etc.) the fellow next door is keen enough to grasp the opportunity and thereby takes the business from under you own door. Whose fault is it? You will say, "the buyer." Not so, "the retailer." Why? because the retailer must carry in stock; advertise that he carries in stock the same articles (if not a little better line) than his neighbor in the next city, and must also give the buyer the benefit of popular prices.

In this day and age the buyer is advancing just as fast if not a little faster than the average retailer—we mean by this in attractiveness, style, material, etc. You must meet the demands of the people in order to successfully carry out your business, and these demands can be met.

It has been said: "Why I trade in other cities is because sometimes when there visiting, things in the windows attract me; then too, while at a certain function I noticed all the ladies were so attractiveiy dressed." Now who's fault is this? Dress up your windows; buy the things which will attract the eye; ADVERTISE! If you want business you must go after it in the right manner.

Nature gives cities opportunities. It is the energy and intelligence of men that make it great.

Leaders of men are made of stern stuff. They are not the uncertain, the doubting the wabbling kind. Men who lead, who win, are men who have the courage that fights at four o'clock in the morning.

Slot Machines and Fraud.

The income from the penny in the slot machines in the subways of New York is given in the trade as 600.000 pennies a day, or $6.000. The companies have various ingenious methods to counteract fraud, but none of these is infallible. If disks of iron go into the slot they are deflected into a discard channel by a magnet. Slugs cannot pass muster unless they are the exact weight and size of the coin for which the machine was intended. Any disk with a hole at or near its center is nipped by a hook and tossed aside, and no gum or caramels emerge.—New York Times.

Symphonic Din.

It is said that a din will be produced in a new Richard Strauss symphony by the following instruments: Eight horns, four trumpets, four trombones, two bass tubas, two harps, an organ and cymbals, triangles, tomtom and a shepherd's bell; also eighteen first violins, sixteen second violins, twelve violas, ten violoncellos, eight double basses, two large flutes, oboes and clarinets.

Prison Reform.

That prison reform, now agitated in America, is an old measure is shown by a report from Japan that the Japanese tried out the idea over two centuries ago. Self government among the prisoners of Tokyo prisons was established in the seventeenth century. It worked out satisfactorily, but was abandoned for some reason not known. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cattle in Paraguay.

Although various estimates place the number of cattle in Paraguay all the way from one to four million head, the cattle industry, with untold possibilities, is scarcely out of the stage when the animals are slaughtered for their hides alone. While all the world is clamoring for meat, cattle in Paraguay sell for but little more than what their skins will bring.

Tale of a Turtle.

In 1860 a young turtle was caught under a mill in Calais, Me., by some workmen, who cut the date on its shell. In 1899 the same turtle was caught again under the same mill, and last year it was once more captured by some fishermen off the coast of Grand Manan. During the fifty-five years since 1860 it has grown only six inches.

Meteors.

Swift meteors become visible at an average height of eighty-four miles and disappear at fifty-six miles, while the very slow meteors come in sight at about sixty-five miles and fade away at thirty-eight miles. Of the very slow meteors those that become visible at the greatest heights come twenty miles nearer the earth than those of very low radiant.

Witch Hazel Plant.

The plant witch hazel acquired its name in times when magic, black art, sorcery, necromancy and witchcraft were popular. A forked branch of witch hazel carried horizontally in the hands was believed to turn downward as it passed over a hidden vein of water, thereby saving time and labor necessary in prospecting.

Animals and Flesh Eating.

Arguing against the eating of meat, an English writer remarks: "Almost any animal can be made to eat flesh. The kangaroo has canine teeth. Horses, oxen and sheep may be taught to eat flesh. Norwegian cows have been known to eat flesh. Goldsmith saw a sheep eat flesh. Spallanzani has shown that a pigeon may be made to live on flesh and an eagle on bread."

Cleveland's Inexpensive Police Force.

Cleveland has one policeman for every 831 inhabitants. New York has one for each 495 inhabitants, and Chicago one for each 486 citizens. St. Louis has one policeman for every 379 of its population. These facts will be contained in a report soon to be issued by Secretary W. W. Norris of the police department. The statement will show that Cleveland's per capita expenditure for police is less than that of any of the largest fifteen cities of the country

Checker Tournament in a Jail.

Inmates of the county jail in Superior, Wis., are conducting a checker tournament, and matches are played daily despite the fact that some of the men are confined to their cells. One man holds the board on his lap and the other makes his moves by poking a stick through the bars.

A Syrian Custom.

In Syria sky blue is the mourning color, indicative of the assurance that the deceased has gone to heaven.

CONSTRUCTIVE COMPETITION

It would be difficult to conceive greater economic folly than the theory that the merchants of any city can hope to build up trade along the lines they too often adopt, which is nothing more nor less than creating competition. To be exact, their ways are the ways of the free traders. Free trade promotes competition, certainly, but a destructive competition. That this is so is indicated by reason and proven by experience.

Every thinking person should be able to foresee that throwing open the market afforded by the people who comprise a community to the competition of the larger mart will deprive the home merchant of just so much business, thus weakening the home competitor at the same time that the larger competitor is strengthened. This has been predicted. If a man will but search his personal recollections he will get the thought clear and strong. He will need no evidence on the subject.

Advocates of throwing open the home market to the large competitors are apparently and regretably unable to understand that there is one and only one principle to be used in building up home trade; to protect the working people; to protect the salespeople in the stores—and that is to establish a barrier of public sentiment, stronger in every way than any protective tariff wall. In this way the only real and permanent competition may be established—competition not with the large city market but competition among the merchants of our own community.

At the same time that public sentiment shuts out the purchases of goods from the large city stores, it encourages the people of the country surrounding us to come into our city to buy—to make investments and everybody gains. When the advertiser in the big city newspapers finds that his market in the small city is shut off and his investment made correspondingly unprofitable, he takes his medicine like a good man; and the home merchant finds the opportunity he has desired.

CANDLE POWER OF THE MOON

A gentleman of inquiring turn of mind wrote to a technical publication and asked the simple question; "What is the candle power of the moon?" He mentioned that he had five sets of encyclopedias and six astronomical textbooks, all of which he had searched in vain to ascertain how bright the moon was.

But the technical journal answered the question pat: The candle power of the moon is one hundred and sixty-four times one hundred thousand billion. It would require one hundred and sixty-four times one hundred thousand billion candles to reproduce the light of the moon if the moon happened to go out.

Farmers who plant by the moon may be interested in these figures. Then, again, they may not. It should at least please them to learn that the curious gentleman was informed exactly how many candles would have to be set aglow on the moon to reproduce the reflected radiance of the sun if the sun happened to go off the job.

We wonder what the gentleman in question is going to do with his information, now that he has it. Possibly he will work out a nice solution of why lovers love to stroll in the moonlight, why farmers plant by the moon, and why dogs bay at the moon. We don't envy him his job though. —Country Gentleman.

WOMAN'S LOVE

(By Robert G. Ingersoll)

It takes a hundred men to make an encampment, but it takes only the influence of one woman to make a home. I not only admire woman as the most beautiful object ever created, but I reverence her as the redeemed glory of humanity, the sanctuary of all virtues, the pledge of all perfect qualities of heart and head. It is because women are so much better than men that their faults are considered greater. The one thing in this world that is considered constant, the only peak that rises above the clouds, the window in which the light burns forever, the one star that darkness cannot quench, is woman's love. It rises to the greatest heights, it sinks to the lowest depths, it forgives the most cruel injuries. A woman's love is the perfume of the heart. This is the real love that subdues the earth; the love that has wrought miracles of art; that gives us music all the way from cradle song to the grand symphony that bears the soul away on wings of fire. A love that is greater than power, sweeter than life and stronger than death.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—There is no visible evidence here that the President's speeches in the Middle West have produced any reaction upon his rebellious fellow-Democrats in Congress which can be translated into votes for his preparedness legislation. On the contrary, the leading mal-contents among the Democratic majority seem to have been stimulated in their opposition by the President's attempt to arouse the nation.

No sooner had Mr. Wilson delivered his first speech at Pittsburgh and it became evident that his appeal for support was to contain vague and threatening generalities, than the recalcitrant Congressmen proceeded to "hire a hall," as the President had previously counselled in his New York speech. They took the largest theatre in the city and proceeded to flood the town with hand bills bearing the striking heading: "Don't be Scared!" When the meeting was held it was found that the crowd in attendance was a record-breaker and six Democratic members of Congress proceeded to voice their opinions of preparedness and of their President's position with reference to it in language of hostility which could not be misunderstood.

In this particular the speakers had something on Mr. Wilson, whose speeches seem to require a commentary or a gloss of some kind to determine just what he is driving at. He has spoken evreywhere in terms of vague and general alarm, always, however, qualifying his menacing words with phrases which deprive his most solemn warnings of all their force. In a word, the President has lacked the "punch" in what he has said to the Middle West. His speeches have been clothed in elegant diction, as Congressman Kitchin has said, but they have seemed to be the effort of an elocutionist who is "speaking a piece" rather than the hot and heartfelt utterances of a crusader. In short, the President's speeches have not rung true.

And in this is the great weakness of the President's present position before the country, not only regarding the programme for defence but regarding many other questions of wide importance. He has changed his mind so often and so suddenly that he does not carry conviction with him when he starts out on a new tack. If he expects to convert Bryan and Tavenner and the rest, or if he expects to overcome them with new converts to his own standard, he will have to strike a faster gait than he has yet shown.

Opinions

SELF GOVERNMENT UNKNOWN IN MEXICO

The law of the Latins is force. They know none other. Thus the time serving policy of the administration in Mexico has brought forth failure, not unmixed with ignominy, where at the outset decision adequately supported would have saved us many losses and yet greater outlay. Intervention is only a question of time. It will be found indispensable to the restoration of order in that volcanic land.

Truth to say, the Mexicans are as incapable of self-government as the tribes on our Far Western reservations. In no sense do they constitute a nation. They are but a scattered and more or less antagonistic agglomeration of mixed races—Aztec, Indian, negro, mongrel and whatnot—the very best of them, embracing scarcely a tenth of the population, fit for little else than brigandage.

Mr. Wilson came in under a most mistaken conceit. He pursued this with the obstinacy characteristic of the self-confident theorist. He backed and filled; he would and he wouldnot; he marched up the hill and then marched down again. All thew hile the havoc and looting went forward, and now that we are caught in the meshes of old Whiskerando's whiskers, who salt say where we shall land and when. —Colonel Watterson in Louiseville Courier-Journal.

RURAL CREDITS—WHAT IS NEEDED

At a conference yesterday with President Wilson it is reported that Mr. Glass, chairman of the Banking Committee of the House of Representatives, objected to at least one part of the Rural Credits bill now before the Senate.

That is the part authorizing the Treasury to make advances to the proposed land banks at two per cent interest. If current reports are correct touching the bill which the House committee expects to report. it contains an almost equally objectionable feature whereby the credit of the government would be put behind the land banks.

It is evident that the tendency toward government aid and special privilege still persists despite the demonstration of such a master of the subject as Mr. Myron T. Herrick that what the farmers need is only legislation which will clear the way for independent co-operation and mutual self-help.—N. Y. Herald.

BRACKETT BELLS THE CAT

The mice in the old fable decided in convention that a bell should be put on the cat's neck as a "safety first" precaution, butc ould find no mouse to put it on. "Who will bell the cat?" was asked at a conference of Scotch nobles, bitter against the weak James III. "That will I," said grim Archibald Douglas. So the expression passed into history.

Edgar Truman Brackett, who openly attacks Governor Whitman, may go down in our annals as "Bell-the Cat Brackett." In a sense he is the Black Douglas of the Old Guard. He has force. He has energy. He owns one county—Saratoga—in fee and has a lien on more than one other county. Gossip holds him pretty close to William Barnes. He does not mince words, saying:

"I think that Governor Whitman's nomination would lead to an open revolt in the Republican party in this state. His administration has led to a deplorable situation. I never expected to live to see the time when Sulzer's administration was respectable in comparisan with another. Now is the time for action. If Governor Whitman is continued in office for two years more, the Republican Party will be in sorry straits. If something isn't done right now, the party will be wrecked."

This language burns all Brackett's bridges and closes the door in advance to compromise. Others may lag behind if they please. He is in the enemy's country and must win or be destroyed. Whitman is to be governor, if he lives till January 1, 1917. His powers as governor make wouldbe enemies tremble. That is perhaps the reason why the cat has not been belled before.

Brackett's skirmish line is a demand for the vouchers of the Whitman trip to the Pacific. Travis has those vouchers. It is claimed that the Pullman Bill does not specify details. Brackett wants to know how much went for spirituous liquors. But of course he is a big enough leader to know that this is simply "sniping," annoying the outposts. How much artillery he has, with ammunition to make it available, thew orld can only guess. But Whitman will not be beaten by "sniping." The big guns must do the work if it is done. In the meantime the state and the country will watch the campaign with anxious interest. Public opinion is as much divided over the Whitman administration as is the Republican Party.—Brooklyn Eagle.

MUSIC

Miss Julia Allen, prima donna soprano, and Mr. George Roberts, pianist, will appear in recital at the First M. E. church, this city, on Wednesday evening, February 23rd, when they will give a program of most attractive numbers. Miss Allen has made a great success in both opera and concert and was leading soprano with Sig. Enrico Caruso, the celebrated Italian tenor, on his last concert tour of the United States. She has a delightful stage presence and charm of manner, and this added to a voice of wonderful range and purity won for her the place she holds in the musical world. In addition to the Aria "Je Suis Titania" from the Opera of Mignon, and the Aria from La Traviata, Miss Allen will give two groups of songs in English and a group of French, Italian and German songs.

Mr. Roberts, whose splendid work with Matie Bowen-Fultoni and Mme. Sara Heineman won him many friends in Fulton, is a brilliant young pianist and as an accompanist has few equals among the young aspirants for those honors.

"THE PRINCESS PAT"

Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom have written many successful musical plays, "The Princess Pat" ranking with their best. Herbert's music is gay, bright and often exquisitely melodious. Blossom's book is worthy to stand side by side with it. Many of his lines are genuinely witty.

Since Henry Blossom gave us "Checkers," the stage has been elevated with his contributions. His books and lyrics are always masterpieces, and "The Princess Pat," is his latest. Mr. Blossom's story is one of pleasant cove intrigue, sufficiently amusing for comic opera purposes and containing some songs whose words are really clever. The dialogue is filled with witticisms, and enough quips and quirks are introduced to evoke hearty laughter.

"The Princess Pat", will be presented with an excellent cast including Ruth Welch, Paul Nicholson, Phillip H. Ryley, Edward Metcalf, Tots Marks, Earl Benham, Ben Hendricks, Georgio Sregario, Francis Bryan and Effie Toye. Besides an efficient chorus there will be an augmented Herbert orchestra. The new Herbert comic opera comes to the Quirk theater Tuesday evening, February 29th.

The Indianapolis News, discussing the small farm and its prospects, offers some advice to the tillers of small acreage in the east and middle west. It says that farms which a few years ago supported large families have been divided up and are now expected to maintain several families. Forcing the land one year and trusting to luck the next year means ruination of the soil. In the long run it is hard to make a small farm pay, the fault being traced to marketing methods. The News recommends the system adopted by fruit growers—that is, organizing and dealing in a big way—and adds: "But the small farmers of the middle west are still individuals. They must have long ago realized the value of organization, for it has been talked about enough to be familiar to every one who attends fairs, subscribes for papers and talks to his neighbors. The trouble is that a man or group of men strong enough to weld this vast network of power into one single force is wanting. The California fruit growers knew that in their state they had peculiar climatic conditions which, if properly exploited, could be made to produce good returns. They were drawn together by a common desire confined to a comparatively small area. The small farmers of the middle west must supply a motive as strong, for it is not there naturally. They must become convinced that as individuals they are getting nowhere."

STOCK CRITICISER MAKES FORTUNE

Bethlehem Steel Rise Brings $6,000,000 to Untermyer.

SHUN MARKET, HIS WARNING

Said It's Hopeless For Average Man to Expect to Accumulate Big Sum of Money by Stock Dealing—Lawyer's Wise Investment Years Ago Brought a Fortune—Has Never Speculated.

New York.—"It is worse than hopeless for the average man to expect to amass a fortune or to make money by dealing in the stock market."

And yet Samuel Untermyer, who made the foregoing statement in a letter addressed to the Rev. C. F. Reisner, Grace Methodist Episcopal church, this city, is today some $6,000,000 richer than he was a year ago as the result of the phenomenal rise in the price of Bethlehem Steel stock.

But Mr. Untermyer has not speculated. Twelve years ago he bought 15,000 shares of stock of the Bethlehem Steel company as an investment. For some of it he paid as little as $25 a share, while none of it, according to the wiseacres in Wall street, cost him more than twice that amount. The same stock today is selling around $450 a share, and Mr. Untermyer still holds the bulk of the 15,000 shares which he bought originally. He is holding the stock because of his belief in its intrinsic value. On its merits he believes the stock is worth $1,000 a share.

This belief rests partly upon Mr. Untermyer's estimate of Mr. Charles M. Schwab as the greatest manufacturer and salesman of modern times. The story of how Mr. Untermyer came to form this estimate of Mr. Schwab and invest so heavily in the stock of the present Bethlehem Steel corporation recalls an interesting episode in the financial history of the United States when the methods of so called "high finance" were first exposed. This occurred early in 1903.

A few months previously the United States Shipbuilding company had been organized under the laws of New Jersey, with $16,000,000 of first mortgage bonds and many millions of preferred and common stock. That company acquired a number of the leading shipyards of the country that are now owned by the Bethlehem Steel corporation. It also acquired the Bethlehem Steel plant from Mr. Schwab, who took a mortgage of $10,000,000 in part payment of the purchase price. Among the shipyards that went over to the new company were the Nixon works, at Elizabeth, N. J., owned by Lewis Nixon; the Bath ironworks of Maine; the Harlan & Hollingsworth shipyards, in Delaware, and shipyards in San Francisco owned by the Union Iron works.

Within a few months after the organization of the company it went to smash. At this juncture Mr. Untermyer was retained by Roland B. Conklin, Max Nathan and certain other bondholders, together owning about $200,000 of the bonds, face value.

On their behalf he began an action in New Jersey for the appointment of a receiver, declaring that the promotion and flotation of the securities was a fraud and that the properties, except the Bethlehem Steel works, had been turned over loaded with debt. A receiver was appointed.

After a couple of years of legal warfare a settlement was reached by which a new company—the present Bethlehem Steel corporation—was formed, with $15,000,000 each of preferred and common stock. The old bondholders received 60 per cent of new common stock and 40 per cent of new preferred stock of the Bethlehem corporation for their bonds.

While Wall street operators have sought to stimulate the bull campaign in the so called "war stocks" by calling attention from time to time to the big war orders received by the various steel, automobile and railway equipment companies, Mr. Untermyer has traveled about the country telling the public that he favors an embargo on arms and munitions.

ORGANIZED TREE PLANTING BEAUTIFIES A SMALL TOWN

How the Marvin (S. D.) Commercial Club Inaugurated a Movement.

Marvin, S. D., is a small town of some 300 people located in a prosperous portion of the northeastern part of the state, about 200 miles directly west of Minneapolis, writes Herbert J. Poppelman, secretary of the Marvin Commercial club, in the American City. The town is not organized (for local reasons) and is governed by the township organization, which has two members in the county and one in the town.

The town obviously could not undertake to carry out such a proposition as tree planting at the public expense, but the Marvin Commercial club could. This is a live organization which derives from club dues and the management of local dances and other public entertainments a small annual sum which is used in public betterment. Last winter some of the members presented the idea of planting trees on the streets of the village. The matter was thoroughly discussed and plans were laid, and long before spring arrived the club had bargained for 200 ash, 200 elm and 200 box elder trees from six to eight feet tall. Exceptionally low terms were quoted by the nurseries, which were strongly in sympathy with our good intentions.

Planting 600 trees of that size is no small matter. Many members volunteered to plant twenty trees each, and others made larger offers; but, feeling assured that such a plan would not work out well, we hired two able men to dig the holes, which were about four feet in diameter and twenty-four inches deep. Then we secured volunteers among the men who had had experience in planting trees, each to give a day of his time. Other volunteer assistance was also accepted.

When the trees arrived a local Arbor day was proclaimed. Organized squads began the work, and by 5 o'clock of the second day all the trees were planted. The ladies of the town gave the workers good lunches in the middle of the morning and the middle of the afternoon, so that the hard work was made pleasant, and all enjoyed the diversion.

The summer was very favorable—a little too wet for crops, but just right for the new trees—and almost every tree grew and flourished. Many of them now measure eleven feet in height. The topography of the town site is rolling, and we placed the ash and elms on the upper streets and the box elders in the lower parts of the town. In the fall the trees were properly mulched with old straw, etc., and there is every reason to anticipate a vigorous growth in the coming summer.

Of course in every community there are a few who will not assist in any undertaking. Such people are known the world over as local knockers. There were a few of that kind in Marvin, and they almost succeeded in discouraging the lukewarm workers, but the leaders went right ahead until even the knockers were delighted to see that their knocks availed nothing. We are now making plans to lay out a park and plant it this spring with shade trees. This is a still larger undertaking, but we believe we are big enough for the job.

CHILD WELFARE PRIZES.

Kansas Rewards For Towns That Are Best For Children.

To interest the residents of Kansas in child welfare work prizes have been offered to third class towns which are the best for child rearing. The contest was arranged only recently, and already more than 300 towns have entered.

The contest is being conducted by Professor W. A. McKeever, head of the child welfare department at the University of Kansas. He had charge of a similar contest last year, when W. R. Stubbs, former governor, offered a prize of $1,000 to the city of the second class which showed the most improvement in child welfare work and was found by competent judges to be the best town of that class in Kansas in which to rear children. Winfield won that prize, and Independence received second honors.

The state is furnishing each city with a copy of the findings of the commission that picked that winner in the former contest, so that the towns will know the points upon which the scoring will be based.

The six chief points are: Opportunity for play and athletics, school work and industrial training, social and recreational activities, physical and moral safeguards, activities of child fostering clubs and societies, attendance at Sunday school and kindred organizations. The contest closes May 15.

A Famous Old Structure.

Santa Barbara, probably the most visited of all the California missions, presents a perfect example in stone of the mission style of architecture. Established Dec. 4, 1786, this is the only mission still in the hands of the Franciscans, who founded them all. This structure is situated in the city of Santa Barbara, in the foothills, two miles from the ocean.—Argonaut.

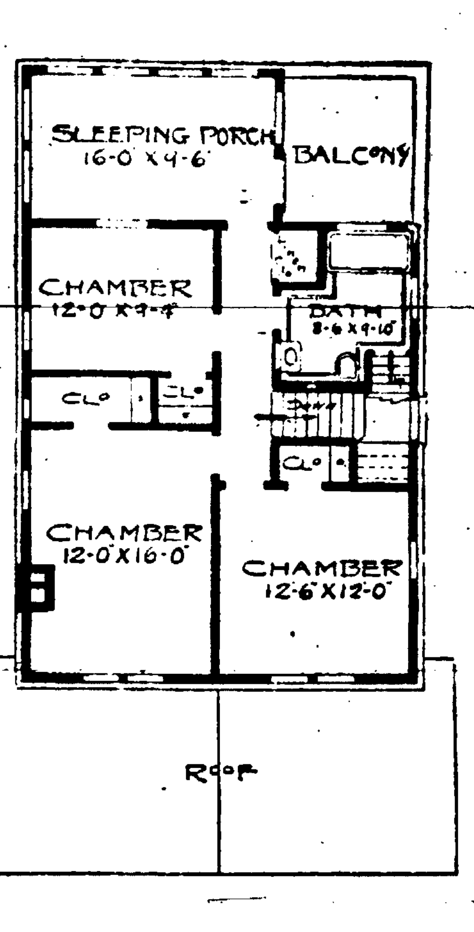
FIRST FLOOR PLAN.



SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

The exterior is of a rough face brick veneer to the height of the second story window sills. Above the brick veneer rough cast cement is placed between the Washington fir panel work or half timbers. Roof is of asbestos shingles. Front piazza is screened in. Large living room in front, with a fireplace at one end and staircase at the other. Dining room has a beam ceiling and projecting square bay. The radiation is under the counter shelf of the bay. The second story has three chambers, tile bath and sleeping porch. Size, 26 feet by 30 feet over the main part. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. Basement, 7 feet in the clear. The garage will house two cars. It is located under the den and dining room and made fireproof. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $6,000, more or less, according to the finish and the quality of brick used.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains over 300 designs costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also books of interiors, $1 per copy.

FROM SOUTHERN PIES TO PATHE PICTURES

ARNOLD DALY DISCOVERS ENTRANCING FACE FOR FILMS BEHIND LUNCH COUNTER.

NORA MOORE A LUCKY "FIND"

Ability and Beauty So Extraordinary That She Starts at the Top as "Lady Dardinilis" in "The King's Game."

Arnold Daly, whose fame is about equally divided between Broadway "legitimate" productions and Pathe motion pictures, was traveling through the south not long ago, and in a certain town of South Carolina stopped off between trains to get a hasty lunch in a railroad restaurant. His eye wandered from pile to pile of crullers, cakes and pies as he tried to make up his mind on which particular dainty he should take a chance. Thus engaged in this engrossing hunt for edibles he failed to notice at first the girl who with hands folded upon snow white apron waited patiently for his order. His decision made, he turned to her and then at once forgot what he had taken so long to decide upon. The girl before him was surely a waitress extraordinary. Oval face delicately tinted with old ivory and the flush of youth and health; brown hair combed with Quaker like simplicity, yet somehow looking better than if it had been worked over by a fashionable hairdresser; blue eyes that looked at him modestly and yet unafraid.

While Mr. Daly punished his stomach with the usual small town railroad station lunch counter delicacies, he questioned the lady of the apron. He asked her if she would like to work in pictures and told her if she would, he would give her a chance. The girl refused to commit herself. "You'll have to ask my mother, suh," was her reply.

Mr. Daly decided to miss his train and see her mother. He did. He called at the address given him by the girl and talked things over with the kindly old lady living in the weather-beaten house not far away. He found that like so many southern families the two had seen better days. The father, once a leading lawyer of a neighboring town, had died poor. The grandfather was an officer in the Confederate army, and was killed in the Wilderness. The one-time large estates had vanished, and now the girl was supporting her mother by working in a railroad restaurant.

Mr. Daly made an offer that caused the old lady to gasp with surprise. When the girl returned from work that evening it was talked over and decided that such a golden opportunity could not be neglected. So two days later Nora Moore and her mother took their soft southern accent and a few belongings to New York.

That was two months ago. Now Mr. Daly wagers his judgment as a producing manager that he has made a "find." "That girl is going to be great," he says. "I tried her out with a big part the very first thing—that of 'Lady Dardinilis,' in Seitz's play, 'The King's Game,' which I'm putting on for Pathe, and she has more than made good. I'm going to use her right along. She'll make a name for herself one of these days!"

PLATINUM IS SCARCE.

Its Price Is Soaring, and There Is No Substitute In Sight.

Platinum is now selling at $100 an ounce, and many concerns are even getting a larger price for it. Not so long ago one could buy all this metal wanted for $24 an ounce. Jewelers are finding it unusually difficult to obtain it, and some refiners will not sell it to any one except jewelers.

Metals which are frequently mixed with platinum are osmium, iridium and palladium. The fumes from osmium are very dangerous, and workers with this metal must exercise the greatest care in making alloys, etc. Platinum is generally hardened with 5 or 10 per cent iridium, which is also used to tip fountain pen points.

Platinum is also used extensively in the electrical industry, and now, owing to its scarcity, molybdenum is being substituted. Many attempts to make other substitutes for platinum to be used in jewelry have been made, but without much success. These include cheap alloys as well as white gold, which latter in many cases, however, eventually turns yellow. The success of white gold was rather precarious owing to the difficulty in making people believe that it was really gold, every one having been taught from childhood up that gold is yellow.—New York World.

The First Meerschaum.

The first meerschaum pipe was smoked at Pest in 1723. It is still in the museum of that town.

FOR THE CATERER.

Hints About Giving Your Family Enough Variety For Life's Spice.

Of the household routine duties perhaps none is more dreaded by the average housekeeper than that of marketing, and this is often due to the fact that she has had no special training along these particular lines and that therefore she is apt to run along from one mouth to another in the same old rut, serving the same foods cooked in the same way without exercising her own ingenuity to provide that variety which we are so often told is "the spice of life." It most assuredly is a fact that the housekeeper who assures us that she sets a plain table is likely to be the one whose grocery and meat bills are very much higher than those of her neighbor who apparently provides infinitely more variety and appears to serve more fancy dishes when in reality what has been spent is time and thought rather than money. The little made dishes—croquettes, haricots and ragouts—have an inexpensive base, but their plebeian origin is masked and hidden by sauces and gravies carefully compounded and delicately flavored. In such a household if the meat course is scanty its lack of bulk is made up by a heavy puree or thick cream soup, hearty, yet inexpensive, just as in the less expensive table d'hote dinners and lunches one is given a generous service of vegetable soup, macaroni and salad, which prove so satisfying that the smallness of the portion of chicken is scarcely noticed, yet this is the only really costly course of the whole meal.

A dinner of several carefully thought out courses in reality costs no more than the so called plain meal of steak or chops, two vegetables and pie or other dessert, yet the man of the house will be more than content with the course meal, while the housekeeper will have something extra to put aside in her bank for the entertainment of the guest, whose coming appears to demand somewhat more elaborate service than that of the home folks.

AN IMPROVED VILLAGE.

Civic Pride Is Abundantly In Evidence In Ramsey, N. J.

Among the villages where civic pride is abundantly in evidence to the visitor who inspects the municipal equipment is the borough of Ramsey, N. J., less than an hour's ride from New York city, writes F. W. Gertzen, mayor of Ramsey, in the American City. It lies on the old Franklin turnpike, an improved state road, built of amiesite, the direct road for motorists from New York to Tuxedo and "up the state." The main business street is clean, well shaded and inviting looking and is lined with modern stores. Many of the thoroughfares are kept oiled, and most of them have cement sidewalks and curbs. The council meetings are held in the fire house, thus making it a sort of town hall. The borough's pride is the municipally owned water system.

The village schools are well planned and kept in good condition. One building houses all the grades from primary to sixth. It is equipped with modern sanitary arrangements and ample fire protection. On adjoining ground stands the fine high school, built about two years ago. It contains seven classrooms, a large office for the principal and the board of education, a library, an up to date auditorium, seating 300, with manual training rooms, gymnasium and toilet facilities. The entire building is ventilated by one of the modern systems, with a motor in each room.

At the side of the high school two full size clay coated tennis courts have been built. These are so popular as not to be able to meet the demand for their use. There is a fine baseball diamond on another side of the building. Back of the "old school" is a playground for the little folks, neatly set off from the other grounds by a privet hedge.

The ladies of the village have been active in matters of civic improvement. They have formed a free library and have improved the station grounds, giving a bright and welcoming touch to the entrance to the village. The board of health has done considerable work in seeing that dairies are kept in first class condition and has also undertaken publicity work in regard to the killing of mosquitoes. The work of the shade tree commission in caring for and setting out shade trees on newly improved streets deserves commendation. Electric lighting and good police protection are among the other features of the municipal housekeeping which make Ramsey a good place in which to live.

ROBIN A FALSE CUPID.

Washington, D. C.—Cupid's robin, which made its appearance at Penn Yan, N. Y., recently, with a love note tied around its leg signed with the name of Miss Beatrice Hinman of 1182 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, is apparently a false love messenger.

There never was such a number as "1182 Pennsylvania avenue," for the postoffice building happens to occupy the entire block between Eleventh and Twelfth streets on that historic thoroughfare.

Furthermore, the Washington city directory fails to record the name of Miss Beatrice Hinman. There is only one woman Hinman listed in the directory, and she is superintendent of Sibley hospital.

WAR BRINGS BOY BABIES.

Birth Rate In England and Wales Breaks All Records.

Although many scientists insist there is no foundation for the belief that more boy babies than girls are born in wartime, the birth statistics in thirty-six large towns in England and Wales break all records in those countries for boy babies.

In the period from January to March for every 1,000 girl babies there were thirty-two more boy babies, and since that time the preponderance of the number of boy babies has been increasing materially.

The marriage rate for England and Wales in a recent three month period was 21.08 in every 1,000 population, being the highest ever recorded.

BOWLING AGAIN ON FEBRUARY 22

Manager Powell of the Onyx bowling alleys, in order to provide for a suitable substitute to the disbanded City Bowling League, has arranged a number of bowling matches for the near future, chief of which is the one planned for Washington's birthday, at which time 25 bowlers from Solvay will come here to spend the entire afternoon and evening.

Burnett Wallace, a former Fultonian, who is now connected with the Solvay Process company, wrote to Mr. Powell yesterday making final arrangements for the visit. In his letter he stated that it would be to the liking of his group of bowlers to be able to oppose local bowlers during the afternoon. Mr. Powell will endeavor to satisfy this request, but in any event he will have on hand two local teams during the evening to bowl the boys from Solvay.

On next Friday night, the Fulton representative bowling team captained by Powell and consisting of Stauring, Rear, Painter and Cole, will bowl the All-Oswego outfit on the Onyx alleys in the first of a series of home and home matches. The next match will be bowled in Oswego on the following Tuesday. Tucker is captain of the Oswego team, and included in the quintet are Feeley, Lass, Snyder and Smith.

As soon as arrangements can be completed the postponed match with the All-Oneida outfit will be bowled in this city.

SHELDON BAND WORKER CALLS AT THE HOMES

Miss Etta Jeemore is a native of California, N. Y. She is now a student at the Band Workers' Training Home at Weedsport, N. Y. She is a valuable assistant to the Sheldon forces, spending most of her time in calling from house to house. The Training Home was established by vote of the Susquehanna conference recently held in Fulton, with Rev. H. L. Crockett as superintendent. There were numbers of talented young people in the church who wished to become evangelists but who could not go as there was no organized method to train them and to put them to work after they were trained. Thus the church lost much valuable talent. Already there are four evangelistic bands of young people working in the conference, and the number of applicants to the home is constantly increasing.

CIRCUS CLOWN IS KEPT BUSY

Will Appear Here Before Joining Barnum & Bailey Forces at Madison Square Garden.

Editor A. P. Bradt, in this week's "Observer," tells of the busy days spent by Mr. Horace W. Baggs of Cayuga st., reputed to be the highest salaried circus clown in America—and then some. Mr. Baggs is preparing for his annual tour, which will be under the managment of the Barnum & Bailey circus, the season opening in Madison Square Garden, New York, during the last week in March. Upon closing the Manhattan engagement of a month the show goes to Brooklyn, the first apeparance under canvas for the season. It will be in Syracuse in June and will work its way across the continent to the Pacific coast.

"The Observer" continues as follows:

"Mr. Baggs' work at this time of year is rather varied, first either splicing rope or wire cable, next training a rooster to do some stunt or other, then a dog has to go through his daily routine, then he does a few minutes on the trapeze or horizontal bar, just enough to keep his muescles in condition so they will be in shape for his spring's work when it starts. A little later he will have to go at it a little more strenuous for when at Madison Square Garden his aerial act will be up 50 feet, this means considerable effort to hand over hand it up that heighth, so to avoid it Mr. Baggs is practicing holding his weight by his teeth so as to be drawn up to his apparatus and thus save his arms for his act. Mr. Baggs invented this ladder act 21 years ago when working for the James Pearmen Machine Works and the act is still in the ring and considered by managers to be one of the best acts of its kind in show business.

"He designed and patterns his own wardrobe and for several weeks Mrs. Baggs has been cutting, fitting and sewing on new clown costumes for next season's engagement. One clown number he puts on requires the assistance of 15 clowns and he has the wardrobe for all of them. This spring when he leaves for New York City he will have two trained dogs, a trained rooster and a ton and a half of baggage. The best stunt he has is a burlesque air-ship. There is a big explosion and he does a fifty foot head foremost dive, a real thriller, till you see him walk away as though nothing had happened. Then you realize it was nothing but an old clown's joke."

The many local friends and acquaintances of Mr. Baggs will have an opportunity of seeing him in a one-day circus show, before he starts on his trip, as he is engaged to appear at The Quirk on one day next week.

Mrs. Baggs is a sister of Mr. W. H. Kline of "The Observer" staff and has a large circle of close friends in this city.

SECOND TEAM WON, 46-19

The High school second team trounced the Maccabee Feds on the court at Church's hall last night to the tune of 46 to 19. The lodge boys did not have a look in at any time during the game. Repeated fouls by the school boys during the first half gave the Feds their opportunity to roll up most of their points from the foul line. Hutchins starring himself by making good most of the attempts. He made good eight throws from the foul line.

Reynolds and Calkins were the high scorers onthe high school outfit, Kraus's playing stood out at all time, as did that of LaPoint.

The lineup:

GIRLS' HIGH TO PLAY SOLVAY

Yesterday's Practice Developed Opinion That Miss Dickerman's Players Are Stronger Than Ever.

Supporters of the High school girls' basketball team will have an opportunity to see the quintet in action against an out-of-town opponent tonight at City Hall. The "strong" Solvay High school girls' team will come here for the purpose of disposing of Miss Dickerman's proteges, in order that their title to the championship of Central New York may be sustained.

Miss Dickerman and her squad feel differently, however, regarding the final outcome of the fray—the coach, or perhaps coachess— basing her hopes on the ability of the Howe sisters, Margaret and Elizabeth, to secure a victory.

The fact that a public exhibition is to be presented of the girls' style of play should crowd the small spaces in the City Hall to capacity.

In preparation for tonight's event, Miss Dickerman had the squad at practice yesterday. Each one of the twenty members of the squad was given an opportunity to prove her worth.

Plenty of Good Subs

In anticipation of being called upon to help in case of emergency, tonight, some of the second string players organized themselves into battering rams, with the result that the wall was too close for comfort during some of the scrimmages. One young woman was particularly aggressive and will bear watching by the official if she is in the lineup.

Margaret Howe, whose basket shooting was responsible for the close victory at Mexico in the first game of the season, was alert yesterday in the practice and she made a number of sensational shots which brought forth (hand) applause from the rest of the group, including the girls who were playing. Although Margaret Howe excels in basket shooting there are other girls on the team whose playing is of a stellar order. Particularly valuable to the team is Elizabeth Howe, who plays at center. In the Mexico game, it was her aggressiveness which kept the ball out of danger at all time.

Their Style is Good

In explaining the girls' style of playing, Miss Dickerman stated that a considerable share of the work falls on the center, owing to the fact that the game is practically stationary. There are two forwards and two guards who remain practically fixed in their positions, and it is the duty of the respective centers to place a barrier in the ball's course. Notwithstanding the fact that the players do not move around as much as the boys do, their game is nevertheless thrilling and to see them emerge from a seven-minute session—which is the time Miss Dickerman sets— the impression is drawn that the girls have been doing something beside embroidery work.

The most interesting scrimmage yesterday was between the teams, made up as follows: A team, Natalie Butts, Margaret Howe, Elizabeth Howe, Elizabeth Royce and Florence Furness; B team (the losing ones): Ruth Nipper, Thelma Parker, Eva Wells, Helen Waugh and Marion Goodjon. Margaret Howe, was the chief point getter, her shooting being of a complimentary nature.

In tonight's game, Miss Dickerman will officiate in the first half while the coach of the visiting quintet will referee the seconnd period. The lineup of the local team as announced this morning will be: Center, Elizabeth Howe; substitute center, Sarah Dickinson; right forward, Margaret Howe; left forward, Natalie Butts; substitute forward, RuthNipper; right guard, Florence Furness; left guard, Elizabeth Royce; substitute guard, Eva Wells.

The game will begin at 8 o'clock prompt.

TIGERS PLAY OSWEGO NATIONALS TONIGHT

The Tiger basketball quintet will go to Oswego tonight to oppose the Nationals in the Y. M. C. A. building.

The following players will make the trip; Larabee, Waterhouse, Palmer, L. Foster and Murphy.

BALLARD'S HORSES GOT A COLD DUCKING

While engaged in ice-cutting operators on Lake Neahtawanta, yesterday afternoon, a team of horses belonging to J. Ballard broke through the ice. The animals were rescued after several minutes of hard work by the gang of ice cutters.

The horses were drawing a load of ice to the shore when the ice gave way. They dropped into six feet of water.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Horace Frambers, an impecunious literary man receives the following offer: Helen Talbot, daughter of a rich financier, has trusted her lover not wisely but too well. She is about to become a mother, Her lover went down on the "Titanic." If Framhers will marry Helen Talbot and save her name, he will receive $10,000 and a position in Mr. Talbot's office.

Frambers marries Helen; and the child dies. Mr. Talbot gradually trusts and likes Frambers; but Helen despises her "bought" husband and intrigues with other men. So Frambers resigns his position and pays her back her $10,000; deserts her and tells her to get a divorce.

Talbot's business is failing, and Frambers helps him recover it. Then Frambers returns to his room to die, as he thinks, but when he recovers from his illness he finds Helen by his side.

She loves him and they are made happy by a happiness that has not been "bought."

A bill of real vaudeville is also offered.

than were used a few years ago. A doctor making a call would leave a big bottle of medicine and a box full of pills. When prices started to rise a year and a half ago the doctor could dispense only a dozen or 15 pills and a few ounces of liquid—in 9 out of 10 cases all that was necessary for recovery.

Now drugs are higher than ever before. A doctor can keep in stock only drugs for use in emergencies. Drugs cost MONEY today—real money—and you can't expect him to furnish 50c or 75c worth without extra charge.

It is up to you whether or not you get the most efficient remedies. Don't look at your doctor in astonishment when he hands you a prescription. He could give you something NEARLY as good, and if you force him to it he must, but if you ask for a prescription you can rest assured that you are getting what is, without doubt, the very best treatment for your particular illness.

ILLINOIS WOMAN DEPRIVED OF VOTE

Springfield, Ill.—Women of Illinois were denied the right to vote for delegates and alternates to national nominating conventions, State, central precinct committeemen in a decision of the State Supreme Court today.

The decision held that while the Legislature had the right to give women suffrage, it had not yet done so, and it was not within the province of the court to write the privilege into the law.

ANOTHER CHECK RAISER APPEARS IN OSWEGO

Oswego—A sequel to the recent attempt to cash a forged check of F. A. Place of Oswego Town, for $700, has developed during the past few days as the result of a visit of an Albany bank official to the Second National Bank to look up evidence regarding a New York draft deposited here some weeks ago, but which has recently been returned to the Albany bank and there found to have been raised several hundred dollars. In the meantime this same draft had been accepted for the full amount by the Second National forwarded to the Chase National bank of New York city, passed by it and by several other New York banks, until it finally reached the Albany National bank, where it was first issued, and there discovered to be fraudelent, in that it had been cleverly raised.

According to the Albany man, who was in town yesterday the raising of the check was an execedingly clever piece of work. The date had been changed as well as the amount originally written in and further than that the protecting cutting, inking and stamping had been obliterated and the raised amount stamped in with another check protecting device, which fitted the original holes cut through besides making new holes to bring it up to the raised amount.

It is said to have been one of the cleverest pieces of check raising ever seen in this city and it was expert work as is proven by the fact that it had passed through several of the biggest banks in the country before getting back to the bank where it was originally issued.

Fall of Erzerum Removes Obstacles to Route to Turkish Capital---British to Get Relief.

London—The capture of Erzerum, with one hundred thousand Turks and more than a thousand guns, is a crush ing blow to the Central Empires, followed by the announcement that the Franco-British forces have overrun the Cameroons an dthat the British have administered punishment to the Germans in East Africa. taken in conjunction with the encouraging reports from the Franco-British western front, has inspired the feeling that the war has at last begun to turn in favor of the Allies.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Times says General Judenich is now confronted with the difficult task of intercepting the remnants of the Turkish defenders, who are probably retreating westward of the mountain plateau, and so preventing them from joining other units of the third Turkish army.

In an account of the siege, General Judenich says the advance toward Erzerum was conducted on three routes, namely, on the northern flank by way of Olti, by a frontal and shorter route along the Kars-Erzerum road by way of Sari Kamysh, and on the southeastern flank by way of Melazgbert and Khynysskala. The downfall of the fortress, however, was mainly the result of the frontal attack, although the heavy artillery played an important part in silencing the forts.

All reports of the siege agree that the bombardment was not sustained sufficiently long to completely destroy the defences and that a majority of the forts were actually stormed at the point of the bayonet. Thus, the correspondent states, Caucasion history repeats itself and Russian soldiers reproduced against the modern forts thed irect method which succeeded thirty-nine years ago against Kars.

The fall of Erzerum could hardlly have occurred at a more opportune moment for the government. The effect of the victory on the masses of the people, he says, bids fair to overshadow its military consequences, and the members of the Duma are likely to meet on Tuesday in a mood fully attuned to meet half way any conciliatory overtures on the part of the administration.

In the capture of Erzerum the Russians, it is indicated in military circles, are now at a distance of only 100 miles from the Black Sea port of Trebizond. This distance is measured over thep rojected railway line between the two places. Work on this new railway, it is understood, was commenced early in 1914 and was a part of the general Turkish scheme for moving troops from the Bosphorus by water to the Erzerum region. Military observers express the view that the Russians must necessarily move on Trebizond in order to complete the victory of Erzerum. The possession of Trebizond will place the Russians within ninety miles of Batum. This last named port is connected by railway with Baku and thence with Rostov and the entire system of railroads in Southern Russia. Trebizond can hardly with stand an advance of a Russian army from the south supplemented by possible fleet attack from seaward.

THOMAS J. KELLEY

Thomas J. Kelley formerly of this city but recently of Red Creek died yesterday in Syracuse at the home of his sister, Mrs. Grace Byrne, 125 E. Onondaga street, where he had been taken for treatment.

Mr. Kelley was fifty-two years old and had been a resident of this section all his life. He had been connected with the Gilbert, Nichols company for thirty years. Three years ago he terminated connection with the firm owing to ill health.

Surviving besides the widow is a daughter, Miss Ada Saunders; two sisters, Mrs. Mary Watson, and Mrs. Jennie Holmes of Las Angeles, Cal.; two brothers, John Kelley of McGraw, N. Y., George Kelley of Fort Collins, Colorado.

The funeral will be held at the home of Mrs. DeForest Eastman, 208 Gansevoort street at 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

MRS. FRANCES BARNES

The body of Mrs. Frances Barnes, widow of Mr. Charles Barnes, who died in Frankfort Wednesday was brought to this city today and removed to the chapel in Mt. Adnah cemetery where the funeral services were held, a clergyman from Frankfort officiating. Interment was made in the Mt. Adnah cemetery.

CONKLINS SAW THE BIG FLOODS

Parents of Local Dentist Had to Mix Inconvenience With Delights of Their Western Trip.

According to the "Fowler Ensign," a California newspaper, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Conklin, parents of F. E. Conklin, dentist, of Oneida st., who are on an extended trip through the west, arrived at Fowler last Thursday night after being delayed for several days by the flood which covered most of the territory in the vicinity of Los Angeles recently.

Much space in the paper is given to an account of the visit, of Mr. and Mrs. Conklin, mentioning that while they have financial and family ties which bind them so closely to their home state that they have no thought of going West to establish a home, they will certainly become boosters for California for they are cultured and observing people, and Mr. Conklin is faithfully keeping a lot of the things of interest which he sees and hears.

Continuing the item reads: "He grew up on a farm and spent many years of his life in that line of industry, so takes particular interest in studying the agricultural industries of the sections he visits.

"At Greeley, Col., where they visited relatives, they found the leading industries to be the growing of potatoes, and the growing and fattening of lambs for the markets of the big cities. In Wold county, of which Greely is the county seat, therre are now being fed 750,000 lambs.

"In Fresno county Mr. Conklin will learn of our wonderful irrigation system and our great raisin and peach industries, and of the efforts to unite the growers in an organization to maintain reasonable prices for their products."

WOULD YOU BUY IT AT THIS CONSIDERATION?

According to a deed filed in the County Clerk's office, Oswego, yesterday, the huge plant of the American Woolen company in this city, is considered to be worth $400,000.

The deed bore four $100 war tax stamps and covers the transfer of the local mills from the American Woolen Company, of New Jersey, to the American Woolen Company, of Massachusetts, the company having recently transferred its charter.

MR. DAVENPORT'S TEACHER

Former Senator Frederick M. Davenport, speaking at the Republican Club's dinner in Utica the other night, spoke at length concerning his return to the Republican ranks after being sidetracked on the switch called Progressive. Among those at the table was Governor Whitman. Mr. Davenport said in part:

Therefore it is a time for all men of good will, whether Republicans, Progressives or Independent Democrats, who desire the national welfare at home, and peace and honor abroad, to put aside the honest differences, but now relatively unimportant antagonisms of other years, and stand shoulder to shoulder, in the world crisis for a country without reproach and without shame. I count myself happy, therefore, for this and other reasons, to sit at the table of Lincoln with the Republican Governor of the Empire State. You know, Governor, there is sometimes much good to be gotten from a genuine revolutionist. There was George Washington, he is a good example. He settled down to be quite a stable and sensible person after his little controversy with George the Third. That is when he got peace with honor, and that is the only kind any of us are after.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

A WRONGED MAN'S CRUEL REVENGE

Dreadful Fate of an English Officer In India.

Colonel Collinwood commanded the ——th Haidarabad native infantry. The colonel was a large, florid man who well illustrated the English proclivity for not being able to learn from others. His father had been a small tradesman in London who in some way had put a member of the cabinet under obligation to him and the obligation was repaid by a commission for the son. Nearly all the young man's brother officers were gentlemen born, and many of them younger sons of nobles. Colinwood was snubbed for twenty years, and as soon as he was promoted to the command of a regiment commenced a systematic snubbing of every officer beneath him in rank.

The colonel was especially hard on his servants. He seemed to consider any servant as a necessary evil and a native Indian servant as a worm of the dust. Among those who attended him was an Irishman named Malony and a native named Haroutune. Malony treated all natives as his master treated his inferiors. Haroutune was very different from both the colonel and the Irishman. He was as gentle as a woman. He was married to a soft eyed young Indian, and they had three children.

One day Colonel Colinwood missed a valuable diamond that he had bought, expecting to make a display with it when he returned to England. The only two persons who had access to the room where it was kept were Malony and Haroutune. The colonel, who had perfect confidence in Malony, had Haroutune arrested, and the courts in the neighborhood were so afraid of the autocratic soldier that he had little trouble in having the Indian convicted. Haroutune was sent to prison to serve a term of fifteen years.

Not long after the loss of the diamond Maloney left the colonel's service to return to the British Isles. Eight years later Colinwood, having been invalided home, found his former servant living "in clover." Setting detectives on his track, the colonel unearthed the fact that he had disposed of a valuable diamond, and his prosperity dated from the sale. Colinwood, finding it to his interest to accept the remainder of the thief's fund on condition that he would not prosecute, made the compromise.

A few years after this the colonel returned to India with a wife and two little children. He debated the matter as to what he should do in making amends to Haroutune and decided that to say anything about the mistake would place him in an unpleasant position. Haroutune now had but a few years to serve. Besides, he was nothing but a low caste native, and a prison was as good a place for him as anywhere else. So the colonel concluded to do nothing in the way of justice.

Meanwhile Haroutune was languishing in prison. He was so gentle in his manner that one of the prison officials took him into his service. This gave the poor fellow a great deal of liberty. Not long before his term expired a snake charmer gave an exhibition at the prison, and Haroutune saw him perform. Among other things, the snake charmer would place a bird in the same apartment with a snake. On its master's order the snake would steal up to the bird and strangle it.

One day when Colonel Colinwood was at dinner with some friends he remarked that the time for the release of the man who had stolen his diamond must have arrived. Some of the party said that the natives were prone to take revenge for punishment and it behooved the colonel to be on his guard. Colinwood declared that if he were inclined to fear any Indian he certainly would not fear Haroutune, who was more woman than man. Had the colonel realized that the prisoner, who had served fifteen years for an offense of which he knew himself to be innocent; that he had come out of prison to find his wife and children, having been deprived of his support, had succumbed and were all dead—had the colonel known this he might have feared that even a worm will turn. Mrs. Colinwood did not share her husband's want of faith in Indian revenge and shuddered.

The very next day Elsie Colinwood was found dead in the garden. The children were permitted to play there, since the place was surrounded by a high wall. The little brother who made the discovery said that he had seen a snake pass from a tree on to the garden wall. There was no mark on the body, though the throat gave evidence of strangulation.

A month later the boy was found dead in his bed with no more marks on him than had been found on his sister. The mother, on the verge of insanity at her loss, besought her husband to resign his position and return to England. He promised to do so, but before he could make his arrangements his wife met a fate similar to that of her children. The distracted man followed her to her grave and completed his preparations to leave a country that had become a horror to him. The night before he was to sail he was awakened by a choking sensation and, grasping what was coiled about his neck, tore it away and threw it to the other side of the room. The next morning a servant went to awaken him and found his dead body terribly swollen. He had been bitten on the h[illegible] by one of the most deadly snakes in India.

IMPROVING WESTCHESTER.

New York's Beautiful County Has a Planning Commission.

A commission, the first body of its kind ever constituted by law of the United States, has been organized for the development and beautifying of Westchester county, N. Y. It is headed by James G. Cannon.

The appointment of this commission was largely due to the activities of the Westchester county chamber of commerce, and the commissioners, who are men of wealth and deeply interested in the development of the county, will serve without salary. They were selected by the board of supervisors and have authority to employ landscape architects, surveyors, engineers and other experts.

They will submit to the supervisors a survey of the county, with a map showing the proposed improvements, and they may recommend changes in the width or route of highways, the construction of new trunk line roads and the acquisition of public lands for parks and playgrounds. They may also suggest the subdivision of the county into drainage areas and alterations in the system of water supply.

Westchester's growth in the past few years both in the matter of population and of estates and country houses has caused the leading citizens to take serious thought as to the best manner in which its natural beauties may be preserved.

"Several of the towns," said Mr. Cannon, "already have systems of street planning and are seeking to make their part of the county as pleasing to the eye as possible, and one of the first things the commission will do will be to take these efforts into account and to correlate them. It is necessary that the rapidly growing communities should have adequate park space and that their streets and principal highways should be considered with reference to the appearance of the entire county. Westchester is a pioneer in this line.

"Then there are in the county many reservoirs, and it is proposed that they should be approached by suitable roads and that picturesque and convenient paths be built about them. The great Kensico reservoir is one of the finest bodies of water in the country.

"The new Bronx River parkway, of the cost of which New York city pays three-fourths and this county one fourth, will naturally become part of the general plan. It runs for fifteen miles on either side of the Bronx river.

"The county also contains much forest land, and the commission will consider how its natural appearance may be retained as much as possible, and while there is yet time the provision of park spaces will be considered with reference to those already existing.

"Such towns as Dobbs Ferry and White Plains have already done much in laying out municipal parks and in making their surroundings pleasing. To obtain the co-operation of every town in the county is part of the general scheme."

Citizens of Westchester are enthusiastic over the project to make their county a "garden of the gods." Parks and lawns will be established at the railroad stations, steps will be taken to destroy unsightly structures, and the traveler will see about him everywhere the natural beauties of the woods and the fields preserved by the skill of landscape architects.

There are many beautiful country homes in the county, especially along the Hudson. The commission hopes that its efforts will increase the pride of all Westchester property owners in the adornment of their grounds and in the appearance of their homes.

Recreation In Cleveland.

A complete survey of the recreational facilities of Cleveland, O., will be made by the public recreation committee of the chamber of commerce to precede the mapping out of a five year recreation program. Recreation for Sundays, Saturdays and holidays will receive special consideration.

The Bust.

The bust has been favorably known from time immemorial. It is common to pedestals, autos and some financial experts. It can be obtained at any saloon. Every country during a panic either has one or comes near it.—Life.

Apples and Morality.

Coleridge would have been in sympathy with the prison governor who regarded a liking for apples as indicative of moral soundness. "No man can have a pure mind who refuses apple dumplings," he said, and Coleridge's friend, Charles Lamb, who reports this saying, adds: "I am not certain but he is right. With the decay of my first innocence, I confess a less and less relish daily for those innocuous cates. There is a physiognomical character in the tastes for food. The whole vegetable tribe has lost its bust with me. Only I still stick to asparagus, which still seems to inspire gentle thoughts."—London Mail.

HELPFUL ACTS.

Lend a helping hand whenever you can. If you cannot do it in just the way you would like, but must submit to another's dictation in the matter, still, rather than let the opportunity pass, conquer your own desires and do the helpful act. You never know when it may rise up to repay you.

BEGUN ON A PHONE

By OSCAR COX

There is nothing so pleases a girl as to get behind a screen where there is no possibility of being discovered and treating one of the opposite sex as she would never dream of treating him were her identity known. Ralph Harding, a youngster who was, to say the least, by no means bashful, was called to the telephone one day—a party wire—and a soft feminine voice asked, "Is this Mrs. Partington?"

"No; this is not Mrs. Partington."

"What is your number?"

"My number is 840, party W."

"Oh! I've got the wrong letter. I called 840 R. Excuse me."

How much often depends upon a trifle!

"No excuse needed, I assure you. Indeed, I must ask you to excuse me."

"What for, please?"

"Keeping you talking longer than is necessary to your purpose. The sound of your voice is pleasant to the ear."

A slight chuckle informed Mr. Harding that he had not given offense. The chuckle was the only reply, but it encouraged him to go on.

"We are frequently called to answer calls of 840 R. I suppose it is very easy for an operator to make a mistake in a letter."

"Quite so."

"Are you on a party wire?"

After some hesitancy the lady answered in the affirmative.

"Do you have the same letter as I?"

"My letter is 'M.'"

"And your number?"

Again the chuckle, but no other reply.

"Beg pardon. My question was thoughtless."

This was not true, as the girl well knew. If he had the number and the letter it would be possible for him to learn her identity.

"It wouldn't be proper for me to be chatting over the phone with a stranger," said the voice, "if he knew who I was, but since I am unknown I suppose it's no harm."

"How do you know that I'm not a very disreputable person?" asked Harding.

"By your voice. There is nothing that bespeaks refinement or the want of it so surely as the inflection of one's words. I defy any one not born and brought up in the highest class to assume the accent of one of that class."

"Thank you. You are repaying me for what I said to you with interest. Isn't it strange that I can hear you speak as plainly as if our lips were only an inch or two apart?"

Another chuckle.

"But, not being able to see you, I am obliged to rely on my imagination for a picture of you."

"What do you think I am like?"

"One of Titian's pictures—fair skin, dark eyes and a tinge of mellow sunset in your hair."

"I'm not like that at all."

"Well, then you're a brunette."

There being no reply, Harding asked if he was "getting warm," as the children say in hide and seek games. But the lady, who was evidently guarding herself against identification, declined to favor him with a reply.

"I wish you would give me something by which I could find out who you are," he said.

"I am a lady."

"And, while a lady may talk to a strange man unknown, she would cease to be a lady if she became known, I suppose."

"Exactly."

"Very well, there is a chance, according to your definition of a lady, of your ceasing to be one."

"How is that?"

"If ever I meet you and you say a word to me I shall know you by that voice of yours, which has a melody in it I have never heard in a woman's voice before."

"Oh, my good gracious!"

"Therefore pray that I shall never meet you."

"I will. You're simply flattering me. I don't believe you could tell me by my voice at all."

"We may test that, and without your giving me any clew to your identity except what I have, your voice."

"How?"

"I'll tell you my name and where I live and give you any other information of myself that will enable you to meet me, you remaining unknown to me. By this you may contrive a meeting without my suspecting it. If I don't recognize you by your voice I am much mistaken. Is it a go?"

She did not say whether it was a go or not, but he gave her his name and address. She asked him to name some persons he knew, and at his giving a certain name she said he need not go any further, thereby giving him a point, and he resolved to be watchful whenever at the home of the person named. Then they said "Goodby," there were two clicks, and fate had arranged for a wedding.

Some months later Harding was invited to dine at the house of a friend—not the one the girl of the telephone had given him reason to suspect as a mutual friend. Before going in to dinner, hearing a voice behind him, he turned, looked a girl in the face and said:

"I am pleased to renew our acquaintance begun on the phone."

The girl blushed to the roots of her hair.

The wedding took place ten months later.

A DASHING MODEL.

A LA MODE.

Brimless, high, springy, this new turban combines much of style. The piquant wing is of helio cerise velvet, a deeper shade than the five floppy roses at its base. The straw itself is a novelty in one of the new tan shades. Please observe the net veil with its attractive border in triangles and dots.

THE ART OF DRESS.

How Clothes Influence Character and Even Destinies.

The influence of clothes on human destinies is enormous. We say "it is not the cowl that makes the monk," but that is another erroneous proverb. Its stamp always remains and molds the individual, body and soul, in a certain way. The prestige of the costume has a great deal to do with the sacerdotal or military vocation. Who will ever know how much Mlle. de Montijo's dresses had to do with making an empress of her? She ordered her dresses for Compiegne from Worth, whose fame was just beginning, and, according to her own expression, they were her "battle horse." On them she won her victory, and we all know the effects of that victory.

"The death of a delightful man of my acquaintance," declares Pierre de Coulevain in one of her sprightly books, "was caused by a hat being worn on one side. One of his mother's friends wanted him to marry a pretty girl she knew, who was very charming and well off. He happened to be staying at her house near Vernon when this young protegee was going through on her way to Rouen.

"Anxious for her guest to see the girl, she persuaded him to go to the station with her. He went, saw the girl; but, alas, she had her hat on one side, in the most comical way possible. It was no doubt one of those odious hats, so badly balanced that no pin in the world could keep them straight. The harm was done, though. He never dared tell his mother's friend what his objection to the girl had been. He owned it to me later on, adding, 'I should always have seen her like that.'"

Imagination plays tricks on Frenchmen as it does on no other men. This one married another girl who wore her hats straight, but whose head was rather turned.

The marriage ended in a divorce and the divorce in sudden death, such sudden death that it was generally believed to have been suicide.

Delicious Salad.

Six medium sized cold boiled potatoes, three boiled beets, a small onion, a small pepper and any other cooked vegetables left from dinner diced together.

Mix with the following dressing: One teaspoonful mustard, two teaspoonfuls sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, a teaspoonful flour, blended into a tablespoonful soft butter; a well beaten egg, one-half cupful milk, one-quarter cupful vinegar. Cook in double boiler until thick. Have all ingredients ice cold and mixed some time before serving so as to be well blended. Serve on lettuce leaves garnished with hard boiled eggs. This makes a hearty supper for five persons.

Retouching the Ready Made

It is not every woman's good fortune to be able to cut and fit and make her own clothes. Some have not the time, while others have not the ability, and many have neither. The busy woman especially hates to give her precious minutes to long hours with the dressmaker, and it is for such that the shops put on their racks and counters such a number of stylish ready made garments. For the fastidious woman, however, it is something of a shock to see herself, so to speak, coming down the street in the identical frock or suit she is wearing. For her there is nothing to do but to invest in the cheaper ready made garments and put the remainder of the allowance into fixings that will make the frock, suit or blouse partake of her own personality. After all, one's clothes should reflect one's personality.

For sheer tailored blouses there is a happy expedient that any woman can resort to with a few stitches, and that is to apply under the sheer material a length of figured or contrasting colored ribbon. This will "dress up" the blouse with the smallest possible expenditure of time and money.

The styles are so accommodating at present that a frock may be completely changed with very little trouble. An imported gown in a smart shop suggests a way of putting "the punch" into a cheap taffeta dance frock. The imported model had a very straight gathered skirt, which was turned under at each side for a distance of four or five inches at the hem to reveal a lace petticoat. This gave a bouffant appearance without interfering with the cut of the skirt. A girdle of old blue velvet contrasted beautifully with the flesh tint of the frock. A tulle scarf was suggested for softening the corsage. A cheap drop skirt on an otherwise good looking dance frock may be omitted entirely, the lace petticoat sufficing to give the fluffy appearance at the foot.

Leather collars and cuffs, from new leather to be bought at a leather house or from the arms of a good pair of kid gloves where the hands are worn out, will make a bought suit take on a different air. A leather belt added in place of the fabric belt will give tone to a Russian blouse coat. New lining will make a cheaper plush coat look much more expensive and dressy, as often the lining is where the manufacturer has saved his pennies to make his profit on the coat.

A large suit skirt may be shirred into fitting at the waist line, and a belt of material, which comes from the piece taken off the hem, added for style.

Braiding on pockets will dress up a plain suit, or the addition of new fur will often help out.

The Rhodum Sidus.

An amusing story told by Hood describes how a country nurseryman made a large sum out of sales of a simple little flower which he sold under the name of the Rhodum sidus. This charming name proved quite an attraction to the ladies, and the flower became the rage of the season. It was one of those freaks of fashion for which there is no accounting. At length a botanist who found that the plant was not an uncommon weed requested to know where the nurseryman got the name from. He elicited the following reply: "I found this flower in the road beside us, so christened it the Rhodum sidus."

According to Signs.

"Little Johnnie is rather cross this morning," said the doctor, "but then that is a good sign. It shows that he is convalescing."

"According to that," said Johnnie's mother, "my husband must be recovering from a severe illness. There's just no living with that man."—Exchange.

Origin of the Word "Pagan."

The Latin word from which pagan is derived originally meant a fountain or spring; then the village which sprang up around it, and finally the residents of the village. As Christianity took strong root at first in the large centers of population and the worship of the pagan deities lingered longest in the country and, among the country villages, it came to be understood that a pagan or villager was, in virtue of his residence, a worshiper of the old gods, and thus the term acquired its present significance.

Arabian Laughing Dove.

An extremely strange bird is the singing pigeon, or Arabian laughing dove. In color these pigeons are usually red, mottled or checkered, though they are sometimes found of a bluish color. Their voice baffles all description, being tremulous and broken, with gurgling notes, like the noise of water poured from a bottle. The utterance is varied, and, though there is a resemblance at times to the drumming of a true trumpeter, it is not so sonorous. It is frequently interrupted by one or more of the inspiratory "aha," which no doubt gives them the name of laughers. Their cooing is soft and melodious and both sexes take part in the cooing.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

One Piece Frock In Men's Wear Serge.

Although fashioned of men's wear serge, this modish one-piece frock has practically no limitations as regards materials. It is trimmed with braid.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6481. Sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

Men's wear serge is used for this design, although one cannot conceive of any limitations for it as far as materials are concerned. The belt is of contrasting material and the revers and collar are trimmed with narrow soutache braid. In medium size the dress requires 4½ yards 54-inch material.

The underfacing of the front edge of the waist is the initial step in the construction of the dress. Next, close shoulder seam as notched and form tuck, creasing on slot perforations in front and back. Place single "T" on double "oo" perforations at lower edge of front and tack. Close under-arm seam as notched.

Now adjust the vest underneath the front, bringing single large "P" and double small "oo" perforations in vest

Face the collar and sew to neck edge, after stitching on the braid.

Next, pleat the sleeve. Close seam as notched, leaving extensions free; turn under extensions on slot perforations. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched.

For the skirt, turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap on side gore to small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch as illustrated, leaving edges to left of center-front free above single large "O" perforation in front gore for placket. Adust skirt to position.

Adjust the belt to position.

Embroidered medallions may be added to the revers most effectively.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Device For Ventilating Room Without Drafts.

The illustration shows a ventilator constructed to allow air to pass through between the upper and lower window sash, says Popular Mechanics. It consists of a board eight or ten inches wide and as long as the window sash is wide. A short distance from one end it is marked and cut on a slant. The small piece removed is hinged to the main part so that it can be raised in taking the board from the window. When the sash rests on the board it cannot be removed from the window.

The Care of Rugs.

For daily care it is usually sufficient to go over the rugs with the carpet sweeper, followed by a cloth wrung very dry from clear water.

Small rugs should be cleaned out of doors each week. Place the rugs right side down and beat lightly with a rattan or wire beater. Sweep, turn and sweep the right side.

Do not shake rugs if they can be cleaned in any other way. If it is necessary to shake a rug hold the ends together, folding first wrong side out and then right side out.

If a rug must be swept on the floor, damp bran, damp torn newspapers or coarse salt may be used to collect the dust.

Sweeping compounds should not be used on carpets or rugs, as they contain oil, which will eventually stain the fabric.—Department of Home Economics, University of Nebraska.

Apple Loaf.

Reserve enough bread dough to make a small loaf. Work thoroughly into it one tablespoonful of butter, one-third cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of cinnamon and two well beaten eggs. Add flour to make a soft dough, knead lightly and let rise. Divide into three equal parts and roll each part to fit the pan. Lay one piece in a buttered pan, spread over it an inch layer of tart apples chopped fine. Pour over the apples a tablespoonful of melted butter, cover with the second piece of dough and continue as before. Brush the top with milk and let rise until very light. Steam for one hour, then place in a hot oven to brown lightly. Serve in slices with sugar and cream.

Baked Meat Hash.

To one cupful of chopped cooked meat add two cupfuls of cold boiled mashed potatoes, one finely minced onion, three tablespoonfuls of meat stock or drippings, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Mix well and melt one heaping tablespoonful of butter in a baking pan. Add the hash, cover and bake in a hot oven until nicely browned. Turn and brown on the other side. Serve at once.

Steak With Parsley.

Select a good thick steak, either sirloin or porterhouse. Season slightly with pepper and salt and broil until it is moderately brown. Have prepared enough chopped parsley and white onion to cover it. Dot it thickly with dabs of butter and bake in a quick oven for five minutes. The onion, parsley and butter sink into the meat, the parsley absorbing the strong flavor of the onion.

Minced Lamb on Toast.

Rub one tablespoonful of butter smooth with one tablespoonful of flour. Add one cupful of meat stock and salt and pepper to season. Cook until thick and smooth, then add one and one-half cupfuls of cooked minced lamb. Simmer three minutes. Dip slices of toast in hot salted water or hot meat broth. Heap some of the lamb on each slice of toast and serve on a platter garnished with slices of hard boiled eggs.

Browned Potatoes.

Mash two cupfuls of cold boiled potatoes, add three tablespoonfuls of milk, four tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one-half minced onion, one-half level teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper. Melt one heaping teaspoonful of butter in a frying pan. Add the potatoes, cover and brown. Then turn and brown on the other side. Serve with tomato sauce.

Virginia Waffles.

Boil half a cupful of Indian meal in a cupful and a half of water thirty minutes. Add a cupful and a half of milk, two teaspoonfuls each of sugar and melted butter, two cupfuls of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and two well beaten eggs. Fry in a well greased waffle iron. Serve with maple sirup.

Chokes Eating a Steak.

Springfield, Mass.—John B. Marcille, a well known railroad man, choked to death while eating a steak in a restaurant.

A Run On Icings

Chocolate Icing.—Add two squares of chocolate melted over hot water just after the sirup has been beaten into the egg.

Maple Icing.—Use one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar and one-half cupful of granulated sugar in the boiled icing.

Coffee Icing.—Use one cupful of weak coffee in place of the water in the boiled icing.

Marshmallow Icing.—Add twenty marshmallows cut in fourths to the sirup, being sure that it is hot enough to melt them. If not soften the marshmallows first over hot water, or soften in the oven.

Nut or Fruit Icing.—Add one cupful of chopped nut meats just before spreading on the cake. Add cocoanut or chopped raisins. Add a raisin or fig paste made by cooking one cupful of chopped raisins or figs with one tablespoonful of water and one tablespoonful of sugar.

Butter Icing.—Butter, one-third cupful; confectioners' sugar, one cupful; cream, two tablespoonfuls; flavoring, one teaspoonful. Cream the butter, gradually add the sifted sugar, and beat until the mixture looks like whipped cream. Add the flavoring and cream until of the right consistency to spread. Do not put on a hot cake.

Cocoa Icing.—Add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa to the sugar.

Mocha Icing.—Add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa to the sugar and two tablespoonfuls of coffee in place of the cream.

Chocolate Marshmallow Icing.—Slice marshmallows in thin slices and lay on the cake while hot. When cool spread over the chocolate icing.

Fudge Icing.—Sugar, two cupfuls; milk, one cupful; butter, one teaspoonful; chocolate, two squares; salt, one-half teaspoonful; vanilla, one teaspoonful. Combine the sugar, cut chocolate and milk and let stand over a very low flame until the sugar is dissolved and the milk melted. Then boil hard without stirring until a soft ball is formed when dropped in cold water. Remove, add the butter and let stand until cold. Beat until creamy and spread on the cake. This will burn very easily.

A QUAINT DESIGN.

With This Model In Mind Matrons Can Make One Like It.

Simple as it looks, this frock nevertheless conforms to fashion's dictates in that it masses the skirt fulness on the hips, has full sleeves and panniers. The material used is a silvery gray crepe de chine, with elaborate embroidery done in heavy silk of the same tone, but different weights, massed on the panniers and sleeves. The princess front is belted loosely with a heavy silk cord and tassel. This frock is exceedingly picturesque on a certain type of woman.

Boiled Salt Mackerel In Cream Sauce.

Wash the fish in several waters, remove the head and part of the tail, scrape off the thin black skin and soak in cold water over night. In the morning tie the fish in a cloth, cover with fresh cold water, bring slowly to a boil, cook one-half hour, then take off the cloth, remove the backbone and lay the fish on a heated dish. Scald a cupful of milk, thicken with a teaspoonful of cornstarch wet in a little cold milk, add a teaspoonful of minced parsley, two tablespoonfuls of butter and pepper and salt to taste. Remove from the fire, add a well beaten egg, return to the fire, cook a minute longer, then pour the sauce over the fish and serve. Garnish with sprigs of parsley and slices of hard boiled eggs.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Sportsman—or womanlike, if you will—is this suit of white serge trimmed with black satin. The trimming is applied in no regular way and herein lies the originality of the design. The skirt has inverted plaits at the side and the coat fastens slightly to one side. Finishing the neck is a turn-down collar. In medium size the costume requires 4 3-4 yards 54-inch material.

Pictorial Review Coat No. 6513. Sizes, 36 to 42 inches bust. Price 15c.

Skirt No. 6438. Sizes, 14 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

Pictorial Review Patterns may be procured at the J. R. Sullivan and M. Katz & Co. Department store, Fulton.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WINTER VEGETABLES.

CURRIED TOMATOES.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one teaspoonful of chopped onion and cook until yellow, then add six sliced tomatoes and cook gently until soft. Mix one tablespoonful of flour with one teaspoonful of curry powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and a few grains of cayenne pepper, moisten with one-half cupful of cream, pour the mixture over the tomatoes, stir until thick and serve on hot buttered toast.

Potted Haricot Beans.—Potted haricot beans are made by first soaking the beans over night. Then skin them and cook until tender in boiling salted water with two onions. Drain away all water, mash smooth with drippings of butter, season agreeably with salt, pepper and nutmeg, remembering that rigorous exclusion of air will insure freshness for at least two weeks.

How to Make "Mulligan."—Butter the size of an egg, one onion, one small head of cabbage, one can of tomatoes, salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Put the butter in a saucepan, let it melt, then add the onion cut into slices, allow it to brown; then put in the cabbage, which has been chopped up or run through a meat chopper. Let the mixture cook slowly, stirring it often so as not to let it burn. After it has cooked for twenty minutes or half an hour add the tomatoes and seasoning and cook slowly two or three hours.

Parsnips.—If the parsnips are young scrape and lay in cold water, but if old they will have to be pared and split lengthwise. Let young parsnips cook in a porcelain kettle in salted water for forty-five minutes, but old parsnips must boil about an hour and a quarter. Drain and serve with drawn butter.

Baked Macaroni and Cheese.—One-half pound of macaroni broken fine and cooked in plenty of hot salted water twenty minutes. Turn into a colander and pour cold water over it. Make a sauce of two cupfuls of hot milk, one large tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of flour and salt to taste. Put a layer of grated or prepared cheese in bottom of baking dish; then a layer of macaroni, then sauce, and repeat until the dish is almost full. Cover with breadcrumbs and butter. Bake till brown.

HINMAN REGARDED AS CHOICE FOR GOVERNOR

Today's New York Herald makes the following prediction regarding political conditions.

"Interesting alike to republicans and democrats is the piece of driftwood cast up by the political whirlpool, which hissed and steamed all through the recent Republican State Convention at Carnegie Hall.

"Harvey D. Hinman is the republican "dark horse" for Governor.

"There's no doubt about it. It's in the cards. The idea has the backing of a large group of the effective masters of the party machinery. William Barnes, the "retired" new leader of the party machine, hasn't been consulted. It is not likely that he will be. He would oppose Mr. Hinman. Even though he spends a large part of his time trying to find a way to humiliate Governor Whitman and prevent his renomination, it is not believed he would accept Mr. Hinman as an alternative.

"The men who are back of Mr. Hinman believe Justice Hughes will be the republican Presidential nominee. They feel they have the 4best of reasons to believe that Mr. Hughes not only will accept a nomination, but that he will find a way to register a preference for his old political friend and ally, Mr. Hinman, as the Governship nominee.

"Justice Hughes and Mr. Hinman has seen each other recently. They have been intimate friends ever since Mr. Hinman led the Senate fight for the Hughes reforms in the State Legislature.

"It is not the Old Guard that is back of the Hinman idea. The Old Guard will at least hesitate at taking him. But that won't matter. He will be pitted against Mr. Whitman anyhow unless there is peace between the present Governor and the organization. The most interesting discovery has been made that a new force has come into republican politics in the State, which is neither the Old Guard nor the Old Guard off-shoot that made the picturesque battle for Governor Whitman in the Carnegie Hall Convention.

"Some of the New York State Representatives in Congress are in the move for a "new deal" all around. They have been crystallizing the old Hughes element in the party. Some of them were fighting side by side with William Barnes on Tuesday and Wednesday in the effort to humble Governor Whitman, but they were then moved by the same impulse—that of defeating the Governor—and were chagrined rather than delighted at being on the same side of the fence as Mr. Barnes, who announced a year ago that he had definitely retired as a political factor in the State."

STOLEN JEWELRY FOUND IN WEST SIDE HOUSE

An additional quantity of loot which was taken from the store of John Ragan, of Seneca Falls, the robbery resulting in the arrest here last Friday night of William Morey, who later confessed to the deed, was recovered last night and this morning by Chief of Police Hill of Seneca Falls. Officer Hill and Mr. Ragan came to this city last night and visited a house on the West Side, where it was learned the tenant had purchased some of the stolen jewelry. The police officer remaine dhere until this morning when he left to recovera the remainder of the jewelry which was taken from the Seneca Falls store.

AUBURN TO APPEAR AS SUMMER RESORT

Auburn—The first step by the Chamber of Commerce to advertise Auburn as a summer resort throughout the country was taken today when a brief concise write up was sent to be inserted in the New York Central timetable of their summer schedule, which will be distributed practically all over the United States, There will be in all probability upwards of 50,000 copies of this folder gotten out.

PRESIDENT WOULD DODGE 1-TERM PLANK

Washington—It became known tonight that the White House may shortly give out an explanation of President Wilson's theory of the one-term plank in the Baltimore platform, with some reference to William J. Bryan's position on the subject.

The explanation, it is understood, will be contained in correspondence between the President and some member of Congress.

$2,500,000 MAY BE ADDED TO PENSIONS

Washington— Two pension bills passed the House yesterday, proposing in all the addition of more than $2,500,00 annually to pension expenditures.

One would grant pensions to the widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served ninety days or more in the war with Spain or the Phillippine insurrection.

The other bill would give twenty dollars a month to survivors sixty-two years old or over, of Indian wars from 1865 to January, 1891.

Roosevelt and Hughes Booms Worry Members of State's Old Guard

New York—With the smoke of the recent Carnegie Hall political battle pretty well blown away, two things stand out very clearly:

The republican musketeers (formerly the "Old Guard") intend first to hamstring the Roosevelt Presidential boom.

They intend next to devote their energies to bringing about the nomination of Elihu Root.

So much for the present ambitions and dreams of the "Old Guard." There is no attempt to conceal them. As for the actual conditions which confront the republicans, four months before the nominating convention is held, they are about as follows:—

The Roosevelt boom has become af ormidable thing. It has the musketeers worried. It has William Barnes sitting up nights. The Massachusetts situation started the anti-Roosevelt men vigorously on the trail.

The Hughes boom is another disquieting factor. That, too, is growing. And it appears to be no hothouse growth. Likewise is the belief spreading that Justice Hughes will accept a nomination.

The "Old Guard" might be said to be between the devil and the deep sea. Only the "Old Guard" refuses to admit that it has any alternative as cheerful or acceptable as even the deep sea might be.

For the benefit of any who might regard the Root move as a foil for the republican managers it may be said that it is neither foil nor a makeshift. It has come to stay, so far as they are concerned.

The boom promises to be the rallying point for the present masters of the p arty organization. The exact attitude of those members of the "Old Guard" who believe they stand a fair chance of controlling the Chicago Convention is about as follows:

"Elihu Root is one of the leading citizens of the nation. He is the countrys leading diplomatist. The defeat of the New York State constitution can be regarded as no index either to his popularity or unpopularity. He could carry New York State by $250,000 plurality. He would be defeated in June, July and August. His popularity would grow in September. Other States would see the writing on the wall and help to elect him by an overwhelming plurality. It is a republican year, anyhow, and that in some measure accounts for the desire of Theodore Roosevelt to get in and capture the nomination."

BRYAN CALLS WILSON POLICIES "JOY RIDING"

Lincoln, Neb.—In several articles in the forthcoming issue of the Commoner William J. Bryan discusses his relations with President Wilson and his opposition to the campaign for preparedness. He says thep ublic should understand there are no personal differences between the President and himself.

"The President," says Mr. Bryan, "is doing his duty as he sees it. Acting under the responsibility of a citizen and under a sense of obligation to those who have trusted me. I am doing my duty as I see it."

Then he attacks the President's preparedness program and wonders why the President has changed his attitude. He warns the President that the people speak on election day and he had better consult them before it is too late.

"The President's preparedness programme is revolutionarq," says Mr. Bryan. "It is an abandonment of the historic policy of his party and the traditions of thec ountry. He has departed from the safe path of experience and is following the devious ways pointed out by the big papers, which voice the wishes of the manufacturers of munitions.

"He is joy riding with the jingoes and is applauded by grand standers who voices are unfamiliar to democratic ears. He is being praised by militarists, who seldom if ever vote the ticket of his party, and he is grievng those to whom democray is a religion.

"He has heard the murmuring of the shallows, but the depths have been dumb. The depths speak on election day—why not consult them now? And the masses—it it not better for them to advise beforehand than to punish afterward."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The distinguishing characteristic of an impluse is too often its impulsiveness. This is strikingly true of the patriotic impulse.

Let the war warped judgment of a sub-marine commander decree the death of an American citizen; the public demand for discontinuance of similar crimes is prompt and peremptory. Let the officials of the offending country permit a repetition or two of the offense—with the loss, it may be, of less than a score of American lives—and if war were the outcome, no city in the entire United States would lack the patriotism to back up the government with men and money to fight the nation's enemy.

But let the germs of preventable disease destroy, not a score, but a thousand American lives in one of our cities; the public demand for discontinuance of the crime is neither prompt nor peremptory. Let the lack of proper housing laws or the existence of unjust economic conditions permit the constant repetition of similar waste of life, and in no city is there as yet patriotism enough to back up the municipal government with adequate preparedness in men and money for war against such an enemy.

We say as yet advisedly, for the signs are unmistakable of an increasing recognition of the meaning of true patriotism. The impulse to defend national honor will exist as long as there are nations with any honor worth defending; but this impulsive spirit of patriotism so evident in times of international crises will be more and more reinforced by a daily life of patriotism in nation and state and city. And the result will be a type of preparedness that will place more emphasis on planning for better cities than on planning for bigger navies; and that will train our school children to become vigorous fighters for civic righteousness as the first step in raising the standard of national honor.

In the hope of emphasizing to some purpose the idea of municipal preparedness, The American City will give special attention to the subject this year in its issue for January, April, July and October. The theme of each number will be adequate forethought for municipal progress in general, and for the work of the season immediately following in particular. In accordance with this plan the present issue will be found to contain a notable series of articles on the planning for physical improvements in cities and for governmental efficiency and educational progress.

On the subject of national preparedness The American City, as a municipal publication, has perhaps little right to express an opinion. But we may be permitted to make at least this statement of fact:

Military and naval preparedness, under ideal conditions, represents a merely potential benefit to the disinterested citizens who pay for the bills—a benefit for whose destructive use most of them hope the occasion will never arise.

Municipal preparedness, on the other hand, represents a definite, tangible benefit to the taxpayers every day in the year—a benefit constantly employed in defense against disease, dirt, discomfort and disaster; a benefit which means clean and durable pavements, a plentiful supply of pure water, adequate fire protection ,the sanitary removal of sewage and garbage, the artistic lighting of city streets, and in general the conducting of our municipal governments with the minimum of waste and the maximum of efficiency.

Whatever our views on national preparedness, let us have adequate municipal preparedness—public-spirited and with a plan.—American City Magazine.

Solvay Girls Given to Understand They Did Not Have Proper Pep

Miss Marian Dickerman's girl basketball team decisively defeated the Solvay High school girl quintet in the City Hall gym last night by a score of 14-1. All of the local team's points were made by Margaret Howe, with the exception of one field basket shot by Natalie Butts, who also put up an interesting game.

More than 200 friends of the high school girls were on hand to cheer the team to victory and the hall resounded with the Hoo-rah-rah-hoo-rah-rah at frequent intervals. That the exhibition was a treat was putting it mild as some of the girls, particularly Elizabeth Howe, displayed every trick known to the game. Elizabeth Howe, as center, easily outplayed her opponent from the fact that she was more agile and did not hesitate in jumping into the air. This fact alone made it possible for her to secure the ball in most instances.

The game was played according to girls rules, with lines drawn parallel to the basket backboards to prevent the players from stepping into forbidden territory. The restriction kept the two centers confined in the middle of the hall while the forwards and guards had to recognize the dead line. A foul was called if one of the players stepped across the line.

An especially commendable feature of the game was the silence of players and spectators. But girls will be girls—and each time that Margaret Howe scored a basket, a slight manipulation of the blouse and ever so little adjustment of the hair would result. And the referee—Mr. Bath, coach of the Solvay team—received no "back talk" when he called a foul on one of the girls. The same was true with Miss Dickerman who officiated in the first half.

The visiting team obtained its lone tally in the first minute of the game, scoring the point on a foul. Through the efforts of Elizabeth Howe, the ball was kept under the Fulton basket most of the time. The Solvay guards were kept busy restraining the Misses Howe and Miss Butts from shooting, and a number of shots missed the goal by slight margins. Natalie Butts missed many opportunities to score by her over-anxiety and show of too much strength, the ball a number of times going twice as far as was intended.

The score at the end of the first half was 8-1. Margaret Howe scoring the entire eight points. She made two baskets in the second period and Natalie Butts the remaining one.

The lineup:

| Solvay High | | Fulton High |
|---|---|---|
| Nora Ruthedge | Left Forward | Natalie Butts |
| Francis Ryan | Right Forward | Margaret Howe |
| Catherine Mullin | Center | Elizabeth Howe |
| Hazel Lynch | Left Guard | Elizabeth Royce |
| Margaret Holihan | Right Guard | Florence Furness |

Substitutes—Miss Morris and Miss Riley on the Solvay team. Scorekeeper, Eva Wells.

ELIHU ROOT'S SPEECH

James A. Garfield made himself president in a speech in the republican presidential convention of 1880. It is not impossible that Elihu Root has made himself president by his speech at the republican state convention the other day. It was addressed to the nation and it electrifies the nation; it is the keynote of the republican national campaign. The republican national convention need adopt no other platform than the terms of this speech. The man who made it, speaking from his inmost soul, is a good man to carry out the principles there enunciated.—Watertown Times.

CALLING OUT THE TROOPS

A State constabulary would simply mean an unnecessary expense, upon the people. Sheriffs and constables now take care of the ordinary police business of the rural sections of the State. The Supervisors acted wisely in voting against that proposition, but we feel that they voted unwisely in recommending that the militia be relieved of acting on strike duty.

No one will deny that abuse of the power to call out the militia has been, in some instances, practiced, and we would favor any proposition to restrict the power of calling out the militia so that the soldiers might not be rushed into strike duty unless rioting wholly beyond the power of the local authorities was in progress, but the power should be vested in someone to use the militia to suppress riots and disorders threatening the lives and property of the citizens of the State.

The State must be sufficiently strong to maintain order under any circumstance and the State guard is the real agency through which order may be maintained. Even with an expensive constabulary, the necessity for the calling out of the State troops, might at any time arise, and the power to call out the troops, while it should be carefully restricted. should nevertheless always exist.— Buffalo Times.

THE FARM NAME

It is only within thep ast few years that the average farm in this country has had a name, or perhaps it would be more accurate to say that it is only recently that giving the farm a name has been advocated, because as yet the average farm is nameless. It is true that many of our farms of today have names, but a trip through your own community will convince you that the practice is by no means general.

It may seem like absolute folly, or at best sentiment, to spend time and money selecting a name for your farm and having it recorded, but a farm name really has a cash value if it is properly backed up by high quality products. It is the trade-mark of the farm and will soon become synonymous with theq uality of the farm's products. No man questions the value of a trade-mark for manufactured goods. Given a fair trial, the farm name will prove proportionately valuable for the farm products.

Let a man give his farm an appropriate name. Let him continue, for the next several years. to manage the farm well and to market under that name only the best of products whether they be cattle. grain, hay or dairy products. What will be the result? Before long that farm name will become a guarantee for quality and fair dealing. Products under that name will sell at a premium because their quality is assured. Unknown or mediocre products can always be purchased at the market price or below, but those backed by a farm name which always spells quality are rare and the consumer is eager to bid for them.

Moreover, a farm name backed by a reputation for quality actually increases the value of the farm When the owner's name is the guarantee of the quality of thep roducts. its value to the farm ceases with a change of owners. But if the farm name occupies that position, the purchaser is buying an established reputation as well as the land and is in consequence willing to pay a higher price. —Hoard's Dairyman.

BECOME PORCUPINES

In sounding innumerable slogans for the betterment of conditions of living, of merchandise retailing and of manufacturing, Secretary Hollenga, last night, bore heavily upon the unpardonable evil resulting from too much wig-wagging of the gossip's tongue. He said so many things bearing upon the subject that one hesitates to add more than a passing observation to his scathing rebukes hurled at the purveyors of choice bits of "news." Mr. Hollenga is to be heard making speeches upon more than one occasion in the future. Unless the gentleman is misjudged he will have more to say upon the same subject. As long as he is never at a loss for language to flay the deserving ones, we hesitate to mention a little sermon in the "Parable of the Porcupine." It is food for the minds of gossippers and anti-gossippers, and runs this way:

"The porcupine swaggereth not, neither does he attack anybody. His ways are ways of pleasantness, if he is let alone. His paths are paths of peace if he is not impertinently mussed up. But when he is attacked by dogs or wolves of war, then he is able to provide each and every one of them, first come, first served, with so filling and so warm a mouthful that they seldom pass their plates for a second helping." There is more of the parable, but this much is sufficient as a symbol for the guidance of those persons who would strive to resist the attacks of the zealous seeker for, and purveyor of, choice morsels—or, if you please—lies. While the power of gossip does not extend beyond a very limited sphere, its effects as long as they last are annoying. It would therefore be a good plan for objects of attack to become a peaceful porcupine among the gossippers, but ready, when attacked, to demand a terrible accounting of the assailant.

SUCCESS

Pull the cotton out of your ears and listen to this. Success is not a lot of money, fast automobiles and an annual trip abroad.

In this great struggle, this feverish strife for success, this contest of competition, we reverse the pyramid of life, and sacrifice all romance, all love of home, all play, for a fortune.

Americanitis is a fearful affliction. In this country, the only old folks are our young folks. The only young folks are our old folks. Take the tango, the turkey trot in the hesitation halls, and you see a large number of bald-headed old chaps jumping, hopping, skipping, cavorting, and why? Simply because they ignored romance, pleasure, love, when they were young. In their early excitement to get rich, they failed to be natural, and now they are madly in search of something they feel they have lost and they feel the time is short.

The joy of living, the romance of it all, the happiness, is a normal condition, and should be mixed with work and responsibility in right proportions, and mixed while we are young.

There is nothing more normal than young people acting like young people. The more romance in a young man's life today—the more results tomorrow.

All live, energetic, get-there men, are much the better for once having had their fling at life. When the bigger call comes for better work, they do not have to stop and do a lot of winter wooing.

There is no fool like the blamed old fool.

There is no failure in life that equals the man who has not lived.

There is no success that can compare with the man that has lived and learned, and at last has settled down to success.—The Silent Partner.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Oklahoma too may submit a woman suffrage amendment this year. The vote in the lower house stood 42 to 15 in favor. If it carries in the senate it will go to the voters in August. Iowa votes in June: West Virginia and South Dakota in November. 'Tis on Iowa that the suffragists are pinning their greatest faith.

"The Searchlight on Congress." reports the Sixty-Fourth Congress as introducing 5848 bills in its first eleven days. only 758 of which were public measures. It is declared that 90 per cent of thew ork of Congress is purely personal and local, the idea being for each member to do something for the greatest number of individuals in his district for the express purpose of securing votes for re-election. It adds that the people with votes are the only persons with whom Congressmen are concerned.

The state of Wyoming which was pioneer woman suffrage territory in this country is reported as about to pioneer in another field. that is, to be the first state in the Union to omit the levy of a direct state tax.

In spite of forty-seven years of equal suffrage, Wyoming's financial condition is so sound that the question that confronts her government is not how to meet a deficit but what to do with her surplus.

The day that gave equal suffrage to thew omen of Manitoba, saw also the Canadian Parliament about to consider a bill tog ive the Federal vote to the women of any province where they already had thep rovincial vote. It was in this way that women of Australia in 1902 gained federal suffrage. although the women of Australia were dealt with even more generously. For when the Australian provinces federated, the women in all thep rovinces were given federal suffrage, because at the time. they had provincial suffrage in two, West and South Australia.

Perplexed officials everywhere are turnin gto women for help in solving problems concerning human waste. A recent instance is that of Governor Bilbo of Mississippi who wants women as trustees on several state boards. At least such was the purport of his inaugural address.

In West Virvinia the average salary received by the teachers of the state is $344. The suffrage soap box orator does not fail to mention this fact when asked what woman suffrage has to do with wages, and she cheerfully gives the further information that in equal suffrage California the average is $750. Suffragists are confident of carrying West Virginia next November.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

When we see the struggle so many men have made from childhood up to a successful manhood against handicaps of nature and environment, it should at least make us marvel at our own lack of thrift and industry.

When Thomas Pryor Gore, Senator from Oklahoma, was eight years old, while playing with a schoolmate, he lost one of his eyes, and three years later the other eye was shot out by a cross-bow. Thus, with the most discouraging of all handicaps, blindness, he studied and fitted himself to be a lawyer. He graduated from Normal School and won his law degree at Cumberland University, Tennessee. He taught school, and began to practice law in Texas, at the age of 22. In 1901, he removed to Oklahoma territory, and the following year was a member of the territorial council. In 1907, he was sent to the Senate, and has served continuously since then, being re-elected last year for another term of six years.

Another man afflicted with blindness was John B. Herreshoff, the yacht designer of Bristol, R. I., who died last summer and to whose memory the whole city paid tribute on the day of his funeral. Though so terribly afflicted he was able to build America's cup defenders. He refused to let the fact that he was blind discourage him.

Miss Hattie Maddox did not despair though she too, was blind. She knew she "could," give the opportunity and everyone is given the opportunity who wants it sufficiently. She convinced John Wanamaker of this when he was Postmaster General and he gave her a position which she still holds—that of repairing mail bags. She asked only for a two months' trial, the same as is given to people who can see, and she made good.

In the light of what thousands unable to see accomplish, the fact seems hardly worthy of comment that one night recently, twenty-nine men, each having his eyesight, who twenty years or so ate from their dinner pails in the steel mills of Pittsburgh, had a reunion and dinner together in New York in the $7,000,000 palace of one of them, each of them being many times a millionaire. The same virtues that will lead anyone to success were the characteristics of these men in their upward climb—concentration, industry, perserverence and economy.

HERBERT RATED AS A VERSATILE COMPOSER

Victor Herbert's latest contribution to the light opera stage, "The Princess Pat," brings back to the music loving patrons of the Theatre, that versatile composer. in one of his happiest moods—lovlier music of its kind we have not had in a long time.

The staging of "The Princess Pat" is exceedingly handsome and the costuming of the chorus—a very pretty chorus—chosen for its ability, is remarkable in that. it is done with individuality. Victor Herbert's music is always delightful, no matter what Subject around which it is written.

"The Princess Pat." comes to the Quirk theatre Tuesday evening, February 29th.

A FORECASTING BY JOHN WILLYS

Possessed with an uncommon amount of business sagacity and knowing the automobile situation like a book, John N. Willys, president of the Willy-Overland company is regarded by many as theo racle of the motor car industry.

His ability to forecast coming events is nothing short of marvelous. A year ago, during the automobile show in New York, he made a prediction to the effect that when the 1916 show took place there would be at least five twelve-cylinder cars on exhibition. And when the twin sixes were counted this year it was found that he had foretold the exact number.

This was but another striking example of the foresight and keen business acumen of the Toledo manufacturer, Not only has he the ability to judge in advance, but his knowledge of the different phases of the automobile industry has given him the enviable reputation of being one of the best posted men in the field.

In 1913 and the year following his calculations as to what the public would demand were almost uncanny. He foretold the type, size and price that would meet with the approval of the majority of motorists. That he was correct is evidenced by the fact that the total production, amounting to 90,000 cars for the two year period, was not nearly enough to supply the demand.

Another predicition made by Mr. Willys a year ago was that the Overland factory would be shipping 600 cars a day before the end of 1915. At that time the Toledo plant was setting the pace for all motor car manufacturers with the exception of one. Its daily output was averaging around 150 cars, but even though its growth had been phenominal, few people outside of Mr. Willys believed it possible to quadruple its production during the year just passed.

THERE'S MORE WAYS THAN ONE OF DIGGING A HOLE

IMPROVING THE CITY STREETS

Cultivation of Shade Trees a Paying Policy.

By FRANK KOESTER,
Author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance," etc.

The cultivation of shade trees has proved very advantageous in European cities, as the trees in affording shade increase the attractiveness of the street. They also reduce the amount of flying dust and temper the winds, improve the air and conduce to the healthfulness of the city. Shade trees should be planted two or two and a half feet back from the outside edge of the curb and an earth surface of from two and a half to three feet in diameter left around the trunk for natural watering.

In addition to this, a desirable method of watering is that of gutter seepage, a hole being cut in the curbing, protected by a grating, and the water finding its way through the earth to the tree roots.

In some European cities waste paper baskets of meshed wire are placed at intervals around the trunks of shade trees and the bases of lighting poles. The bottoms of such baskets are some two feet above the surface of the street and the tops two feet or so higher. It is the duty of the police and of the individual citizen to see that no garbage is thrown on the sidewalks or into the streets, since the baskets, being conveniently placed, afford a place for such rubbish. The streets are thus much more easily cleaned and do not so quickly become cluttered with rubbish.

In wide streets in which vehicular traffic is heavy, so called safety isles should be placed to facilitate crossing. Such aisles should be edged with granite curbing, some six inches above the crown of the street, and should be about four feet in width and of suitable length. They may be placed at the side of the street car tracks or in the center of the street and added prominence may be given to them by ornamental electroliers.

At important focal points are placed small structures for supplying meteorological information. On the outside weather charts and forecasts are displayed and thermometers and barometers with continuous records of their fluctuations are provided. Condensed time tables of arriving and departing trains and vessels are shown.

An additional feature found in such structures and throughout European cities, of great convenience to the public, and one which would prove of even greater convenience to the American public if placed in similar locations, is the electric clock. Not only on the meteorological stations are such clocks placed, but also at every few blocks at some convenient location. Such public clocks are electrically controlled and operated from a central point. They are attached to lighting poles, news and subway kiosks, advertising columns and in whatever locations they will be of greatest use.

Fire hydrants, especially in prominent streets, if not placed against the building wall, should be sunk below the surface, not only for the sake of the appearance of the street, but to obviate danger of freezing in winter. Covers for such hydrants should be flush with the sidewalk and properly marked. Objection may be made that in case of fire such hydrants would be difficult to find, but this is overcome by signs placed on the buildings directly over the hydrant in the form of a red H and by other signs intermediate, with arrows pointing both ways, giving the number of meters to the fire hydrants in either direction.

The name of streets should preferably be placed on the corners of buildings, and each of the four corners should have the names of both streets. This is a cheaper and more effective method than the placing of signs on posts, which obstruct the sidewalk and which, owing to the expense, are usually only placed on two of the corners, diagonally. The post method is, however, at times a necessity. The combination of a white letter on a blue ground has proved to be the best arrangement of colors.

Pay Up Week.

Pay up week, which, as its name implies, is a kind of warfare against long standing debts, was recently inaugurated in the little city of Waukon, Ia., and so successfully did it prove that in the week set apart and advertised as such over $50,000 in old accounts was wiped off the books of the local merchants. The slogan was, "You pay your bills; I will pay mine."

A SUNNY TEMPER.

A sunny temper is a talisman more powerful than wealth, more precious than rubies. If you wish to attract friends and to do your best work, keep your mind filled with sunshine, with beauty and truth, with cheerful and uplifting thoughts. Bury everything that makes you unhappy and discordant, everything that cramps your freedom and worries you. Bury it before it buries you. Adopt the sundial's motto, "I record none but hours of sunshine."

LOIS MEREDITH

YOUNGEST STAR ON STAGE.

Lois Meredith Featured in "The Precious Packet," a Donald Mackenzie Pathe Production.

When Donald Mackenzie secured Lois Meredith for his Pathe production "The Precious Packet," he got the youngest star on the stage today, for Miss Meredith is only eighteen years old. Look at her, and you'll wonder that so much genuine talent is to be found in so girlish a little lady. Yet she followed Laurette Taylor in the leading role of "Peg o' My Heart," was featured in "Help Wanted," and played "Modesty" in "Everywoman." She has not yet reached the age where women, and especially those on the stage, choose to forget their birthdays, so her eig'teen years are not fancied, but real.

Little Miss Meredith can dance and sing more than ordinarily well, and hopes for a part in the spring in which she can utilize those talents. Despite her tender years she studies French, music and literature from choice and not compulsion (therein differing from most girls of her age) and works hard at her chosen profession, for she has a number of younger brothers and sisters to look after, and when she travels she takes the whole brood with her.

Miss Meredith was born in the United States, but spent her earlier years in Ireland, which explains her delightful accent when she forgets herself. In the Paris Salon was exhibited a statue which was much admired, for which she posed for arms and hands, for hers are considered by sculptors to be perfect.

"The Precious Packet," in which Miss Meredith is featured, was written by Fred Jackson, and is on the Pathe Gold Rooster program. It is the universal verdict that it fully measures up to the high standard of this series.

A Kipling work will at last be seen in motion pictures. He is one famous author who up to now has not lent his talents to the screen. Pathe, it is announced, has acquired the picture rights to "The Light That Failed," perhaps Kipling's best-known work, and turned it over to Edward Jose to produce.

For the first time in motion picture history two feature pictures will be made at the same time with the same cast. Edward Jose, the Pathe producer, is the man who is working the miracle, and he is enabled to, since he is producing Kipling's "Light That Failed," and Gilbert Parker's "The Weavers," both of which demand desert scenes and battles in which Arabs are engaged.

The first of the A. H. Woods theatrical successes to be put into pictures will be "New York." George Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, has just started work upon it, with the famous Florence Reed as his leading woman. "New York" will be released as a "Gold Rooster Play."

MAY BREAK GREAT ESTATES.

The British Government May Adopt Scheme of Land Purchase.

One of the results of the war, according to reliable information, will be the adoption by the government of a big scheme of land purchase for England such as has been so successful in Ireland.

Confronted with the twofold problem of providing employment for discharged soldiers both during and after the war and the desirability of increasing home grown food supplies, the home office, the board of trade and the board of agriculture entered into consultation with the war office and the admiralty, and the outcome was the appointment by the board of agriculture of a special committee presided over by Sir Harry C. W. Verney.

The report of the committee is said to recommend extensive state acquisitions of land by compulsory purchase for the establishment on a large scale of colonies of small holders and the development of co-operative buying and marketing and of agricultural credit banks, together with a provision for a large state grant to put the proposals into operation.

650,000 ACRES FOR CAMPERS AVAILABLE IN NEW ENGLAND

Government Will Lease Five Acre Tracts at $5 Per Year.

There has been widespread interest in New England states in the decision of the United States forestry bureau to open to summer campers and vacationists 650,000 acres of public lands in the White mountains of New Hampshire, and many have taken it for granted that the terms offered by the government, $5 per annum for tracts of five acres for each person, the leases to run for thirty years, will be taken advantage of by thousands of persons next summer.

But there are some aspects of the offer that are likely to make it less attractive on closer investigation. The rate specified is less nominal than would appear at first sight, for whereas $5 a year for five acres is cheap enough and a thirty year lease would cost only $150, it must be considered that there are in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts thousands of acres of land suitable for camping sites that may be purchased outright for $5 per acre, so that for a total outlay of $150 one may obtain not five, but thirty acres of very desirable land.

The waste lands in Massachusetts that may be obtained for next to nothing run into the thousands of acres, and inquiry at the state forestry commission shows that any quantity of such land can be purchased on lakes where the fishing and boating are excellent and in beautiful scenic surroundings. The state is buying up much of this land at an average price under $5 an acre and some of it on Cape Cod as low as 25 cents an acre, and what the state can do individuals may do if they possess the initiative.

Moreover, there is a law in Massachusetts which offers an even more attractive proposition than that presented by the thirty-year leases in the White mountains. Waste land purchased by individuals under this law will be planted in white pine or other valuable trees and cared for by the state by scientific forestry methods at a trifling expense to the owner, the only requirements being a form of transfer back to the state for its protection in the event of default.

Some long headed persons are taking advantage of this law, and sportsmen's clubs are beginning to acquire considerable areas in this way, but the great mass of the people are not availing themselves of it, and most of them probably do not know that such a law is on the statute books. This act offers not only an opportunity to acquire a pleasant summer camp, but a permanent investment in growing timber.

Witch Hazel Plant.

The plant witch hazel acquired its name in times when magic, black art, sorcery, necromancy and witchcraft were popular. A forked branch of witch hazel carried horizontally in the hands was believed to turn downward as it passed over a hidden vein of water, thereby saving time and labor necessary in prospecting.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP FIRE

Newspaper Derides Senate Resolution to Investigate Federal Control of Public Utilities.

Thursday's New York Times makes comment upon the Borah resolution as follows:

This year Senator Borah introduced the customary resolution for an inquiry into the subject of Government ownership of public utilities, and the Senate has added it to the resolution of Senator Newlands for an inquiry into the general matter of regulation of railways as suggested by the President in his message. The amendment should have been sufficient to kill the resolution to which it is added, if any attention had been paid to the platform upon which the Democrats came into power. "Efficient supervision and rate regulation" of public utilities is the declared policy of the Democratic Party, and must remain so regardless of action by Congress until revised by the party itself.

Some New Features

There is a novelty in the Government ownership argument this year. Senator Borah remarks upon the control of steamships and railways as part of the war measures across the ocean, and argues that "if these measures are necessary in time of war because they bring about greater economic and social efficiency," then ti follows that the same measures will necessarily be continued in time of peace as the result of the demonstration of the excellences of Government ownership and administration during war. The Senator must be alone in his observation that economy as well as efficiency is characteristic of war, or of Government action during war. He puts forward no facts beyond Government ownership, and assumes the rest, in contradiction to the record and the principle controlling the operation of transportation facilities in peace and war. In peace alone are economy and efficiency controlling considerations. So well established is this that railway officials are almost disqualified for military operations through their regard for expense, in war, time, not money, is the controlling factor. The military question is not "What is the cost?" but "Can it be done at any cost, and in shortest time regardless of cost and of every other consideration of convenience and equal service to all which would be controlling in peace?"

The Government operation which Senator Borah regards as a model for us is proceeding under conditions of waste, and embarrassment to all which ought not to have escaped the Senator's attention. Particularly is this true since the similar embarrassment on this side the ocean is chiefly the reflection of transatlantic conditions. It is said that our railways are inefficient, and that there is a lack of cars and ships. Yet the fact is that our traffic is suffering from foreign conditions. A French official investigation has shown that $80,000,000 is being paid in demurrage on ships because railways do not move the freight from the piers. To a great extent that is freight from this country which our railways have moved On one French Government railway a trainload of barbed wire for entanglements has not been unloaded in fourteen months. At Havre cargoes discharged on the piers have lain four months without shelter.

Unlooked for Efficiency

In war the situation is not unlike that when our Government, defeated in its efforts to control the flood in the Imperial Valley, appealed to Mr. Harriman of the Union Pacific Railway. The method by which the railway succeeded is the method by which wars are won, not the method by which dividends are earned. The ballast which stopped the flood are not shoveled or even dumped into the raging waters. The trains were run into the floods and sacrificed to save the valley. That is the way in which Government-owned railways in some countries and Government operated railways in other countries are now operated in war. There is efficiency only when military orders cut the knots regardless of every other consideration. The instant the military fiat fails there is stagnation and dry rot, because there is nowhere the interest of ownership. Governments are conducted by hired men, even if they are patriots, and affairs proceed as now under the Government ownership which Senator Borah admires. The Senate thinks so seriously of it that it adopted the resolution of inquiry yesterday. The cost certainly will be a score or two of thousands, and, if the reports shall be printed, perhaps some hundreds of thousands. And not one Senator will change his mind because of anything the inquiry can or will disclose. The manner and futility of such investigations are only still other phases and proofs of how inefficient Government action may be.

HON. C. N. BULGER SPEAKS HERE NEXT TUESDAY

Washington's Birthday will be celebrated by the Citizens Club on Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock. It is interesting to the membership to learn that the Hon. Charles N. Bulger, of Oswego, will make an address. Ex-judge Bulger's fame as a speaker extends throughout Central New York, hence his coming should be the means of breaking all records upon this occasion.

Nail driving and wood sawing contests for thel adies and button sewing and hat trimming contests for the men will make up a part of the program.

George and Martha Washington will be the guests of honor.

Each lady will take something that will help to make up a supper, which will be served at the close of the social session.

MASONS WILL HONOR GEORGE WASHINGTON

The membership of the Masonic fraternity in this city will observe Washington's Birthday by meeting on the evening of that day in Masonic hall. Dr. H. H. Clemans will give a talk on Washington, the Man and Mason." The rooms will be decorated in the national colors and an orchestra will be in attendance. There will be a social hour spent. The refreshment committee is planning some good things for the inner man.

SOLVAY VICTIM UNKNOWN HERE

In the list of men reported killed in the fatal explosion of a huge acid tank in the plant of the Semet-Solvay company, last night, is the name of Lyman Green, who is believed to have been a former resident of this city.

The 1914-15 directory gives the name of Lyman Green ,416 Seneca st. but inquiry at that address did not produce any definite information. His occupation is given as a chocolate worker, but the payroll at the Chocolate Works does not contain this name. Dr. Haviland, who owns the house at 416 Seneca st., was not able to give information.

Four men were killed in the ex- of the badly injured are not expected located in the new T. N. T. building No. 2 at Split Rock. Twenty-five men were employed in the building On account of the snow, motor and horse-driven ambulances had difficulty in getting to the scene of the accident, so that assistance was slow in reaching the injured. A fire, which followed the explosion was quickly extinguished through the presence of mind of the workmen, who turned lines of hose upon the flames, thus averting a great disaster.

NEW ANTHEM FOR NATION IS PROPOSED IN HOUSE BILL

First Since Forty-sixth Congress. $2,500 Prize Offered by Elks.

A fine, stirring and high sounding anthem has been introduced into the house by Representative Dyer of St. Louis, who has asked that congress adopt the resolution containing the verses as a national hymn. The introduction of this poetry as a joint resolution, according to Joel Grayson, the walking encyclopedia of the house document room, is the first since Representative S. W. Downey of Wyoming startled the Forty-sixth congress with a 200 page epic.

Representative Dyer's proposed anthem is the effort of Henry McEuen Jones of St. Louis to win the $2,500 prize offered by the Elks for a national anthem that congress will accept. The last verse of the resolution reads:

Give us peace by upright arbitration,
No death dealing shot to be hurled,
But if forced into war just remember
That Old Glory will never be furled.
For our union's cemented forever.
We have honored the blue and the gray,
Then we'll righteously follow Old Glory
With a power no nation can stay.

Noted Prima Donna to Appear in Song Recital

Music lovers of Fulton have a rare treat in store for them when Miss Julia Allen, soprano, appears in recital. Miss Allen has appeared most successfully in opera, and concert throughout Europe and America, and was leading soprano with Caruso when the celebrated Italian tenor made his concert tour of this country.

In addition to her groups of French. German and English songs, Miss Allen will sing two from the operas in which she has scored so many successes, including the Ah Fors E Lui from Verdi's "La Traviata."

In speaking of Miss Allen's work and her appearance with the Royal Italian Grad Opera company. the New York Press says: "Miss Julia Allen was a "La Traviata" joy. All the vocal honors went to her and she sang the music of 'Violetta' with her usual charm."

New York Staats Zeitung says: "Julia Allen, who sang "Lucia," has a beautiful voice which resembles Melba's voice as it was twenty years ago."

Miss Allen will appear here at the First M. E. church on Wednesday evening, February 23rd.

Modern investigation has shown that no article of food is good for a person if he dislikes it. If a child has practically a fixed notion that he does not like eggs they will do him no good and may do him harm. Only serious results can follow from coercing a child into eating food which he dislikes.—Professor M. V. O'Shea in Mother's Magazine.

SANDY HOOK NEEDS 16 COMPANIES OF MEN

New York—Two members of the Naval Consulting oBard and about three hundred American engineers yesterday had an opportunity to learn at first hand some of the needs of the United States Army.

The party was entertained by Col. C. L'H. Ruggles and Col. D. Skerrett, in command of the Sandy Hook proving grounds and Fort Hancock. Sandy Hook is the main land defense of New York and the admissions of commanding officers took some of the visiting engineers by surprise.

The range of the main battery of ten 12-inch guns at Sandy Hook, it was explained, is about 12 miles.

The need for money, men and equipment was vouched for by most of the officers interviewed. Hope was expressed that Congress would be prompt in its appropriations.

Dr. L. H. Baekeland, a noted chemist and member of the Naval Consulting Board, stated that the board had evolved a method of manufacturing nitrates and nitric acid which would make this country independent of Chile in event of war.

First Duty of a City.

A city is in reality a kind of apparatus or mechanism consisting of fixed places in which to live, work and be amused, with means of transportation of products to and from desired points.

The first duty of the city is to furnish a free means of access, belonging to the public, to the private property of each individual. Such avenues of communication in the rural districts are called roads and are widely separated, but in cities they are multiplied and called streets. It must always be possible, and it is possible, for a citizen to take to the highways and reach without interference the land of any other citizen throughout the United States.

OKLAHOMA LEGISLATORS RIOT AT CAPITOL

Oklahoma City, Okla.—A battle of ink wells, paper weights and fists occurred in the Oklahoma House of Representatives yesterday noon.

In the melee Arthur H. Geissler. chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, was knocked down and rendered unconscious by Representative Lorise Bryant, of Big Heart, Osage County.

The members were voting on a section of an election law designed to take the place of the famous "Grandfather law," recently declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court because it disenfranchised the negro population of the State.

The proposed law is a product of a Democratic caucus. It had passed the Senate and was up for final passage in the House, with Republican and Socialist members offering vigorous opposition. Geissler was on the floor through the courtesy of a visitor's permit issued him as Republican State Chairman.

SAVE MONEY ON ADVERTISING

You Want to Save It---Don't You?

Of course you have not thought much about the difference in cost between an advertising space in a newspaper published in your home town and the same amount of space in the city competitors—but let us tell you what it is:

LESS THAN 30 PER CENT

Ten chances to one you have been told the difference between local rates and city rates is justified by the figures furnished by the circulation man, whose business it is to "pad" for his employer's benefit. Take it from us, you are a victim of the "padder's" commercial instincts.

Now what you have a right to do is to ask yourself whether it is profitable to pay good money for something you cannot see—but which has been told to you. We have no objections if you follow the same o ld rut—but don't forget that a blind horse goes straight forward.

That's your business more than it is ours. Our sole interest in the proposition is to help you over to the winning side, at the same time remembering that a blind man shouldn't attempt to catch fleas.

Why One Woman Has a Career and Another Hasn't.

HOW VALUABLE TIME FUGITS.

What Does the Housewife Do With Her Leisure?—Play Bridge, Go to Teas, Chit Chat Over the Telephone or Build Up a Career?

"Oh, but I must wash on Monday!" exclaims the methodical housewife.

"Of course we must have a hot dinner on Sunday noon. We've always had it."

And so it goes. The average housekeeper is quite convinced that things must be done as they always have been done and that she must spend a certain amount of time (registered only in her own mind) on certain household tasks. She may wonder why other women seem to have more time, when others in fact have a "career" on the side, when it takes her every minute of her waking hours merely to manage the home. Now, if there is one fault greater than others which we lay against women in their present state we would say it is lack of power to concentrate. How we can "fritter time away!"

The sole reason for difference between these two women is undoubtedly that the former could concentrate and that she had in mind something over and beyond her housework worthy of that concentration. She wanted to take the subscriptions, she wanted to develop as her husband's bookkeeper, she wanted to find time to be her children's companion. So she studied and shortened her work and concentrated, thinking of the most important ends first and not putting undue prominence on the details.

Any woman, yes, any homemaker, even with children, can do something outside of her home if she really wants to. We have no patience with a fairly wide circle of ladies who grumble that other women have careers or work outside the home and that they cannot. The chances are that they are not willing to make the sacrifices necessary—to stride both horns of a career and matrimony. They may not be willing, for instance, to give up an excess of telephoning to friends, gossip and chit chat. They may not be willing to spend far fewer hours running from shop to shop looking for a waist 50 cents lower and spending in doing it three valuable hours in which at concentrated work they could certainly have earned several dollars. They may not be willing to give up an undue amount of amusement and social life which eats more time out of the average woman's day than any one has estimated. We all want to be neighborly and to have friends, but that does not mean telephoning for an hour after breakfast to find out what So-and-so wore or what she said or when they are going.

Several women with children have met success in work outside of the home and at the same time managed to build up a beautiful family life. One woman with three little children has managed to support the entire family when the husband was crippled. Another, with two children and a baby, finds she can devote at least three hours a day to literary work. Another has sent children through college by representing a magazine, and in no case was the home neglected.

"In the olden days they had no watches, you know," said the father.

Homemade Gas.

Spanish peasants living in the cork oak region use homemade gas obtained from cork refuse. As described by one authority, the process consists in filling several large teakettles with the waste bark and placing each in turn over the fire during the evening, burning the volatile gas as it escapes from the spouts. The carbonized residue forms the fine black-brown pigment known to commerce as "Spanish brown."

His Golf Prize.

When the Duke of York was living in Edinburgh in 1681 he was told that a certain shoemaker named Patersone was the best golf player in Scotland, and him, the duke, later James II., chose as partner in a foursome, winning a huge stake. He promptly turned over the money to Patersone, who forthwith built a house in which the duke placed a stone with a Patersone crest bearing the motto, "Far and Sure."

Flowers.

To be consistent with the prevailing quaintness of the styles of the middle nineteenth century a number of artificial flowers have appeared on frocks and suits as trimming in one case and to give a bright color note in the other. A high degree of art has been reached in the manufacture of these flowers and one's natural prejudice to that which is artificial is somewhat removed by their close resemblance to the real growing blossoms.

The boutonnieres for wear with the tailored suits most often consist of a single flower surrounded by smaller ones rather stiffly arranged. This one flower may be a rose, a poppy, a gardenia or a carnation. Whatever the flower, the color is more or less dull. Dull roses, gray forgetmenots and plenty of foliage make these small boutonnieres small pastels of art.

Drawn Work and Swedish Weaving.

Many of the new luncheon sets are square instead of round. Whether it is merely a passing fad or a fashion here to stay remains to be seen. These square sets have a wide hem and a drawn work border three-quarters of an inch wide, and a feature of this new drawn work is the introduction of colored threads.

Swedish weaving is another form of needlework being revived and is applied to household linens. It is really based on drawn work, but is slightly different, worked in color and quite simple. The delightful part is, after one has acquired a working knowledge of the few stitches used, one can create one's own designs.

A Classic Monster.

"Write down all you know about centaurs," said a schoolteacher to a new pupil. The boy returned to his seat and presently handed the teacher the following attempt at composition: "A centaur was ancient cavalry and archery all in one piece. He could not be knocked out of his saddle because he hadn't any, being the same person as his horse. If he needed a tent he did not need a stable, or if he needed a stable he did not need a tent—I do not know which—and if he needed forage he did not need rations, or if he needed rations he did not need forage. Although he was mythical and primitive this made him very convenient for war!"

Showed Them How.

In "Welsh Humor" is this story "Sir Foulk Fitzwarren was recounting to his knights his exploits against the Saracen. These being calmly received. Sir Foulk said, 'But right here, the other day, I jumped from the ground to the top of my castle.' The knights being skeptical, Sir Foulk invited them to come the next day and see him perform the feat. When they assembled he jumped up one step of the stairway and continued, jumping step by step, till he was on the top of the tallest tower. 'But we could do that too,' chorused the knights. 'Not till I showed you how,' retorted the redoubtable warrior."

The Beauty of Harmony

Few women seem to realize the advantage, assistance and general help that are obtained from having the tone or note, as it were, that of harmony through and part of the various phases of life. Even educated women and women of more or less nice instincts seem to fail to realize how much can be done by the individual to make a certain amount of harmony in life.

If a woman is in the least high strung, temperamental or nervous, it is advisable, if not necessary, that her surroundings should be as much as possible harmonious and in good taste.

Unfortunately to carry out the idea satisfactorily more or less money is necessary. But a woman who can plan well and also has good taste can choose her pictures, wall paper, rugs and furniture to look well in a conservative way both singly and as a whole. No matter how few her possessions may be, a woman can have around her a something that suggests calm and peace wherever the eye rests.

Every one is better mentally, physically and temperamentally if the home life is free from disputes, bad temper or irritation from any member of the family. Harmony counts for more in home life than anywhere, and there it is most important and farreaching in its beneficial results. The one and only way to obtain harmony in home life is to have each and every member in the home circle considerate of the others in every way—in other words, self control, which so many do not think worth while just in the family circle.

Observing a certain amount of care in selecting the colors for one's garments is not only more satisfactory in the long run to the wearer, but has a pleasing and more or less soothing effect upon others. Few women seem to realize how necessary it is to dress in colors that harmonize with the complexion and eyes. Another important point is that as women grow older it is wise to change the style of clothing as well as the color, so as to as much as possible still have that harmonious general effect.

Many of the unpleasant and even dangerous occurrences in life would be done away with if people were more careful in conversation to observe a rule to have every topic one that is conducive to a feeling of general harmony for all.

A certain amount of harmony can be expressed by the attitude of the body, which with some people is merely the outward expression of the working of a soul and mind in harmony and accord with all their fellow beings.

Harmony in the speaking voice is a desirable quality. Even, well regulated tones are rare. That so few people have harmony in the speaking tones is because almost anything that is not in normal condition shows in the voice, especially a disordered state of the nerves. Few women realize how much it helps to be self controlled to keep the voice free from unevenness and a quaver or a sobbing voice, which so many women have. A controlled, well modulated voice is among the assets in life.

Wise women select their friends, if possible, only from those who are in mental harmony, those people whose tastes and points of view are agreeable to them. So called friendship not founded on that harmony does only harm.

Some few women are fortunate enough to have perfect harmony between mind and body. Most women are obliged to be content with keeping the two in harmony as much as they can.

Cleveland's Inexpensive Police Force.

Cleveland has one policeman for every 831 inhabitants. New York has one for each 495 inhabitants, and Chicago one for each 486 citizens. St. Louis has one policeman for every 379 of its population. These facts will be contained in a report soon to be issued by Secretary W. W. Norris of the police department. The statement will show that Cleveland's per capita expenditure for police is less than that of any of the largest fifteen cities of the country.

Miss Rosamond Pinchot, Expert Rider and Driver.

Noted for her skill in the saddle and in driving high mettled horses is Miss Rosamond Pinchot, daughter of Amos R. E. Pinchot of New York city, famous for his sociological work. Ever since she was big enough to sit on a pony's back Rosamond has been instructed in the art of handling horses until she is as capable of saddling her mount or harnessing her driver as well as any groom—not that she usually performs such tasks, but she can do so if occasion requires. In the saddle Rosamond is perfectly at home, and at the recent horse show she drove her ponies in competition in the ring.

"Ships of Fate."

As nuts are plentiful at this time of the year, the following game can easily be played:

Prepare as many half shells of walnuts as there are guests. In each fasten a small candle with a drop of wax.

Fill a tub with water, and before sailing the boats the water should be agitated, so as to have it wavy. Two at a time may sail their boats, lighting their candles as they do so. The life of the owner is prophesied by the seaworthy qualities of his ship.

If the storm overcomes the ship the owner will be wrecked by adversity. The ship sailing across the tub signifies a long sea voyage, while those remaining by the side show that the person loves home better.

If the two ships stay together throughout the trip the couple owning them will have a happy marriage. If they bump together that signifies a quarrel, and if they sail in opposite directions each person will lead a single life.

Boy Scouts of Hawaii.

Under the heading "Scouting In Hawaii" Scouting prints the following:

A. A. Wilder, special field scout commissioner for Hawaii, reports that scouting is booming in these island possessions of the United States. Plans are being made for raising a budget to carry on the work in a more systematic manner and to extend the benefits of the movement to a greater number of boys. A contribution of $1,000 has been received as a starter for this fund.

Plans are also being made for the sixth annual rally to be held on Washington's birthday. It has been suggested that scouts from all the islands in the group be invited to attend and that this be made the first of a series of interisland gatherings.

Hole In the Ice.

A game that is great fun to play is called "hole in the ice." The hole, or crack, in the ice is represented by two chalk lines on the floor. One row of children at a time runs or jumps in turn, trying to jump over the hole. If any one touches the floor between the lines instead of going home to his seat he must first come to the front of the room, while the others are jumping, and dry his feet by running on tiptoe "on the ice." The width of the crack may be gradually increased so as to make this game more difficult.

The Two Misses.

Little Miss Hurry,
All bustle and flurry,
Comes down to her breakfast ten minutes too late;
Her hair is a-rumple,
Her gown is a-crumple,
She's no time to button and hook herself straight.
She hunts and she rushes
For needles and brushes,
For books and for pencils flies upstairs and down.
If ever you find her
Just follow behind her
A trail of shoe buttons and shreds of her gown.

But little Miss Steady
By school time is ready,
All smiling and shining and neat in her place;
With no need to worry,
She pities Miss Hurry,
Who but yesterday sat here with shame in her face.
Her heart beating lightly
With duty done rightly,
She vowed she will never again change her name.
For though you'd not guess it,
I'm bound to confess it,
These two little maidens are one and the same.

Mr. Barnackel

By EDITH V. ROSS

"Enoch Barnackel! What a name! Any one would know that he was a crusty old man of the farmer type, uneducated and with no manners. But what can I do?"

These words were spoken to herself by a girl who had some sixteen years before been left at a foundlings' home and who had been given the name of Helen and had later chosen the additional name of Whitman. She had been retained at the home as an employee till she approached seventeen, then was informed that a farmer named Barnackel had written that he wanted a wife and asked whether one could be sent to him. Helen was informed of the opportunity.

After a long and tearful deliberation, feeling incompetent to go out into the world and make a living, she decided to go out to Mr. Barnackel. If he was very terrible she might commit suicide. The matron approved of her resolution, for she was comely, and the good woman feared that with her inexperience she might fall a victim to some designing person.

Mr. Barnackel was informed that there was a young woman ready to accept his proposition, and he sent money for her journey. The heart broken girl nerved herself to her fate and one afternoon alighted at a railway station at the village near which his farm was located. A young farmer with a whip in his hand approached her and asked if she was the young woman who was to marry Mr. Barnackel.

"I am," was the reply. "That is, if he isn't an ogre."

The young man smiled. His smile was very winning. "I have a team here," he said. "I'll drive you to the farm."

When seated in the wagon and he had said "get up" to the horses Helen expected that he would say something to her. He did not. He seemed to be thinking.

"What kind of a looking man is Mr. Barnackel?" she asked.

Now, the young man was George Barnackel, nephew of the man who had written for a wife. The uncle was fifty years old, his face looked like a ball of strings, his hair was red, and he was just too unlovely for anything. At any rate, that is the way the daughter of one of the neighboring farmers put it. In fact, he was exactly what Helen had conceived him to be, judging from his name. He must also have been a fool or he would never have sent his good looking nephew for a young girl he expected to make his wife. Upon Helen's inquiry George turned his face toward her, displaying a set of regular white teeth by smiling, and asked:

"Suppose I should tell you that he is a disagreeable old codger and always cross as a bear. What would you do?"

"I would jump into the river—that is, if there is one near by."

There was a prolonged silence, at the end of which the young man said:

"And what would you say if I told you that I am Mr. Barnackel?"

Helen's heart went up into her throat. She made no reply to the question, but she sidled nearer to her companion. Presently there came a subdued voice:

"Are you Mr. Barnackel?"

"I am."

Her face was bent low. He leaned lower himself and looked up into it. He saw what he took to be a look of pleasure. Perhaps it was relief. The reins were in his right hand. She was sitting at his left. He put his left arm about her waist. She looked up at him, her eyes wet, a suspicion of a smile on her lips. He kissed them.

"How far is it to the farm?" was the next thing said.

"About three miles."

George drove over six miles, which seemed like three to Helen, then stopped at a farmhouse.

"Wait in the wagon," he said, "while I go in to tell my mother and sister you're here. They don't know you're coming."

Leaving the reins in her hands, he went into the house. He was gone a long while. Helen saw the face of an elderly woman surveying her from a window, then a younger one doing the same.

"Oh, dear," she said, "I hope they're not going to make him send me back!"

Presently a door opened and the two women came out, the elder in advance. She welcomed Helen, though she seemed constrained. Leading her into the house, the younger woman showed her to a chamber upstairs and, shutting the door behind them, took her in her arms, exclaiming:

"You poor child!"

"Why am I to be so pitied?" asked Helen, surprised.

"You're not. It's all right. We'll make you very happy. My brother is not the Mr. Barnackel you came out here to marry. That one is my uncle, a crusty old man who would not do for you at all. Being rheumatic, he asked George to drive you from the station to his farm. George wants you himself. Mother has given her consent, and you are to be married—that is, if you wish to marry George—at once."

Helen asked if haste were necessary. George replied to this that his bride belonged to his uncle, was expected by his uncle and unless the knot were tied there was no knowing what he would do in the matter. The chance of being turned over to the old curmudgeon so terrified Helen that she was only too glad to be married at once. The wedding took place that evening.

Misses' Costume of Chic Design.

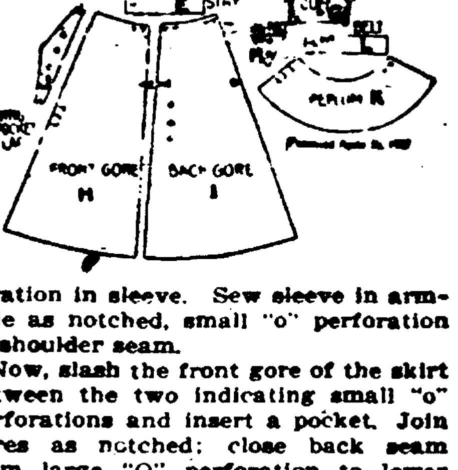
Beige worsted voile trimmed with soutache braid and taffeta. The blouse is stitched with braid.

Delicate beige worsted voile combined with silk of the same color and embellished with narrow soutache braid expresses the elegance of this costume most effectively. The waist has a high neck and drooping shoulders, and the skirt is a three-piece design, gathered at the top. In medium size the design requires 4⅛ yards 44-inch material.

The home dressmaker will find that by studying the construction guide she has a task easily within her ability. To make the waist first slash down the fold at center-front from neck edge to large "O" perforation; underface and finish with loops and buttons, as illustrated on reverse side of envelope; adjust a straight strip of material about 2 inches wide underneath. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in right back at notches. Gather lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above. Adjust stay under gathers, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Join the two collar sections as notched and sew to neck edge as notched.

Close the sleeve seams as notched. Gather between double "T" perforations. Sew cuff to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation at seam of sleeve and bring seam of cuff to large "O" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.



Now, slash the front gore of the skirt between the two indicating small "o" perforations and insert a pocket. Join gores as notched; close back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above perforation for a placket. Gather upper edge of skirt between double "TT" perforations. Adust to position.

Braid may be stitched about the hem also if desired.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6618. Sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

The Woman of Today

It is only hearsay that we have to go on today, for we have no notion of who it was that pointed out the value of learning to "part with things as they go." But lest you, gentle reader, be one of those to whom the idea is new we frankly borrow the phrase and pass it along.

Now, we all know that many a fine sermon has been preached on the text of "Taking things as they come." How diligently have we been admonished in this respect and how often. Our friendly advisers love to say to us, "Oh, do not worry; just learn to take things as they come." Exactly so, and a sane method of procedure it is since we cannot affect their coming and cannot tell what fortunes or misfortunes the morrow may hold.

But if this be wise why then must we not also learn the lesson of "parting with things as they go," as gracefully and as easily as we strive to accept their coming? For things do go in this world, often just when we want them to stay.

An excellently trained man once lost an excellent position unjustly. It was not a light matter, but when it went he parted with it and let it go, as much as to say: "So much for that; that's done with. Now, what next?" And of course eventually he found the next thing, just as we all are bound to do.

It doesn't make any difference what it is, when things go let's learn to part with them, not to hang on to them and prolong the agony of their going.

"Men die and worms do eat them, but not for love," we often hear. But, alas, it is for love that women do, indeed, almost die—or, in fact, over love's going.

And over how many things do women allow grief to eat out their very hearts when the art of learning to part with things as they go would have saved the day. If it's gone, why, let it go, whether it's a lost love or an heirloom, a lost position or a week's pay.

Let's learn to say, "Well, that's gone, done for, over with"—and so with a wave of the hand, "Farewell. What's next?"

attractive combinations of Angora wool. Women who knit them use white, so that when new bands need to be attached to the wrists the bother of matching shades is obviated.

Baked Apple Dumplings.

Select tart apples, pare and core them and cut in quarters. Three large apples should make six dumplings. The dough is made as follows: Two and a half cupfuls of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder and one teaspoonful of salt. Sift these ingredients together. Rub two-thirds cupful of lard into the flour and mix with enough cold water to make a dough which can be easily handled. Divide the dough in six parts and roll each part out large enough to hold the apples. When the dough is rolled put the apples in the center and fold the dough over it, pinching the ends together. Bake in a shallow buttered dish in a moderate oven and serve with cream and sugar.

Devil's Food Cake.

Yolk of egg, one-quarter bar of chocolate or four teaspoonfuls of cocoa, one-half cupful of sweet milk. Cook this until smooth; cool. Add four tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of sweet milk, in which dissolve one teaspoonful of soda, one and one-half or two cupfuls of flour.

Filling: One-fourth of a bar of chocolate or four teaspoonfuls of cocoa, dissolved in one cupful of boiling water; one cupful of light brown sugar, one tablespoonful of butter and one heaping tablespoonful of cornstarch. Cook this until it thickens. Let cool. Add vanilla and nut meats.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

For the quieter hours spent in the boudoir this dressing sacque is eminently appropriate. It is carried out in pink silk crepe de chine trimmed with lace and embroidery, 3 1-2 yards 36-inch material being required to make it. ### The Soup Kettle.

CORN SOUP.—Put one can of corn first through the meat grinder and then through a coarse sieve; add two quarts of milk, one tablespoonful cornstarch wet with a little cold water or milk, salt and pepper to taste, butter size of egg. Boil until creamy.

Spinach Soup.—Pick over carefully, wash and boil enough spinach to measure a pint, when cooked; chop into a soft paste; put into a stewpan with four tablespoonfuls butter, salt and pepper to taste. Cook for five minutes; add two quarts of stock, or milk. Let this boil up, then rub through a strainer and serve with squares of toast.

Tomato Soup With Whipped Cream.—Strain one can of tomatoes through a sieve, scald thoroughly. Heat three large cupfuls milk; add two tablespoonfuls butter and two tablespoonfuls flour; mix well, season with salt and pepper; put one half teaspoonful soda into the tomatoes before mixing with the milk. Serve in soup plates with a spoonful of whipped cream.

Veal Soup.—Cover a knuckle of veal with cold water and simmer two hours. When it starts to boil skim well a few times, then your broth will be nice and clear; remove the veal when tender, add a half cupful well washed rice and some parsley; season to taste; cook until rice is tender.

Clam Soup.—Twenty-five large clams, one cupful boiled milk, one blade of mace, pepper to taste; scrub clams clean, put into deep kettle; add one cupful cold water, cover. When the clams have opened, skim out and drain off the liquor; to four cupfuls broth add two cupfuls hot water, mace and pepper; chop the clams fine; add to the hot liquor; then add hot milk.

LONDON PAPER LIKES WILSON

London.—Discussing the right of merchantmen to arm for defence under international law, the military correspondent of the Times says it would be a grave mistake for President Wilson at this date to alter the rule under which such vessels are admitted to American ports.

The correspondent after citing numerous historical instances in support of his views says:—

"Nothing could be clearer from a persual of accounts relating to armed merchantmen than that they seldom waited to be summoned by any ship, once her hostile intent was perceived or even suspected."

Denouncing Punch, which this week publishes a cartoon in which, under the caption "Job's Discomforter," practically represents President Wilson as a coward who continually is writing notes but does not act, and as the man who, according to Uncle Sam, who is addressing Job, but, pointing to Mr. Wilson in the background, "Can knock the spots off you for patience," the Daily Chronicle, following the example of the Daily Telegraph, calls upon the British press and public not to attack the President or interfere with American politics.

The Daily Chronicle says:—

"The best way to counteract the influence of the German propaganda in America is to maintain an impartial attitude and to give to America every facility to obtain the news and see the British case as stated by those who can speak with authority. England never can afford to emulate the example of the illicit, sordid and corrupt press methods adopted by the Germans."

PREDICTS GERMAN NAVAL RAID ON COAST

Liverpool—"I have always believed," said Lord Derby, director of recruiting, at a workingmen's mass meeting here tonight, "that sooner or later the Germans will attempt a great sea raid on this country, and that, however well organized the navy is, it will not be able to stop it, but I believe that army and navy now are so co-ordinated that even if a raid comes it will be practically inoperative and that those who come will be destroyed."

Discussing the air menace, Lord Derby appealed to the newspapers not to agitate unduly the public mind regarding air raids, because of the effect such agitation was likely to have on the British airmen.

DR. FINLEY'S STAND ON BILL RESENTED

Albany, N. Y.—Assemblyman C. F. Welsh issued a statement last night declaring tha tthe opposition of the State Education Department to his bill calling for military training in the secondary schools of the State constitutes "a flagrant violation of thep rinciples of popular government." The department does not favor the measure in its present form, and Dr. John H. Finley, head of the department, has sent a letter to the school authorities throughout the State asking their opinion.

MR. ROOT'S OPPOSITION COMES FROM WHITMAN SIDE

Albany, N. Y.—Elihu Root will not have New York State's delegation to the Chicago National Convention unless he wins it in the primaries. That became almost a certainty. Those politicians, including thef riends of Governor Whitman, who are opposed to the domination of William Barnes have agreed to make contests in practically all the Congressional districts likely to instruct for Elihu Root.

Governor Whitman will not lead personally the district fight. He has made clear his position to his political associates and friends. He believes that as Governor he should attend first to the State's business in Albany, put through his financial reforms and other measures and not go on the stump. But his position will be set forth and those who wish to follow will have a tanrard bear.

Agreement was practically reached today at a conference to let the Governor's financial progrem go through the Legislature. The Barnes forces have made a careful canvass of the situation and have become conviinced that no attempt ot block the Governor at this time would start a storm of resentment through the State and lead anywhere.

CAPTAIN WANTS BATTLE CRUISERS

Washington, D. C.—Congress might well appropriate for the construction of four battle cruisers instead of two battle ships and two battle cruisers, proposed by the administration program, according to Captain J. S. McKean, aid to Rear Admiral William S. Benson, Chief of Naval Operations, who appeared before the House Naval Committee today. Captain McKean's views coincide with opinions recently expressed to the committee by Rear Admiral Albert W. Grant, commander of the submarine flotilla. It is also understood that Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, commander in chief of the Atlantic fleet, is of the same opinion. Admiral Fletcher will be heart later.

Captain McKean agrees with Rear Admiral Grant that forty-eight submarines should be constructed at once, but does not believe that construction should be limited to vessels of the 800-ton type. He told the committee he was a firm believer in the large fleet submarine, and also in the small coast defence type to be operated from shore bases and in coastal waters.

BUYERS DO NOT WANT WAR'S END

R. G. Dun's weekly review of trade conditions says:

"Accumulation of forward business is only limited by the ability and disposition of manufacturers to further extend commitments. Disproportion between demand and supply—heretofore apparent in comparatively few lines—is spreading, and it is increasingly manifest that productive and distributing facilities have not kept pace with the rapid growth in requirements. Scarcity of materials is a more noticeable feature, and in the West and South, as in the East, it is much easier to gnd buyers than to obtain merchandise."

BIGGEST APARTMENT IN N. Y. RENTS FOR $25,000

New York.—Thel argest apartment suite in the city—forty-four rooms and thirteen baths—was rented yesterday by Douglas L. Elliman & Co. It is in the building being erected on Park avenue, between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets.

Although declining to give the name of the tenant, it was said by renting agency that he is one of the wealthiest manufacturers in the country. The annual rental is given as $25,000.

NEW ALTITUDE RECORD SOUGHT

New York.—Determined to wrest the altitude record for flying from the German who now holds it, Captain Archibald B. Ford, of the British Aviation Corps, who is in this country recuperating from wounds received after thirteen months' service as an air pilot on the west front, is preparing to make a trial flight to beat the present record of 24,000 feet.

Captain Ford, who is only twenty-two years old, is now building at the Curtiss factories, in Buffalo, the biplane in which he will make his flight. A Curtiss enginew ill be used, but the aeroplane will be of Captain Ford's designing and will have planes specially adapted to the pressure to which they will be subjected.

The young man, who was pronounced by British authorities to be one of the best pilots in the service, was grievously wounded during service and came to this country to recuperate. He was then a Lieutenant. Since his arrival here he has received his commission as Captain. He instructed Mr. Vernon Castle in the art of flying at the Curtiss plant.

Captain Ford will make the trial flight either at Newport News or at Buffalo. He will use an oxygen helmet. He has been flying since 1912 as an amateur, and is the son of the man known in England as the "blotting paper king."

Can you tell me why it is that men will go out of their way to patronize out-of-town industries? These men are nationally patriotic, locally home loving, and will contribute any reasonable sum to any rational cause in the interests of civic pride or progress. But they will insist on buying things made out of town. They want to see business better at home. They will spend much money and a lot of time towards any honest effort to bring business to town, but after it gets located in town, and really deserves success, they start sending for things made in the big cities. They start to make the cities larger, and the towns smaller. This is exactly what they do.

The real amount of their purchases may not make or may not break the local institution, but it is unquestionably a mighty poor plan to buy a fine horse, put him in the stable and fail to feed him.

By and by the horse develops the prehistoric disposition in him—proves to be a mule, and just when you want him to work he balks, strikes and kicks. And he runs away, over into the next town, where the local folks feed better.

The man who can follow a lead—who can lead or can follow, as circumstances require—is a big man. There are plenty of men who can lead, but they are not always willing to follow. It is an evidence of the big man when you occasionally stoop down and help the other fellow. The objectionable man is the officious fellow. The indispensable man is the one who can get behind the gun when it's necessary.

Some men say there is no friendship in business. Bosh! The annals of the world are filled with the best proof that this statement is more than bosh.

Friendship must be planted first by your own hand, nourished by your own heart; and if you have patience, if you are willing to wait until theis friendship is strong, sturdy, you will gain something in this world that is worth while— business friendship.

"Sons of Italy" Plan to Stir Up Interest in New Organization

The organization here, ultimately, of a lodge of the Sons of Italy seems to be assured. Another meeting of the men who have signed the petition for a charter was held yesterday, when it was planned to carry on an active membership campaign from now until next Sunday. On that day an open meeting will be held at 114 Oneida st., and final arrangements made for working under the new charter.

While no physician has yet been chosen, it will be necessary that the services of one shall be employed to make physical examination of all candidates for membership, and this will occur at next Sunday's meeting.

Oswego Lodge, No. 436, Sons of Italy, will send a representation here next Sunday to make short addresses and to assist the local committee in perfecting its plans.

The canvas for members conducted yesterday by Frank Zaia, Angelo Cincotta and Tony Manitto, resulted in their securing enough names as to insure the organization of the new society.

COMMITTEEMEN MAKE FIRST PUBLIC REPORT ON TRIP TO DETROIT

A few days ago the board of directors of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce appointed a special committee, consisting of Messrs. L. W. Emerick and F. C. Ash to investigate the advisability of locating a steel castings plant in our city. This committee went to Detroit and upon returning to Fulton reported as follows:

"At your request your committee investigated personally at Detroit, the record and standing of the Michigan Steel Casting company and one of its former officers, Mr. A. F. S. Blackwood, with the purpose of determining the advisability of locating such an industry in Fulton.

"The Michigan Steel Casting company is a Michigan corporation, organized in 1907, with three men as the principal investors. Mr. Flinterman, who has been and is now its president and general manager; Mr. Hoyt, a trustee of the Union Trust company of Detroit and Mr. Caulkins. These three men invested, we were told, from $15,000 to $20,000 each and took over the property of the Michigan Crucible Steel Casting company. Mr. Blackwood was made vice- president and general superintendent and was given certain amounts of stock from year to year as a bonus. Shortly after commencing operations, the company changed its method of melting from the crucible to the converter process and continued this until last year, when a six-ton Heroult electric furnace was installed. Since last October, they have been melting by the electrical furnace method in the above furnace and have since installed another furnace of the same type of three tons capacity. This furnace is now practically ready for operation. The growth of the company has been rapid. It started with about $50,000 or $60,000 paid in capital and without additional payments of money from the original investors the balance sheet of December 31st, 1915, show total assets of approximately $500,000 and liabilities of $200,000. The company is held in high regard in the trade and is rated well by the mercantile agencies. The four men mentioned above have been its officers since incorporation.

"Mr. Flinterman and Mr. Blackwood being the active men in the organization until Mr. Blackwood severed his connection in January last. Mr. Blackwood was known by different men with whom the committee talked as a man of varied experience in the steel melting and casting business and was generally conceded to be a capable metallurgist.

"Regarding the project as a desirable industry for Fulton, the committee is of the opinion that the steel casting business is reputable and stable and founded on active and growing demands, especially in the automobile industry and more especially, in the manufacturing of motor trucks. With capable men to actively manage and operate such an industry the committee believes that a small steel castings company properly organized and financed would be a strong addition to Fulton's industries.

"For the committee.

"D. S. HOLLENGA,
"Secretary."

INDIA HOLDS TERRORS FOR THE BABY GIRLS

Miss Evangeline Crockett, whi spent part of her childhood days in India, addressed the children of the Free Methodist Sunday school yesterday. The school showed an increase from the house to house visitation of the evangelists. She said, "The children of India live in houses made of mud and thatched with grass. They have no tables or chairs and rarely bedsteads, but sit and sleep on the floor. Girls are unwelcome when born. They almost never have dolls or other playthings. They enjoy no happy childhood. They are put to hard work at 4 or 5 and are married at 10. The boys go to school, sit on the floor and study out loud. The idols of India are hideous images, often with four pairs of arms and four pairs of legs. The children are afraid of them but are compelled by their mothers to go to the idol temples and bow down to them. The true God which the children of America are taught to serve is a God of love who desires all to love him. In India they dread the gods and believe all calamities will befall them unless they appease them with prayers and offerings of rice, flowers, etc."

Miss crockett will preach tonight. Tomorrow noon there will be a shop meeting at the Chocolate works.

45—PHONE NEWS ITEMS—45

Monday, February 21, 1916.

It will be recalled that about a year ago when Japan made some demands upon China there were seven of the series which China positively refused to concede. In brief these demands were: That China shall employ Japanese financial and other domestic "advisers;" that Japan shall have the right to construct hospitals, churches and schools in China; that Japanese shall be employed in the police departments of Chinese cities; that China shall purchase a certain proportion of war munitions from Japan; that Japan shall have exclusive railroad concessions in China; that extensive exclusive concessions shall be made to Japan in Fukien province, virtually closing it to other nations, and that Japanese shall have the right to propagate Buddhism throughout China. It is said that Japan presses these seven demands anew, insisting that they are necessary for the well being of China. The Japanese deny that the demands if granted and lived up to would conflict with other nations operating in China. A year ago China's attitude was that she would fight rather than yield to the extraordinary demands.

A Berlin correspondent says: "In Germany, especially at this time, the public asks no questions. Every order given by the military and police authorities is blindly obeyed." Students of history know that this popular submission to authority is a development of at least two centuries. And herein lies the secret of Germany's efficiency in war. However we may look at Germany's position today, it must be conceded that her efficiency is to be admired and emulated by any people that means to qualify for war. A belated appreciation of this fact is now in evidence in this country. We should prepare, say some, to do things Germany is doing, not in kind, of course, but in manner. But blind obedience is a trait directly antagonistic to a people nourished on the spirit of '76. Can any foreign system be engrafted here in its essential essence? Self governing means self initiating, self preparing, and so on. The efficiency of the United States is founded on democracy. It has stood the test. To engraft an old world system upon a new world foundation would be revolutionary and probably create greater war evils than it cured.

That peace in the baseball leagues will lead to a marked improvement in the game this year is a view held by unbiased observers who are interested in the sport for sport's sake. It means, say some, better playing. It is prophesied that interest in the league contests the coming season will be very keen. In general the outlook for sport meetings during 1916 is believed to be very promising. National championship contests are expected to make up for the dearth of international meetings. Section will compete with section. Even Hawaii will be in evidence with a polo team, and South Americans will shoot in national tournaments. In fact, a mild invasion of the United States by a respectable army of sporting forces is to be expected.

Last year there were nearly 1,000,000 motor vehicles sold in this country. The estimated production for the current year is 1,200,000. There are over 400 auto factories in operation in thirty-four states. During the past five years the average failures among manufacturers has been eighty a year. Evidently the industry has its ups and downs, but the record of growing business shows that it has a rosy outside, to say the least.

It is suggested that "social culture" be added to the public school course. There is need enough, but what shall be left for home instruction if outside teaching is monopolizing everything which goes to the making of the true man and woman?

Judging from the returns from far and near, the war spirit which crops out now and then in the national capital is not nationally representative.

Guatemala's president elect has already held the office seventeen years, although the little republic is in the revolution belt.

With horse meat to fall back upon New Yorkers keep right on paying 20 cents and upward for common cuts of beef.

THE CHARITY DEPARTMENT

There is a department of the city government not at all times in the limelight. It relates to the wards of the city—those who through unfortunate conditions or a desire to shift burdens elsewhere, apply to this department for relief. About once in a month the taxpayers are presented with accounts by this department, showing the amount of money required to feed, clothe and keep warm a long list of hungry, poorly clothed and ill-heated households. Some of these wards of the city's charity department are old, some are young, some middle-aged. But all are men, women and children waiting in line or calling at the office of the department, where is to be found a prince of "good fellows," James R. Somers, for material aid—the necessities of everyday life. In many instances it is tragedy all its own; in many others, according to the words of the Commissioner, when asked for the causes which contribute to the appearance at his office door of callers who droop, it is laziness and lack of aggressiveness. No doubt Commissioner of Charities Somers is in possession of corroborative facts—facts which on the surface appear to be only too true; but who can say aught than that there are other reasons why this industrial city is compelled to maintain a long line of charity patients? Of course Mr. Somers has facts that will bear out his deductions. They are conditions which may be found everywhere. He tells of one incident in particular where charity wards of the city—man and wife—stood within the window of their home to watch men hired by the city remove coal from a wagon into the coal bin of the home. Of course this operation was at the expense of the city. The incident is humorous in that the wife is quoted as saying: "It is too bad the way that poor man has to work to make his living." Then ensued a dialogue which completes the comedy, as follows: Husband to wife: "Who is going to shovel the coal into the stove?" Wife to husband: "I'm not." Wife yawns and husband retorts: "W-a-l-l, I'm not."

The story serves to show one side of the case against the charity wards, but there is another. Ask the recipients of the benefactions how it comes that they apply for aid, and they will answer, hard times, poor training, bad environment, bad companions, idleness, drink. Some may have been unfortunate, some misguided, some weak; but as a rule lack of a trade, education, and consequently, lack of employment, takes them to the Fulton bread line. The lesson is plain. When are we to profit by it? When are we going to choose between the line going down the hill and the line going up the hill? When are we going to teach useful things to the young persons who must leave the school room at an early age?

In substantiating the claim that something besides downright laziness enters into the causes which contribute to the large demands made upon the city's charity department, Commissioner Somers is quoted further. He says he finds that, "If you want to hire a man to do a hard day's work, I would recommend a foreigner; but if you want a half day's work done, hire an American to do it." The why and the wherefore are as plain as the noses on our faces. The foreigner is educated by force of circumstances to work from the time of his early childhood until the end of all things. He is never "too good" to tackle anything and everything; but the American youth—ah, he must be the recipient of sinecures; his liberty must not be infringed upon; he must have independence; he must have the best that the schools afford, so that he may not have to work as father has worked. It is ungentlemanly to soil and harden the hands by doing manual labor. "The farm is too slow for me, I must hie to the city," says the young man; and the small city young man pushes on up the hill, joining the crowded metropolis. He wants the thrills, the "good times," the hilarious companions; and, sooner or later, he gets them. He has gone there untrained in any steady vocation. He becomes lazy. He receives charity and likes it. Work is boresome, so what is the use of bothering about it. Work moves fast, because there is something to move it; the lazy line moves slowly, because it has nothing to move it.

SALESMANSHIP

A salesman that lacks consideration for the feelings of others, a plain slob. No other word seems to fit the situation—no other word that I can use here.

Recently a buyer was undecided as to which line to purchase. The salesman that made the last call was asked to look over the samples of another line, and not satisfied with taking a hammer, he took an axe—an "axe to grind," and this is what he said: "Well, I'm surprised. You don't mean to tell me that you intended to consider this line?"

Instantly the buyer's pride was touched, his vanity crushed, and simultaneously with this feeling of chagrin, came the usual resentment, and the buyer bought his goods of the first man who called.

Moral—Carry molasses, and leave your hammer at home.—The Silent Partner.

THE OTHER FELLOW

(With Apologies to J. W. B.)

By I. E. Hyde.

The other fellow, you say, has a heart;
  But I have one of my own;
And I can't see why I should play his part.
  He is better, sometimes, left alone.
If I lift him and prop him, I'll mark him a leaner;
If I leave him alone, he may be a gleaner.

The other fellow has had his chance
  To earn his bread and butter.
I may have done better, a little, perchance;
  At least I have kept from the gutter.
There is pride in his makeup, the same as in mine;
If he'll but look ahead, he may follow the line.

The other fellow may turn his coat,
  While I chose to buy a new cover.
He has talents as I, but he keeps them remote;
  I'm settled, he still is a rover.
I've done with earth's pleasures, I've earned peace serene;
He had the same privilege, oh! that sad—might have been.

The other fellow, I know, has a soul;
  He also has conscience and will.
Do you think me stronger than God to unroll
  And waken his power that lies still?
When God made my brother He made him as I;
He gave him a will, and an arm, and an eye.

The other fellow dwells neath the same sky;
  And we both breathe our share of ozone.
I can but hope he may turn, by and by,
  And see himself standing alone;
And then, not 'till then, will he know the strong love
Of the great Master's arm reaching down from above.

UNCLE SAM AS HOMEMAKER

Many Government agencies are at work in behalf of homemaking, according to a recent report on home education prepared by Miss Ellen C. Lombard of the Department of the Interior.

Besides the Bureau of Education—which maintains divisions of home, the Bureau of Mines, the Reclamation Service, and the Office of Indian Affairs, all of the Interior Department, are doing direct work in education for the home. The Treasury Department and the Departments of Agriculture, Labor and Commerce are also promoting homemaking through one or more bureaus or offices.

The Reclamation Service of the Interior Department is interesting the women in its home projects, and it has taken energetic steps in inaugurating clubs for study purposes. More than 200 clubs have been formed among the project women, every one of the 16 States where the Government has reclamation enterprises, being represented. The Reclamation Record, a publication of the Reclamation Service, has become an important factor in enlisting the women, one entire section of the paper being given over to project women and their welfare.

The Indian Office, also under the Department of the Interior is carrying on four distinct activities in the promotion of better home conditions: Among the Indian children in school, with the farmer through the medical service, and through the work of the field matron. The field matron comes into close contact with Indian mothers. She instructs them how to care for themselves and little children, how to give the children proper food. She teaches them how to "keep house," and gives them valuable lessons in the importance of ventilation, sunlight, and cleanliness. She exerts a definite moral influence in advising the mothers.

Homemaking as a problem in the territories and dependencies of the United States has had the attention of the Government for some time. Much good work has been done, although there are still sections, especially in the insular dependencies, where a careful study of living conditions and a plan of work for home education are needed.

In Alaska, where the education of natives is under the direction of the Department of the Interior, every teacher is a social worker and strives in all possible ways to promote the physical, moral and industrial welfare of the natives, adults as well as children.

In the native villages the teachers and nurses of the Alaska School Service endeavor to establish proper sanitary conditions by inspecting the houses, by insisting upon the proper disposal of garbage, and by giving instruction in sanitary methods of living. Natives are encouraged to replace their huts by neat, well-ventilated dwellings. In some sections the Indians have been taught to raise vegetables, as a healthful addition to the usual diet of fish and meat.—Buffalo Times.

TECHNIQUE AND BRAINS

Martinus Sieveking, the distinguished pianist, as quoted in a recent interview in Musical America, makes certain statements concerning the relationship of technique to brains in piano playing which invite critical scrutinization on the part of those who rate brains at a higher value that Mr. Sieveking seems to accord them.

All persons, with the possible exception of the members of certain modern religious sects, will readily agree with the pianist that "it is a profound mistake to believe that acquiring a technique depends wholly upon the brain," for the profound, if smiple, reason that between the brain and a piano technique there intrudes itself a quantity of too solid flesh in the form of fingers, arms and other obtrusive impedimenta.

Mr. Sieveking goes farther and while acknowledging that mental concentration is necessary in studying as it is in playing a composition, he is quoted as saying that "the technical part plays the greater role." He points out that while a pianist may know a composition by heart thoroughly in a short time, it takes him a much longer time to learn to play it perfectly, and from this obvious premise he draws the far from obvious conclusion, according to the interview, that "technique plays a bigger role than brains."

Truly, understanding may be quick, and executing what one understands is usually slow. But just why the addition of the element of time required in perfecting technique should exalt technique to a "bigger role than brains," it is to say the least, a bit difficult to understand.

An architect may conceive in a minute a house which it takes a year to build. Is the technical process of building therefore more important than the conception? Would Mr. Sieveking live in a house concieved by a brainless architect, however well its abortive ideas had been technically carried out? And would the pianist approve of the idea applying a perfect technique to abrainless or a faulty conception?

Surely not. Mr. Sieveking tacitly implies a "perfect" brain to begin with—one capable of the same excellence in conceiving that he requires in executing. And the moment this is admitted, as mental self-respect requires that it should be, there is no possible comparison of degree between brain and technique.

Brain plays a prior role to technique, and a speedier but in no sense a lesser. To think otherwise is to discredit the human mind, and ultimately to place behind technique on the throne of reason, an abhorrent usurpation all too common in the musical world of today.—N. Y. Review.

SUCCESS AND SERVICE

Dealers throughout the country are gradually realizing that service is about the most important factor in success.

It is not so many years since Marshall Field of Chicago uttered his then heretical statement that "the customer is always right." At that time most everybody knew that customers were often mistaken and few realized that only by assuming the customer to be right could a satisfactory adjustment of a misunderstanding be reached. The majority of dealers also failed to grasp thef act that there is one customer who will gouge a house to hundreds who ask only for a square deal and no bonuses.

As examples of how the spirit of fair dealing plus service is spreading, three letters recently printed by the advertising critic of a New York newspaper are interesting. They were all from shoppers.

The first told about a clothing dealer who refunded $8 of the money paid for a $28 suit because the policy of the house is "if their goods are 'marked down' within two weeks after purchase the purchasers get the difference between the purchase price and the reduction price."

Following that letter was one which commented upon the fact that a Broadway haberdasher did not hesitate to disrupt his show window and go to quite a bit of trouble to get a 55-cent tie which the customer wanted.

Third among the letters was one from a man who said: "I was a stranger in New York, and having occasion to attend a formal affair. I was in doubt as to whether had the proper necessities for full dress. I walked into one of Rogers Peet stores to talk it over with a salesman. He went over my outfit with me, and then advised me that I had all the necessary and proper requirements, without suggesting that I purchase a single article. He seemed more anxious to serve than to sell. That little incident so pleased me that I became one of their regular customers."

"Excellent advertisements for the concerns involved," you say. Indeed they are. And also excellent examples of the kind of service which spells success.—Batavia News.

Fat and Thin.

The two women encountered each other at a dance. They had not met for several years.

"How thin you have grown!" exclaimed one.

"How fat you've got to be!" the other cried, and they stood gazing at each other in some dismay.

"Before you come to blows," remarked a mutual friend who stood by, "let's take a vote as to which is worse, to get too fat or to get too thin."—Exchange.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—"The trip of the President is over and I do not think he has won a single member of Congress over to his plan of preparedness," said a Democratic member talking to a group of his colleagues. "We have ninety Democrats who are opposed to this military program of President Wilson, and so far as I know, there is not a faltering member in our ranks. When this matter comes up for consideration. I am confident every one of these men will stand fire, for we all believe we are battling for a principle. The speeches of the President which often bordered on the hysterical, have not stirred the American people so far as I have been able to learn. I think the American people have got the idea pretty well into their heads that this was a political junket on the part of the President, and they have refused to be "fired up" by his beautiful rhetoric or his catchy expressions. This meeting we had in Washington during his absence, which was a protest against his plans and his methods, was mighty significant. The great theatre where it was held was packed to the doors and I think the enthusiasm and sentiment that was back of us on that occasion radiates the views of the great army of Democrats all over this country.

"If the Republican party comes out plain and straight for a restoration, improvement and further development of the rural mail service in its next national platform, it will get the votes of thousands and thousands of farmers in this country, many of whom have heretofore identified themselves with the Democratic party," said a middle west Congressman on the floor of the House. "Since the Wilson administration assumed control of the government, in the interest of what it termed economy, it has been curtailing, crippling and reorganizing the rural routes of the country. The question of service has not been considered. It was purely a question of saving money at the expense and to the detriment of thep ostal facilities of the people who live on the farms. Routes have been changed from places where facilities for through mail were good and hitched on to post offices which had had no through mails at all. From one end of the country to the other this has caused dissatisfaction and grumbling and the farmers are up in arms over this policy. They know that rural delivery was created, fostered and developed by the Republican party, and if the party takes a strong stand in favor of this at Chicago, it is going to get the rural vote all over the country."

TAX TO INSURE ALL AGAINST ILLS

Would Have Government Collect Salaries of Physicians.

SCHEME MOST UNIQUE ONE.

Called Impracticable by Many, but the Idea Is New—Compulsory Insurance Would Be Collected From Every Citizen, and Patients Would Be Alloted to Various Doctors.

Compulsory sickness insurance administered by the federal government was advocated in Chicago before the Federation of State Medical Boards of the United States by Dr. Otto V. Huffman, secretary of the New York state board of medical examiners.

Dr. Huffman proposed a plan under which he said all reputable physicians would have an assured income and the chief incentives to quackery would be eliminated.

The plan contemplated a tax of $2 a year on all wage earners whose income is less than $1,200. He estimates there are 33,000,000 such persons in the United States. Each would have the privilege of selecting his own doctor, but no physician would be allowed to carry more than 2,000 names.

"This would mean $4,000 a year for treating those that become sick or disabled. Statistics show not more than sixty of these would ever be sick at the same time," said Dr. Huffman.

Physicians Poorly Paid.

"In general, the public does not realize how miserably underpaid the medical profession is. There are 127,000 active practitioners in the country. Their incomes aggregate $63,500,000, an average of only $500 a year.

"Nor is it true, as has been often stated, that 'there are too many doctors.' About 2½ per cent of the population is constantly sick and disabled, an average of nineteen patients a day for each doctor. This does not take into account much of the practice of specialists.

"Furthermore, insurance company statistics show 69 per cent of the insured have some impairment of health.

"It is impossible for a doctor properly to look after more than sixteen patients in eight working hours. At prevailing fees this just about pays expenses

Would Prevent Sickness.

"Under compulsory insurance we would be paid to keep our clientele in sound health, and it would be against our interest to have sickness occur.

"When the medical profession is paid to prevent sickness and is a loser when any one becomes ill, the day of the quack and the charlatan will be past."

The United States in a few years will have an army of 1,000,000 men ready to take the field. To meet the requirements of this vast body of men at least 10,000 surgeons will be required. So asserted Dr. W. C. Gorgas, surgeon general of the United States army.

Dr. Gorgas was urging the adoption of a proposal for a national conference of medical examiners, composed of representatives of state medical examining boards throughout the country. Candidates who passed this examination would be eligible for the United States medical reserve corps and would not have to pass any other examination for licenses to practice.

Dr. Haven Emerson, New York commissioner of health, said Dr. Huffman's plan was "impossible propaganda."

"I'll admit doctors are underpaid. It is apparent in the city departments, where engineers and legal experts get about twice as much as doctors. I suppose the doctors can let their good works be their own reward. The public seems to expect that of them. I think the doctors of the state and country see much more promise in the new health insurance laws than in any such fanciful scheme as Dr. Huffman suggests."

CITY MANAGEMENT WORKS WONDERS.

What New Methods Have Accomplished in Certain Municipalities.

The misrule of American cities is notorious at home and abroad, writes Charles B. Strayer in Leslie's Weekly. Graft is rampant. Political spoilsmen mulct our cities and the taxpayers foot the bills. German municipalities, on the other hand, are famous throughout the world for the absence of graft and the efficiency of their administration. There the administration of cities is a distinct profession to which men devote their lives. The administrator who has made a good record in one city is called from a small municipality to a larger one.

"Great industrial corporations, such as the Standard Oil company and the United States Steel corporation, are conducted with an efficiency nowhere excelled. The taxpayers can have the same results in municipal administration whenever they get thoroughly tired of being robbed by the politicians and grafters and demand municipal reform.

"An increasing number of American cities are reaping the benefits of administration by managers chosen because of proved ability to conduct great enterprises. Gaylord C. Cummin, as manager of Jackson, Mich., worked wonders in that city of 35,000 people in one year. Municipal employees were taken out of politics. Property to the value of $383,000, formerly exempted from taxation without legal reason, was restored to the tax rolls. The poor department was consolidated with the organized charities, with a trained social worker at the head. Rigid milk inspection was inaugurated and sanitary inspection made efficient for the first time. Without raising the tax rate these and numerous other reforms were inaugurated, a floating deficit of $20,000 wiped out, the city's net indebtedness reduced $50,000 and a cash balance left of $10,000, exclusive of the sinking fund."

FINANCING BEAUTY.

How a Small Michigan Town Has Made Improvements.

For years a rapid little stream wasted its energy in the heart of Paw Paw. The flats along the river were unsightly; the banks were not beautiful. At last civic pride and business instinct correlated. The uplift clubs agitated; the business men thought. At a cost of $50,000 they improved the river and formed a beautiful lake in the heart of the city, and that without condemning any valuable land. The city is more sanitary, there are hundreds of homes that now have a lake front, and all this beauty is more than self supporting. The power furnishes light for the homes, and all the city lights, used with freedom for advertising signs and illumination, come from its own power house. The light sold to private consumers more than pays for the city light.

The Woman's club in Paw Paw has a neat clubhouse and is now using it for social purposes. It is a part of the civic life. It is not selfishly locked for members only. The club has realized the financial side of community life. On reception night of the woman's week carnival the club members wore gowns purchased in Paw Paw. They published the papers for the week. It was Paw Paw week and woman's week combined—uplift, financial prosperity, health, beauty, social happiness, all to the front.

Paw Paw has gone sane on its uplift plans. The business club adopted a suggestion to control the concession and amusement features about the lake, the boating and bathing facilities, with the double purpose of saving any income from them and keeping them on the moral plane.

In this way they follow the plan adopted by a Canada club which controls all the pool halls and other places of amusement. The money gained finances the club; the moral gain helps the home. Correlation is coming at last. Ethics, art and business sense make for the better city when doing team work.—American City.

TRAMPS THE BANE OF CITIES IN SOUTH

Campaign Is Begun to Prevent "Passing On" Hoboes.

How the south is planning to prevent the "passing on" of tramps from one city to another, as has been done now for many years, is told in an article sent out by the Survey press service. It is explained that because of this "passing on" policy conditions in a number of cities and towns were becoming unendurable, and at the same time no relief was being given for the evil.

A long step forward in the handling of charitable transportation of tramps and other nonresident poor in seven southeastern states was taken at a convention in Jacksonville, Fla., called by Mayor J. E. T. Bowden of that city. More than 100 mayors and another hundred delegates, representing nearly 150 cities in Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, North Carolina and South Carolina, discussed the "passing on" evil and adopted a model ordinance to solve the problem. Each delegate was pledged to do all in his power to secure the passing of the ordinance in his home city. The complete proceedings of the convention, with a copy of the ordinance, will be sent to more than 500 cities.

Passing It On.

The "passing on" evil has for many years been a problem of particular significance in the south. The mild climate has been partially responsible for the presence of many wandering tramps and "tramp families," and their increase has been encouraged by slipshod methods of issuing free transportation. A few charitable organizations with modern methods have worked under the transportation rules as drawn up by the national conference of charities and correction in 1903. The city of Atlanta, Ga., signed these rules by ordinance in 1906.

But most of the municipalities and smaller relief organizations continued to get rid of their visiting poor by buying them tickets to the next town or the nearest large city—the old familiar method of "passing on." And so the dismal round continued, growing ever worse. Towns and cities became burdened with an increasing number of wandering dependents, who suffered increasing hardship and pauperism from the system. In some communities, due to their geographical position, the conditions became unendurable. Jacksonville, so situated as to be the gateway of Florida, was one of these. Nearly a year ago Barry C. Smith, then secretary of the associated charities in that city, determined that some local action must be taken, and perhaps the co-operation of the entire south be obtained.

As an initial step an ordinance was drawn up and laid before the mayor and city council. No action was taken, but Mayor Bowden showed an earnest interest.

Tramps Trooped In.

Tramp family after tramp family drifted into the city, and the Associated Charities kept the mayor constantly in touch with these concrete instances. Photographs were taken of some of the worst types, reports were secured from other cities and definite proofs of the sending of such dependents to Jacksonville by other cities were secured. Mayor Bowden became convinced that what was true of Jacksonville must be true of other cities and that the remedy lay in the co-operative action of the entire south. Obviously each city on this plan received about as many poor as it sent elsewhere, and there was a great waste of money in shipping folks aimlessly back and forth. The call for the convention followed. The ordinance follows:

"A bill to be entitled an ordinance for the regulation of the transportation of the indigent poor Be it ordained by the mayor and city council of the city of —— that the mayor is hereby directed and authorized to sign for and in the name of the city of —— the rules concerning free transportation and charity rates, which have been published by the committee on charitable transportation appointed by the national conference of charities and correction, which said rules are as follows:"

Then follows the transportation rules, which provide, chiefly, (1) that free or charity rate transportation be issued only on satisfactory proof that the applicant has at the point of destination (a) legal residence or (b) employment or other definite means of support, or (c) friends or relatives who will agree to provide for him; (2) that such transportation shall be clear through to point of destination, thus prohibiting "passing on" entirely, and (3) that each [illegible] mer shall co-operate with each other to prevent the aimless sending of dependents about the country.

Mexican Mules In Europe.

Mexican mules brought to England for transport work stood all the rigors of military wear until the frost came, but now "they shiver like lap dogs."

Lines.

Railroads, poems, plays, drawings, thoughtful brows, palms of hands and geometry are made up of lines.

Lines sometimes have a president and a board of directors, and presidents and boards of directors usually have lines. The care of lines produces lines of care.

Fishes and sentimental young ladies are frequently caught with lines.

Poets formerly were much given to inditing certain lines to young ladies, but the modern lady who desires certain lines usually goes to a modiste.

A man who gets a line on other people is either a profligate son, a detective or a tattoo artist.—Judge.

A Versatile Savant.

Since Sir David Brewster in September, 1831, with the help of a few colleagues gathered together at the archiepiscopal palace at York, founded the British Association For the Advancement of Science, many great savants have addressed the annual meeting. None among them, however, can have eclipsed the founder in the high qualities that make the born scientist. He found time, in the middle of researches into the mystery of light, to invent the kaleidoscope and play the part of a pioneer in photography, as well as to write innumerable magazine articles with a regularity that would have made him the favorite of the most exacting editor.—London Express.

Some Difference.

"So he did, but it was an oil well."—Baltimore American.

John Brown's Compass Found.

A compass, once the property of John Brown, which played a part in early history, has just been received at the museum of the Kansas State Historical society in Topeka. John Brown used the instrument when he was living in Osawatomie, in the years between 1855 and 1858. During the Missouri-Kansas border warfare in those days, the story goes, the abolitionist leader used the compass in a pretense of surveying land, when in reality he was locating and mapping the camps of proslavery men.

1,429,171 PRISONERS ARE NOW HELD IN GERMANY.

The semiofficial transocean news bureau announces that 1,429,171 allied soldiers are now prisoners in Germany. This does not take into account many prisoners captured by German troops, but left in Austria-Hungary to shorten transport.

There are now in Germany 9,700 captured cannon, 7,700 military carriages and 3,000 machine guns. Many captured guns were put into immediate use by the Germans and are therefore not included in this statement.

The number of rifles captured in fit condition for use is 1,300,000.

HOME ECONOMICS.

Some Modern Ideas About Everyday Problems.

PARTNERSHIP IS THE IDEA.

How Financial Relations In Households May Be Arranged to Meet Practical Demands; Also the Basic Elements of Good Taste In Dressing.

[Prepared by Kansas State Agricultural college.]

"Home economics means more than just cooking and sewing. It is really a social study which meets the needs of the people and solves their problems," says Miss Helen Halm, instructor in home economics in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"This study is one of the greatest of the day. More persons are becoming interested in this work and are desirous of finding out its real significance. The teaching of home economics is being made more interesting, as the work is being vitalized—that is, connected with the study of the human side of life."

The home should be made a business proposition. Husband and wife should form a business partnership and should be fully qualified to meet the demands made upon them, both remembering that money well spent is money well earned. In this new education that is beginning to hold up its head for recognition a man will be taught that he can never hold the love and respect of his wife unless there is to be established the proper financial relation between them.

Individuality, simplicity and quality of material are elements that must be considered by the girl who aspires to be well dressed, in the judgment of Miss I. Florence Hunt, assistant in domestic art in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"Too much stress cannot be placed on the importance of developing good taste," says Miss Hunt. "Good taste includes color, line, form, material and suitability to the occasion upon which the dress is worn. Dresses for school, business or street wear or for dress affairs should, of course, be distinctive.

"Then the costume must be suited to the individual according to line and form. A tall person cannot wear the same style as the one of shorter stature. The same principles also apply to materials used.

"The study of color harmony is made practical by combining samples of materials and designing appropriate costumes. There are materials which will not combine well and colors that should not be used together. Another problem is the study of the design principles—the relation of rhythm, balance and harmony to dress."

Beauty Spot.

A gentleman from Michigan once visiting in California, says that in one town he visited there was a deep ravine running through the town, into which, seemingly, all the rubbish of the town was thrown.

A young schoolteacher devised a plan by which this might be remedied. Her pupils were all requested to bring all the nasturtium seeds they could get, and when the rainy season commenced they went down into the ravine and all up and down its sides they planted their nasturtium seeds. The gentleman said they were in blossom when he was there and that it was the prettiest sight he saw in all California.

SUITABLE SPARK PLUG RELIEVES OWNER OF MANY WORRIES WHILE ON ROAD

Spark pplug discussion goes on these days regardless of the weather, wherever car owners, agents or makers happen to congregate. These little but important parts of the automobile machanism are always given much attention. The car owner who had some trouble on his trips last summer is going to be sure this spring when he gets the car out that the spark plug is doing thew ork it should, and doing it smoothly and with the greatest efficiency.

In quoting a Fulton autoist, there are spark plugs and spark plugs—many of them good, but more are bad, say numerous pessimistic owners. Out in the front rank of theg ood and very best stands the Viking spark plug, made by the John MacGregor company of this city, say car owners and makers. The Viking is becoming known all over the country, for the product has been advertised extensively and the sales are reported big.

Local users of the Viking plug are pronouncing their verdict, which in effect is about as follows: "It has been tried and has stood the most rigorous tests."

In a conversation with a member of the MacGregor company today, he said: "We claim nothing for the Viking that it will not do. The main features of the Viking spark plug are the heavy, sturdy constructionof all parts, giving strength as well as service: the pure nickle electrode annd firing pins; twice as much nickle. wire being used as in any other plug, insuring a big, hot spark, and elementing the formanation of carbon at the spark-gap; the heavy copper plating and nickle plating of all metal parts, making a rust-proof plug; and the exclusive design of the porcelain insulator, giving twice the soot-proof protection of other plugs.

THE BROWNS ENJOYED WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Brown, of the Whitaker road, were pleasantly surprised quite recently, when about seventy-five friends called to assist in celebrating their wedding anniversary. The guests were carried from the city to the Brown farm in three carryalls, early in the afternoon.

Dinner was prepared by the daughters of the household, and after the feasting the guests were entertained at cards, listening to music and at dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown received a number of beautiful gifts of linen and silverware.

The visitors came from Utica, Oswego and Syracuse.

GEORGE AND MARTHA'S LUGGAGE ARRIVED TODAY

Rebeccas were scurrying about the city bright and early today. George and Martha's luggage arrived on the early train and tomorrow night these two distinguished guests will be present at an entertainment in their honor at the Odd Fellows temple in Oneida street.

Music as well as refreshments will occupy a place on the program.

FRIENDLY NINE CLUB HELD TWO CONTESTS

Mrs. E. F. Palmer entertained the Friendly Nine Birthday club at her home in West Broadway, Saturday afternoon.

All members were present to enjoy the entertainment prepared by the hostess. The laundry contest was the most amusing feature of the afternoon, Mrs. Shaff proving herself to be the most efficient wielder of scissors in cutting garments. She was awarded first prize, a clothes pin bag. In the guessing contest Mrs. Summerville won the wash-board and Mrs. McCoy a bar of soap.

A six o'clock dinner was served and everybody enjoyed a social evening.

The ladies are planning upon holding the next meeting with Mrs. Carrie Sanford.

EASTERN STAR MEMBERS TO HEAR THE SECRETARY

A measure of disappointment reigned in the Chapter of the Eastern Star, this morning, when it became known that Secretary Hollenga had been called to Albany on important business, and would be, therefore, unable to make an address at tonight's meeting of the order.

Later in the morning the Secretary wired his office the time of his return—8:30 p. m., and disappointment turned to pleasurable anticipation. The Secretary will be on hand at the right time.

ARTIST WALLACE SECURES A NEWSPAPER POSITION

Mr. Nicholas Wallace has accepted a lucrative position as illustrator and cartoonist for the "Fulton Between Times." He is a very capable gentleman in that line of work, and is rated as one of the leaders in the profession. Editors F. King and Oscar Lynch are to be congratulated upon securing his services.

BANQUET PLANS GET FINAL CRIMP TODAY

Arrangements have been completed by the Knights of Columbus for the banquet to be given tomorrow night. The committee announces the affair bids fair to outshine any previous attempt to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of "The father of our Country."

BOARD OF WORKS TO MEET THIS EVENING

The Board of Public Works will meet tonight. Action may be taken upon the contract between the city and the Fulton Light, Heat and Power company changes affecting the validity of the contract have been made by the present Board of Works.

MACCABEE FIVE LOOK FOR HARD FIGHT THURSDAY

The Y. M. H. A. Stars, of Syracuse, who early in the season came to this city only to trounce the Maccabee quintet, will return for a game on Thursday. Manager Snow announces that he has been advised that the same lineup will come with one exception, Silverstein for Samuels. This is looked upon as an advantage to the loca lteam.

It will be remembered that the visitors played a remarkable guarding game when here last, the locals having been able to get but two field baskets during the entire forty-minute period. As this game was played in the early part of the season, or before the Maccabees had had an opportunity to develop team work, a different outcome of the coming game is expected.

Captain Ives will hold two practice sessions this week, tonight and Wednesday night. The Maccabee Feds will scrimmage against the regulars tonight, while on Wednesday, a quintet from the high school will be used.

ELKS BALL TO ATTRACT CROWD TONIGHT

A seven-piece orchestra will furnish the music at the Elks Charity ball tonight. Mr. Buell will be the leader. Byron Newton who last week received his new Haynes flute will take part.

Thomas Farrell, chairman of the committee in charge of the affair, predicts that tonight's event will, at least financially, eclipse the ball held a year ago for the benefit of the Visiting Nurses' Association. The former affair netted a sum of $265, which will be surpassed tonight, according to the advance sale of tickets.

As has been done in former balls, the committee has arranged a program which includes the new as well as old-fashioned steps. All the latest music will be given.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY AT THE POSTOFFICE

Postmaster Conley announces the regular schedule of holiday hours at the postoffice tomorrow, Washington's Birthday. All windows, except the money order, will be open until 10 a. m. only. The lobby will close at that hour to reopen at 7 p. m. for one hour. No. R. F. D. deliveries will be made.

Light of the Future.

Professor Ulric Dahlgren of Princeton university predicts that the time will come when the luciferous substance of chemical composition carried by fireflies, certain fish and other animals will be used for illuminating houses and other purposes. He believes that this will come about when the nature and proportions of the chemical constituents of these substances are discovered and says they will give a light having an efficiency of 90 per cent instead of the 15 per cent produced by lights now in use.

I am entirely out of BLACKMAN'S MEDICATED SALT BRICK. If not already shipped, please hurry forward my order of the 16th. I sell some of your brick every day. Last Monday I sold 10. Last Saturday I took orders for 1½ dozen to be delivered when they came in. One man took a dozen, another man four. I could have sold more if I had had them in stock. They are giving such perfect satisfaction, that I could secure testimonials from practically all of those I have sold. The only thing needed to introduce them is a little push, a knowledge of the ingredients, and how each of them act on the animal system. After they are once tried, everybody wants them. # CONGRESS UPON DEFENCE PLAN

Great Stores of Supplies to Be Accumulated---Coast Fortifications Most Efficient in the World.

Washington.—A careful canvass of sentiment in Congress on the subject of national defense discloses that the final measure of preparedness to be enacted into law will include:

An increase in the standing army to about 150,000.

Federalization of the National Guard of the States.

Organization of a volunteer corps through civilian training camps, subject to call in war time, to number between 75,000 and 100,000.

Immediate accumulation of immense stores of ordnance, ammunition and equipment to supply these troops.

Addition of armament to the coast defenses of the country intended to make the mthe "most efficient in the world."

Initiation of the Administration's five-year naval programme providing for the first year two battleships, two battle cruisers and auxiliary ships.

U-Boat Type Submarines

Legislation to prescribe abandonment of the present type of submarine for the German U-boat type and the still larger fleet submarine, of which three already have been authorized.

Large appropriations for training the naval militia and increasing its strength; great stores of naval ordnane supplies and ammunition; mines and anti-aircraft guns.

Provision will be made for a fleet of air craft for both land and naval defense, and the training of aeroplane pilots and operators.

The use of the militia as a secondary line of thel and defense is one of the most popular preparedness propositions in Congress, and it is probable that a plan of Federal training, under Federal pay, will be worked out that will be calculated to add materially to the strength and efficiency of the National Guard, and will make it available as a cohesive fighting force in event of war.

The use of civilian training camps such as were conducted by the War Department last Summer as a means of training volunteer troops is generally favored. Army officers were impressed with the results of last year's brief camps. Members of Congress believe a force raised and trained in this way would add materially to the military strength of the nation, without giving rise to any cry of militarism, and at a modest outlay.

There is sentiment for Federal aid to educational institutions which will establish a standardized course of military instruction. The civilian training camps and these educational institutions are looked on as the probable source of the large reserve of officers deemed necessary.

Plans for increasing the coast defenses probably will go through withplate the expenditure of more than $30.000(000, the installation of sixteen-inch guns to replace fourteen-inch guns now guarding the great cities and the organization of a mobile coast artillery of fourteen and sixteen-inch guns mounted on railway cars.

The naval program will meet less opposition than the plans to increase the land forces. Although a stubborn fight may be made against some of the increases, a substantial majority of both House and Senate is prepared to put thorugh the four capital ship program suggested by the President.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO RECEIVE WARNING

Washington—The statement has been made by a high Administration official today that Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, will be cautioned by Secretary Lansing against public discussion of pending diplomatic negotiations.

Count van Bernstorff is expected to visit the State Department early this week, probably tomorrow. He will present a reply from his government to the communition he sent to United States on the armed merchantmen question.

Secretary Lansing will then discuss with him the complaint in administration quarters that the Ambassador has disseminated views in a manner not consistent with diplomatic usage.

1,000,000 MEN IN BRITAIN'S NAVY

London—More than 1,000,000 persons are now engaged in all branches of the British navy and naval work. The number of fighting men has been more than doubled since the war began.

These facts are revealed in a letter from the Admiralty to Sir Gilbert Parker, answering an inquiry made by him in the House of Commons.

The letter says the navy proper had 146,000 officers and men when the war broke out. It now has 320,000 with authority granted for a further increase to 350,000, besides 67,000 naval reserves.

There are also 85,000 men working at royal dockyards and other naval establishments and several times that number on Admiralty contract work.

Thomas J. MacNamara, Fnancial Secretary of the Admiralty, says:

"For every man in the navy, of whom there are something like 300,000, there are certainly two persons, and possibly even three, at work on ship construction, repairing and contributing to theg eneral efficiency and fighting ability of the fleet."

The letter specifies dockside workers ,civilian crews of colliers, coalers, mine sweepers, supply ships, etc., and in addition, men and women preparing clothing and food for the fleet.

ARMENIANS KILL ROUTED TURKS

Rome—News received here states that the Russian line in Armenia is already from thirty to sixty miles west of Erzerum.

The Turkish route surpasses all imagination. No unit remains intact and the debris of the army in flight is being massacred by the insurgent population.

All able-bodied Armenians who escaped from Turkish conscription have enlisted in the Russian army. Grand Duke Nicholas, it is reported, has now 50,000 Armenia volunteers under his command.

The Russian Embassy here has received advices that the Russians are advancing by forced marches to the conquest of Trebizond and Bitlis, one Lake Van.

The same authority says the Turkish army in Armenia is isolated and is unable to receive succor. The Russians, in pursuit, encounter only surrending without resistance.

Information from Constantinople depicts the situation as tragic. No direct news has reached the capital from Asia Minor for ten days, but the Greeks have informed the Turks of the castastrophe at Erzerum.

Agitation annd revolt are the order of the day. Troops refuse to march toward Asia Minor, and the SSultan hos summoned the principal authorities and the empire to take decisions of supreme importance.

It is stated that the Germans are preparing the leave Constantinople where their position has become difficult.

MRS. FERGUSON, A MOTHER-PATRIOT

She Belonged to "The Old Guard" Who Braved the Wilderness to Establish a Home.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ferguson, who died at the Lee Memorial hospital Monday evening, February 13th, where she had remained sinee Thanksgiving Day, the result of sustaining a broken hip, would have been, had she lived until April 23, 92 years old. She was the widow of Mr. Barney Ferguson, who enlisted in 1862 in the 110th Regiment, N. Y. Vols. Mr. Ferguson remained in the service until the close of the war, when he made this city his home.

Mrs. Ferguson lived in the house where the funeral services were held for a period of 63 years. She was a member of the Methodist church 73 years, and of the Women's Relief Corps until its members became so few in number as to necessitate the surrender of the charter.

She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cooper, who were among the pioneers settling in Volney. At that time Fulton was only a hamlet. The Coopers settled the land now known as the Babcock farm. They reached the market afforded by this city by traveling a path way through the woods. Mrs. Ferguson was the last member of a large family of children, and the last one of the neighbors who lived near to her during thed ark days of the Civil War, when wives and mothers suffered mental tortures through anxiety for husbands and brothers in the field.

Her neighbors have only glowing words for her memory. She was always ready to lend a helping hand in times of stress, and, in loving her children with a whole heart, the love was reciprocated. As evidence of the esteem held for her by neighbors were the flowers which thye strewed upon her coffin. Another touching incident of the funeral services was the attendance of the remanants of the "Boys of '61-'65, who were there to drape the coffin with the flag of our country—the emblem for which the old lady too had suffered.

Two daughters survive Mrs. Ferguson, Mrs. Ada B. Clark, who has cared for the mother during the last two years; and Mrs. Harriette E. Clark, of New York City, who attended during the winter of 1914-15.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend thanks to the many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us in the burial of our dear mother; also for the beautiful floral offerings. We thank the nurses in the hospital who were so kind to our mother, while she was under their care; also the comrades of the G. A. R. who attended the funeral.

THE ISSUE

There can be no issue in the coming Presidential campaign of greater scope or consequence than this which Mr. Root presents so clearly and vigorously. There can be no issue more vital to the Republic than the survival of the Democratic principle. It we stand aside now, if we remain silent when every obligation of honor bids us speak, then we pronounce the doom of our country as a force for righteousness and liberty in the world. Such an issue rises above party, above personality. Thousands of loyal Democrats resent as bitterly as loyal Republicans the betrayal of which Mr. Wilson has been guilty. They understand that if thev oice of the Nation does not potently rebuke the timeserving timidity, the weak irresolution which has brought it to this pass, it will make itself an accomplice in its own degradation. Mr. Root, in all his long and useful career, has never spoken to better purpose. He has never risen to a higher quality of statesmanship. He has punctured pretense with unerring aim. He has laid bare the unconscious hypocrisy of a humanitarianism which falters before cruelty and oppression and contents itself with vague words. No one in our day, to use the old Roman phrase, has deserved better of the Republic.— Philadelphia Public Ledger.

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece.
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

FORMER SLAVES IN HENEQUEN FIELD.

The thinly-clad, barelegged and bare-footed men in the above picture are Yucatan Indians, engaged in cutting and "toting" to mill the leaves of the henequen plant, from which three fourths of the binding twine used in the United States is manufactured. Under the old Diaz regime in Mexico these Indians were corralled by government agents and soldiers in the State of Sonora and shipped by trainloads and boatloads to Yucatan, where they were sold into slavery. Until the establishment of the present government in Yucatan these poor Indians worked in the henequen fields for a bare existence. One of the first of the official acts of Governor Alvarado of Yucatan was to declare in favor of the payment of living wages to all laborers, the consequence being that these men who cultivate the plant from which American farmers get most of their binding twine are now receiving from 70 to 80 cents (gold) per day. Public schools are being established for their children throughout Yucatan.

Yucatan's Governor.

Gen. Salvador Alvarado, Governor of Yucatan, Mexico, has earned an enviable reputation throughout Mexico by his promulgation of numerous reform laws designed to aid the mass of the State's population. He abolished the lottery, decreed prohibition of the sale of all alcholic liquors within the State, made laws that insure big wage increases to the laboring men, encouraged the women to organize an equal suffrage movement, established public schools and institutions for training young men and women in domestic science and the trades, abolished the vice districts and either jailed or deported men who were wont to live off the earnings of women of the underworld, established a modern sanitary code, instituted legal reform designed to lessen the cost of litigation, eliminated useless office holders, and among other things, made effective a co-operative marketing system under state supervision for the benefit of the henequen farmers.

PERSONAL CLEANLINESS IN YUCATAN.

The term "Greaser," sometimes applied to Mexicans, does not fit the people of Yucatan, for in that state is to be found at least as great a degree of personal cleanliness as is exhibited by an entire population in any part of the world. Everybody in Yucatan bathes daily, usually more than once each day. Furthermore, 90 per cent. of the people seen on the streets of Merida and other cities and towns of Yucatan are garbed in light linen or cotton clothes freshly laundered. Personal filthiness would not be tolerated in Yucatan. The streets of the capital, Merida, are a model of cleanliness.

There never was a visitor to Yucatan who did not remark instantly upon the cleanliness of the Yucatecos. Most of the peons are bare-footed, but their bodies and their clothes are spotless. The above photograph is of a street scene in Merida, and it is worthy of note that every person, man or woman, is garbed in white.

SOURCE OF AMERICAN BINDER TWINE.

The above photograph shows Yucatan laborers weighing and baling henequen, commonly called sisal grass, which is used for the manufacture of about 70 per cent. of the binder twine used by the grain farmers of the United States. The henequen plant, which produces this strong and lengthy white fibre, is a member of the agave family. Yucatan produces annually nearly one million bales of henequen, of an average weight of 375 pounds, worth in round figures $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. Practically the entire production is shipped to the United States, where it is manufactured into binder twine, rope, carpets, rugs, bags, etc. "La Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen," a state commission created by the Yucatan legislature in 1912, markets virtually the entire henequen crop, thus saving to the growers the profits and commissions usually made by middlemen. In the value of products handled, this commission is said to be the biggest co-operative marketing system established in the interest of farmers, operating in any part of the world. The cost of operation of the commission is prorated among the farmers, who get the entire net proceeds of the sales of henequen.

Until last year, when the henequen growers of Yucatan got together and agreed to market their crops through the state commission, the henequen market of Yucatan had been subjected to the control of speculators.

A CHERUIT MODEL.

A Graceful Frock For Matinee Wear This Winter.

DIRECT FROM PARIS.

This handsome gown, so Frenchy in its design, is developed with winey broadcloth and georgette crape, which makes a foundation for the sleeves and bodice. Please notice how cleverly novelty plaid ribbon has been used as a girdle and tie, while a pointed fox scarf gives the right finish around the shoulders.

WINTER NECKWEAR.

Newest Notes About Attractive Ways to Dress Your Throat.

Windsor ties of silk, taffeta and crape are in plain, ombre, striped and plaid effects. Ribbon ties are in velvet, satin, grosgrain and belting designs. These are more in cross stripes than in one color. The ends are tasseled with jet or steel, have large silk balls, plaited fans of silk or Chinese looking pendants of jade. The very newest have a buckle of the ribbon part way down and tiny roses of chiffon dot the necklet from the buckle to the ends. The new jabots have a cascade of lace edging from three to ten inches wide.

The newest ideas are sport stock and glazed leather sets. Scarfs of this soft leather are swathed around the high collars. A plain piece of neckwear is a stock of black moire, taffeta or satin with high tabs in front and small tabs of white organdie resting on these. Striped velvet ribbon is worn as a necklet in rose, turquoise, black, bright green, watermelon pink, gold, old blue and violet.

Soft black satin ribbon six inches wide has pointed ends edged with skunk fur. The ribbon is wound around a high collar and tied in a large bow at the back on one side. A choker of violet faille has a short scarf of the same tied once in front, with a circular turnover at the top, fur edged. Turnover points in front trim high collars. Plaited ruches on top of high collars encircle the head. Panne velvet collars are trimmed with dull silver lace.

Vestees of white pique, plain and plaided silk, glazed feather, bits of ancient embroidery, beading, tapestry, broche, etc., are all used for a waist length vestee. Linen and pique stocks are stiff with an upper effect to turn over and are worn with a stock bow. One has wings at the sides, another has a tiny shelf standing out all around and points at the sides. Another is scalloped wider in front.

Marabou collars and muffs are in brown, gray or white and always trimmed with ribbon. A black maline collar and muff set has black and white ribbon bows centered with large jet buttons.

German Toast.

Materials.—Three eggs, one-half teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls sugar, one cupful milk, six slices stale bread.

Utensils.—Griddle, bowl, dish, egg beater, cup, spoon, knife, shallow dish.

Directions.—Beat eggs slightly; add salt, sugar, milk; strain into shallow dish. Soak bread in mixture; cook on a hot, well greased griddle; brown on one side, turn and brown on other. Serve with sauce made by creaming one-half cupful butter; add one cupful sugar gradually, one egg, well beaten; one teaspoonful vanilla. Just before serving add one-half cupful hot milk.

Mushrooms Stewed.

Take one and a half pints of button mushrooms, clean them, put into an enameled stewpan with three ounces of butter first melted and allowed to brown a little. Stir them gently and shake over a moderate fire in order that the butter may be well distributed over the mushrooms; then add a very little powdered mace or nutmeg with salt, white pepper and cayenne to taste. Cover and cook till done. Serve around or at one side of bread patties.

SCIENCE—INDUSTRY.

Mining In Arizona.

Arizona's mine output of gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc for 1915 had a value of $88,551,000, an increase of nearly 48 per cent over 1914. The increases were especially noteworthy in lead and zinc, the great change in the price of the metals making a difference of nearly $20,000,000 in copper, $400,000 in lead and over $2,000,000 in zinc. The output of gold increased slightly, but the production of silver was a record breaker, the output increasing to 5,458,000 ounces in 1915, a gain of nearly 25 per cent. Arizona is the leading copper producing state and had an output of nearly 430,000,000 pounds in 1915, an increase over the previous year of nearly 57,000,000 pounds and in value nearly $20,000,000. The output of lead increased 22,272,000 pounds in 1915, an increase of over 48 per cent. The production of zinc (spelter) increased to 17,720,000 pounds, an increase of over 21 per cent.—United States Geological Survey.

Black Walnut Valuable.

The present year is regarded by the United States department of agriculture as a most favorable time for increased planting of black walnut trees in the United States because of the present heavy crop of nuts. The value of the tree is attributed to the very high lasting qualities of its wood and the moderately rapid rate of growth in good locations. The region in which walnut growing is practicable extends from southern New England west to the central states and south to South Carolina and along the northern portion of the gulf states to Oklahoma. The finest growth takes place in the rich coves of the lower Appalachians and over the Ohio and central Mississippi basins.—Commerce Report.

Tire Repairs.

A tire that has given good service, but has its fabric weakened in places, may be re-enforced by the application of an inside protector. If the tread on your tire is worn down, but the tire otherwise in fair condition, several thousand miles of service may be obtained by having it retreaded. In doing this the repair man tears the old tire down to the fabric and builds it up in the same manner as in making a new tire.

There are other ways in which tires apparently worn out can be made to render much greater mileage. Before discarding them be sure to give them the "once over." A similar repair may add a few extra thousand to their mileage.

A Multiple Window Opener.

In several states factory buildings are required by law to have fireproof stairways or towers in which the windows on all the landings can be opened simultaneously to clear them of smoke in case of a fire. The sketch shows one scheme which is used, says Popular Mechanics. The lower sash is fixed and the upper one is heavier than its sash weights. By pulling down on the cable, which extends through all the floors the latch A is withdrawn and the heavy sash drops down, allowing the smoke to escape.

Explosions In the Muffler.

Explosions in the muffler are due nearly always to misfiring caused by defective ignition. What happens is that one or more cylinders fail to fire, and the gas therein is discharged unburned into the muffler and is exploded by the exhaust flame from another cylinder. Here the only damage likely to be done is to the muffler, but the noise is objectionable, and, of course, much power is lost by the misfiring. Generally the trouble is due to a sparking plug being faulty.—Autocar.

Tests For Gum Arabic.

A study of many of the published tests for gum arabic, with descriptions of attempts to find others than the few that proved to be reliable, has been published by the United States bureau of standards. It was found that basic lead acetate gave the most characteristic reaction, while mixtures of copper sulphate and sodium hydroxide and of neutral ferric chloride and alcohol are of value as confirmatory tests.

Cleaning Steel of Burnt Oil.

The oil coming in contact with the surface of steel when hardening will burn in places and is hard to remove, says Popular Mechanics. The cleaning can be accomplished easily by immersing the hardened tool in gasoline, and when exposed to the air it will dry immediately. This will leave the part to be polished without the marks of burnt oil.

Testing Gas In Mines.

To test the dangers of mine gases an Englishman has invented a delicate machine which photographically measures the duration of the flash of an explosion.

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Serviceable and Chic.

One-piece frock of smart appearance and splendid wearing qualities, carried out in checked serge trimmed with embroidered silk.

This very smart appearing dress is equally wearable and looks well developed in checked serge trimmed with plain silk collar, revers and cuffs. The vest may be finished at the waist-line or extended below. The shoulders show the new drooping shoulder effect and a cape collar is easily added, if desired. In medium size the dress requires 4 yards 54-inch material, with ¾ yard silk for trimming.

The cutting shows how the cape is provided for in case it is desired to use it. It is the third section on the lengthwise fold of the goods, being placed to the right of the back gore and collar. The front gore is arranged to the right of the cape.

Taking the upper row, the vest, front and sleeve are first placed in position, being laid on a lengthwise thread. Then comes the side gore, also on a lengthwise thread, but with the lower edge extending almost to the lengthwise fold. To the right of the front gore come the back, on the lengthwise fold, and the pocket and the cuff, the two latter on a lengthwise thread.

If the vest is desired finished at the waist-line, cut off lower part along small "o" perforations.

The plain taffetas in a soft chiffon weave are much favored for the new one-piece frocks, and there is a line of these which has a slightly changeable effect in contrast to the checks. These silks are in exquisite quality and have an indescribable softness of hue.

From silk centers comes the information that silk in light colors is in such demand that it is impossible to fill orders. The two leading colors are flesh pink and pearl gray. White remains staple, but on account of the dark suits used navy blue has been very popular. In view of the fact that white is to be used so much for spring suits white will predominate.

Tasty Winter Relishes.

YORKSHIRE PUDDING.—Materials.—One cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two eggs and one and one-half cupfuls of milk.

Directions.—Sift the flour and salt together, add one cupful of milk, add the eggs lightly beaten, together with just enough milk to moisten the flour. Beat until perfectly smooth; add the remainder of the milk and let the batter stand aside for an hour before cooking. Place in a biscuit pan two tablespoonfuls of beef drippings. Let this get thoroughly hot and run over the pan; pour in the batter and bake about twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven. Cut into squares and serve with roast beef.

Real Scotch Shortbread.—One pound of fresh butter beaten to a cream; gradually work in half a pound of powdered sugar, one tablespoonful of lemon juice (two tablespoonfuls of caraway seeds if liked). When this has been beaten until very light and creamy sift in a pound and a half of flour. Work on baking board until it can be kept from crumbling. Roll it in a sheet about one inch thick; then cut into pieces three inches square. Pinch a neat edge about it and prick with a fork. Bake from twenty-five to thirty minutes in moderate oven.

Celery Relish.—Take celery, onions, cabbage and chop them fine, using celery leaves. Take one-fourth teaspoonful of English mustard, add paprika and vinegar. This is fine and can be made any time. Try adding endives.

Maitre d'Hotel Sauce.—Materials.—One-third cupful of butter, ten drops of onion juice, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, salt and pepper.

Directions.—Beat the butter to a cream as for a cake; add the lemon juice a little at a time and, when blended, stir in the parsley, onion juice and seasoning. Form into a ball or flat cake and set aside to chill before serving.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Embroidery ranks first among the fashionable trimmings of the season. Done in white and blue on a background of biege voile it appears to excellent advantage on this frock. Blue satin forms the belt and re-appears on the cuffs of the long sleeves. For the vest and collar white silk crepe may be used. If the foundation is faced with satin, 3 yards will be required for the dress, with 4 yards 40-inch embroidered voile.

"Iron Neck" Mott is to again make a tour, he being booked with the Great Ruby Shows, which start from the State of Montana, its winter quarters, on April 7th.

Mott will be manager of the athletic department of the troupe. He will conduct wrestling and boxing matches, as well as performing his individual stunt of driving nails into heavy boards with his fists, extracting the nails by means of his teeth, biting nails in half, etc. He will challenge comers to wrestling bouts which will be staged as the climax of the athletic act. Here will also be two lady wrestlers to give exhibitions as well as a high class boxer who will also challenge "comeons,"

Before his departure for the west Mott intends to participate in a number of wrestling bouts in this city. Lou Pollock, who has been acting as his manager, is arranging for return matches with high class wrestler's whom Mott has met during the present season.

GERMAN SEAPLANES MADE SUNDAY RAID

London.—Four German seaplanes today raided the east and southeast coasts of England, killing two men and a boy and wounding a marine.

About thirty bombs were dropped, doing considerable material damage. Lowestoft, in Suffolk and Walmer, northof Dover, in Kent, were the towns attacked.

The Kentish Knock light, off the mouth of the Thames, was one point of attack. The explosion of a bomb in Walmer blew in the windows of a church while the congregation was sing the "Te Deum."

All the German flyers escaped though pursued.

CONFERENCE TO FIX MINERS' PAY

New York.—Millions of consumers of anthracite and bituminous coal are vitality interested in the series of conterences which began here today between representatives of the coal operators and the United Mine Workers of America. Both are confident of victory.

The miners' demands for shorter hours and increased wages, according to their delegates, are just and come at a time when the operators are highly prosperous. The operators dispute this contention.

The vanguard of the mine workers arrived yesterday and at once went into conference with their leaders John P. White ,president of the Mine Workers of America, at the Continental Hotel, where they opened headquarters.

The meetings on the anthracite situation began at 10 o'clock at the McAlpin Hotel. The conferences on the bituminous issue will start at the same hotel on Thursday.

It is believed that fight for the operators will be led by W. J. Richards, president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway company, whose vast coal interests extend to every part of Pennsylvania.

Mr. White issued a statement outlining thew orkers' position. He supplemented this by a verbal statement in which he said the miners are in the fight to win, and will not entrust their affairs to an arbitration board, which he said, worked to their detriment a few years ago.

Mr. White said the miners have pledged themselves neither to strike nor suspend operations in the mines as long as negotiations are pending.

"As long as there is the slightest hope of reaching an agreement," he declared, "the miners will remain at work."

The anthracite miners are demanding an increase of twenty per cent in wages, those in the bituminous fields ten per cent. The agreements in both fields expire on March 31. Heretofore these agreements have expired in alternote years.

The botanist, the real investigator who has got down to making real explorations for himself, will talk to you about the thousands of minute stomates on the surface of a leaf. These invisible stomates are really the mouths through which the leaves take in carbonic acid. They are most abundant on the upper surface of leaves. Each is an oval opening guarded by a pair of lips which open and close according to requirements. They vary from less than 1,000 to more than 20,000 to the square inch of leaf surface.

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND URGES DEFENSE DRILLS

Cincinnati — Archbishop Ireland, one of the leaders of the Catholic Church in America, is a firm believer in military prepareiness and military training for the American youth. In a letter received today by Captain M. M. Maxon, a retired officer of the United States Army, the Archbishop wrote:

"No better plan is there for preparing the way to military preparedness than to have drills in colleges and high schools. The question of the need of military preparedness is so plain that I doubt the common sense of any one who dissents from it.'

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

When strangers come to town use them well and show them around as much as possible.

Talk your City; praise it; improve it, trade at home; be public spirited, take a home pride in it and remember it is your home.

Don't forget to buy that ticket for the Song Recital, Wednesday evening in the First M. E. church.

Takes time to get big plans started. In the meantime, BOOST.

There are two kinds of optimists; we have use for only one. This man never knew a reverse; his every idea is a winner. Fortune smiles on him perennially, and he has but to imagine a success for it to be his. He unearths gems where the other man delves clay; and the other's loss is his gain. Wherever his finger rests a nugget of gold arises; he has but to smile upon the wilderness for it to bloom into a garden of fragrant flowers. How can he be other than bright and hopeful? He may be cheerful, but he is not inspiring.

On the other hand, here is the man who has met failures, and learned his lesson from them. His hand is knotted by the honest toil that every rebuff has made more irksome, his body bears the scars of the wounds of his failings; and his brow the furrows of the plow of non-success. Yet he has a smile for all; and his greeting is "all's well with the world. There's a good time coming." We want him.

The man who succeeds is the man who gets his goal in his mind's eye and works toward that goal, doing what there is to be done enroute. He musn't be afraid to soil his hands with honest dirt. He musn't permit himself to be ruled by false pride; to fear criticism by those with whom he comes in contact. Dig in, work hard, be honest, keep your nerve and don't wobble—that's the road to success.

To see a smile shining on the face of another is like looking into the east at early morn. It's a flash from a soul that often converts a crank.

The smile breaks the face in surprising agreeableness, and frequently changes an ugly countenance into a companion for life.

This idea of smiling would seem a natural encouragement for men and women where nature failed with the features.

Several men of my acquaintance have got wonderful women for wives—women who smile. Of course it is needless to say—the women have husbands who smile.

You can lose your judgment by not using it, by running to others for advice, by following the plans laid down by others. Why be a carbon copy of a real man? Why be an echo, a trailer? You say to yourself, I am not a trailer. And I would ask you this question—What have you done alone?

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES:

The name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils, and joint efforts—of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise—and precious materials of manufacturing industry.

The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand.

The East, in a like intercourse with the West finds a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home.

The West, derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence and future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interests, as one nation.

CITY HOLDS IN BALANCE HEAVY DAMAGE CASE, SAYS HEALTH OFFICER

In support of his declaration that the city can rightfully file suit with the State for damages in the amount of $1,000,000, on account of the pollution of the city's water supply through the construction of the dam in the river bed and other operations. Dr. A. L. Hall, City Health Officer addressed the Board of Public Works last night for a period of one hour and fifteen minutes. Dr. Hall offered as evidence to support his contention a photograph of the pump house and adjoining Spring No. 1, taken some years ago, reports by various health officers and engineers, and opinions of water experts who have examined the springs.

One of the most interesting points brought out in his talk was a description of the typhoid epidemic of several years ago which followed directly after the Kennedy fire and which resulted in about forty people being stricken with the disease. There was every indication, according to Dr. Hall, that the epidemic was caused from impurities finding their way into Spring No. 1 after the level of the water in that spring had been considerably lowered by the enforced pumping operations which were necessary to fight the fire which destroyed the Kennedy property.

Springtime Renews Danger

During the present season of the year, the health officer stated, on account of the frozen condition of the ground there is little danger from contamination of the springs through subterranean sources, but as soon as the spring thaws commence, it is likely that the state ditch, which was constructed a number of years ago to drain the territory adjacent to Spring No. 1, particularly, will not be sufficiently adequate to carry all thew ater away with the result that the land will be flooded, and surface water will eventually find its way into the Spring.

Dr. Hall, in addition to recommending the filing of suit against the State, requests that attention be given to the Springs immediately and that some of the objectionable elements in the territory be eliminated. It is the opinion of a number of experts that Spring No. 3, from bacteriological and chemical analysis, is menaced by the proximity of a barnyard. Analysis of water taken from this spring has tended to show that the drainage from the cowstables may find its way into this spring, although recent reports of State Engineers ac-

EASTERN STAR CHAPTER HEARS HOLLENGA PLEAD FOR CIVIC UPRISING

Secretary Hollenga carried his whirlwind campaign of speech-making, last night, into the Masonic dominions of the city, by invading a meeting of the members of the Order of Eastern Star, held in the Quirk theater building. He arrived in the city from Albany at 8:35, hastened to his home to make a change of apparel, and back again, opening his remarks at 9:30 o'clock.

Dr. Shaw Impressed Him

He began by paying a glowing compliment to the women of all nations, informing the large audience that in at least one respect, his native land, Holland, leads America. There women occupy sets in the nation's legislature, corresponding with our Senate and Congress. He told of impressions he gained when privileged to hear Dr. Anna Howard Shaw lecture to an audience in favor of suffrage, the great leader saying that the world should realize that women are people as well as men: Mr. Hollenga at once became convinced that if the women are to be trusted with the home they can be trusted in all consultations affecting government—especially city government. "They are masters when it comes to the home, and are jewels in the crown," he declared. "If we leave the women in control of the home, why not give them a say in the government of a city?" he continued. Here he explained that a city is nothing more than a collection of homes, which, after all, is a home minus a roof over a collection of houses. "Then why not have good conditions existing in the big home?" asked the speaker, as he proceeded to explain the meaning of the word corporation in its relation to a community. "Corporation," he said, "in its relation to the home, is the love and respect of the members of the home for each other; love and respect form the roof of the home, and what would a home amount to without a roof? Men cannot make a home; in this they are beaten at a rate of 90 miles an hour by the women."

The Chamber Needs the Women

Continuing his address along the line of pleading for more of the spirit of civic pride, he discounted the value to the community at large of those women who spend many hours at playing bridge whist and in the study of Shakespeare. While the speaker respects any desire persons may have to educate themselves he expressed himself as opposed to paying a lot of attention to those things as forms of amusement, saying that right here in Fulton there are so many big-

LATER ON IN 1916

"If conditions in the steel trade continue as they are now," the Iron Age hears from Pittsburgh, "it is estimated that the mills will not have more than about one-fourth of the finished material in the second and third quarters that customers will want."—N. Y. Post.

PLEASING RESULTS

After five weeks of state-wide prohibition in Washington, the Spokane Spokesman-Review notes business and police court figures that are at least consistent with the belief that social conditions have already notably improved under the new regime. The average number of prisoners at the city jail and prison camp in January was approximately 50, while in the previous January the average was 67. Fewer than half as many arrests were made in the city. Even more impressive figures are given from other cities. Bank and retail business showed a corresponding improvement. Five weeks do not prove much, but the better conditions, from whatever cause, are pleasing.—Watertown Times.

DOGS, BOOZE, CRANKS, ETC.

Dr. Haven Emerson, New York's commissioner of health, told an audience which he was addressing the other day that he would like to banish all dogs from the city. "Dogs are not necessary to a cultured existence" he said.

Well, what is necessary to cultured existence? The Bureau of Health of New York has recently started a crusade against the use of alcoholic stimulants, and it is going to preach to the exclusive clubs as well as to the plain people. Quite recently, as we stated the other day, most of the topnotchers in the medical profession of Great Britain issued a manifesto in which they said that they believed the use of alcoholic stimulants as beverages was for adults usually beneficial when they were used in moderation. But the Health Bureau of New York does not think that alcoholic stimulants are necessary to a cultured existence, and now we are informed, on the same authority, that dogs are not either. What, then, is necessary to a cultured existence, in the opinion or this bureau? We suppose that the answer would be—cranks, though these beings would be called by some more euphonious name.— Rochester Herald.

SQUANDERING THE STATE'S CASH

Slight digging into the legislative expense vouchers filed in the comptroller's office has established the fact that it cost the state more than $30,000 to settle the contests over three assembly seats last year. All the Committee on Privileges and elections (chairman, Mr. Brereton, of Warren County) had to do was to come here, count the ballots voted in the disputed districts and take a little testimony. In doing this the committee incurred a bill for food and lodgings at the Biltmore amounting to more than $9,000; it spent more than $1,000 for railroad fare, more than $6,000 for counsel to the committee and the lawyers for the successful contestants and about $12,000 for 16 clerks, 11 messengers and various stenographers.

Such waste of state funds is disgraceful. Unfortunately, it is not illegal. The money is gone and there is no way of recovering it or of punishing the men who squandered it. What this committee did was merely in line with what other committees have done—its members have that excuse for their soft living at the state's expense and the dispensing of jobs which weren't needed any more than a cat needs two tails. But if such conduct can't be punished it at least should be stopped. Exposure of those who have spent the state's money will be a painful lesson but helpful so far as the public is concerned.

Each instance adds sharper point to the request of Messrs. Bannard, Brackett, Stimson and others to Comptroller Travis to assemble and make public the facts regarding committee expenditures in the last six years. It is plain the state must adopt restrictive measures. How stringent the yshould be can anly be known when all the facts are at hand. —N. Y. Tribune.

HATS OFF TO THE GIRLS

Of double interest is the Julia Allen song recital scheduled for Wednesday evening. It marks a new era in the interests of the city; it is the expression of a true budding community interest. The city's music club is combining its own interest with that of the community's needs. The people of Fulton need to hear good music, and the adding to the fund of a good cause is surely meeting another of our needs. Only good can result from such efforts, and when clubs and organizations, like men and women, become as much interested in giving out as they are in taking in, the whole world is bound to benefit. The Schumann Club is to be congratulated upon this step in the right direction, and every person wishing, waiting, hoping and looking for the better things in our little city should attend the song recital on Wednesday evening.

Miss Allen's program as published in yesterday's Evening Times promises an evening's treat and it will be a rare pleasure to hear in Fulton a voice of such reputation as Miss Allen's. The Schumann Club must be supported in their undertaking if we ever again expect them to try to give us a taste of the good things in the musical world. Let each and every one boost the sale of tickets that on the morning after the recital the workers need not say, "Well, it just seems these things can't be done here." Rather let's make them glad so they will say instead, "Oh fine, let's plan another good thing." Remember your town means you.

Buy your ticket now for the song recital tomorrow evening. If you can't go pass the ticket on.

Hats off to the Schumann girls!

THE "WAGES" OF HONESTY

The Springfield Republican quotes a headline from the Philadelphia Public Ledger which read, "Handled Millions With Salary $35 a Week," and then asks the question, which it designates as pertinent, "What is the minimum wage of honesty?"

That question is a two-edged sword which cuts mostly one way. To intimate that honesty has a wage, whether minimum, maximum or merely medium and ordinary, is to charge that all men have their price. Honesty is not a matter of wages, but of morals; not of expediency, but of habits of thought, not of environment, but of character. Honesty is not a quality to be rewarded; its possession is its own compensation.

On the other hand, not all men are honest, and the quality of trustworthiness is one of value to those whose interests are entrusted, and should be paid for. The honest employer recognizes this and makes the wage paid commensurate to the responsibility assumed as well as to the labor performed. The frailties of human nature are only too well known. The progress of the race is continuously retarded by the erring; the wrecks of dishonesty are strewn only too thick along the way; yet the fact that they are recognized as wrecks is what makes honesty the rule and dishonesty the exception. With the weakness of humanity manifest, it is the employer rather than the employe who is first dishonest when a condition such as that revealed in the Philadelphia paper's headline exists. The employer, for the dishonest margin of profit on the work of his employe which accrues between fair compensation and a working wage, is willing to place before the employe temptations which, unless he possesses qualities for which the employer is not paying, he will be unable to resist.

The old copy book used to state in faultless Spencerian script that "Honesty is the Best Policy." It may have made good copy, but stated a faulty philosophy. It is the best policy, but that is a miserable and cowardly reason for being honest. Honesty is no more a matter of policy than of expediency or of wages. Would it not have been better to write, "Honesty is Right?"

Also by the same token that the employer may take a dishonest advantage by failing to pay for trustworthiness and the assumption of responsibility on the same principle that he would pay for the use of a safety vault the employe takes a similar advantage when he fails to "render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's," when he neglects to do that for which he is paid or to protect the interests entrusted to him.—Southern Lumberman.

HOW TO MAKE AND USE A FIRELESS COOKER

The department of home economics of the New York state college of agriculture announces a publication on the fireless cooker and its uses. The pamphlet contains descriptions of commercial fireless cookers, and gives directions for constructing home-made ones.

A wooden box, a trunk, an ice box, a galvanized iron ash-can, or a wooden candy bucket, it is stated, are among the articles which have been successfully used in the construction of fireless cookers. The inside container may be a bucket of agate-ware, galvanized iron, or tin, and should have a tight-fitting cover. Powdered asbestos, cork, excelsior, straw and torn paper, it is said, have proved to be very satisfactory insulating materials.

The new publication contains several recipes for roasting meats, cooking stews, dried fruits, puddings, and bread in a fireless cooker. These have been tested by the department of home economics with good results. A copy of this reading course may be obtained by any resident of New York state on application to the New York state college of agriculture, Ithaca, New York.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Commencing this afternoon eight reels of pictures will be shown daily. The five reel feature today is "The Unfaithful Wife", a Fox feature with Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper in the leading characters. Three reels of General Film Co. photoplays will be shown each day along with the features. These three extra reels will consist of selections from the Vitagraph, Edison, Selig-Essanay and Kalem productions, bringing back to patrons many of the old favorites of former seasons at this house. The prices will remain the same. Matinee 5c; nights, balcony, 5c; main floor, 10c.

"THE PRINCESS PAT"

One of the most enjoyable things about the Henry Blossom-Victor Herbert comic opera, "The Princess Pat", which comes to the Quirk Theatre, Tuesday evening, February 29th, is the fact that it is not weighted down with an unwieldy lot of chorus girls nor cursed with a collection of vaudeville players. of the former there are just enough to form a pleasing background, and of the latter the nearest approach to the variety of a pair of dancer of such excellence that they are most welcome. "The Princess Pat" is the latest successful work of Messrs. Blossom and Herbert. It is real comic opera with an abundance of humor and a score that is truly a delight to hear.

COMMENT BY STATE EDITORS

The battle speech, for so it may be termed, declares the European war offset the results of a foolish tariff; it condemns the President's Mexican policy, brands the President's negotiations with Germany as shameful and unbelievably weak, and scores Mr. Wilson for his failure to protest against the violations of Belgium's neutrality.—Buffalo News.

REPUBLICANS OPEN THE CAMPAIGN

Coming Election One of Vital Importance to National Life.

Delegates to National Convention Recommended by the Republican State Convention—The Platform Declares For Patriotism, Preparedness and the Protection of American Labor.

New York, Feb. 21—Never since 1864 has an election been fraught with consequences so vital to national life.—Elihu Root.

We Republicans are alive to what is at this time at stake in this country. The United States faces one of the most critical periods in its history. The conduct of the government and action of the people may determine the destiny of the United States for a century to come.—United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr.

These quotations from the speeches of the temporary chairman and the permanent chairman of the Republican state convention illustrate the spirit in which the Republican party of the state of New York enters the presidential campaign of 1916.

The audience which faced Chairman Tanner of the state committee when he called the convention to order filled Carnegie hall from the wall at the back of the stage to the back row of the topmost gallery. The hall held 200 more than its seating capacity. That such an audience should turn out on one of the coldest and most disagreeable nights of the winter indicates the interest which New York city is manifesting in Republican politics this year.

This great audience followed the speech of the Hon. Elihu Root, temporary chairman of the convention, with close attention and deep interest, frequently indorsing his statements with applause as he reviewed the events of the past three years since the Democratic party has been in power. The complete failure of the Democratic tariff law to fulfill the promises made for it, the continuous disturbance of business, the administration's feeble foreign policy, its impotent meddling in Mexico, its failure to protect the lives of American citizens and its tardy recognition of the need of preparedness were discussed with masterly clearness in an indictment of the party in power before the bar of public opinion.

One of the striking sentences in his speech was: "The great decisive question upon which our peace depends is the question whether the rule of action applied to Belgium is to be tolerated. If it is tolerated by the civilized world this nation will have to fight for its life. There will be no escape."

Another was, "When this war is over, when foreign production begins again and the American market compared with impoverished Europe will be more than ever before the object of desire and effort, we shall become the dumping ground of the world, to the destruction of our own industries, unless that is prevented by a wise and competent government."

Another, "Our diplomacy has lost its authority and influence because we have been brave in words and irresolute in action."

Another, "We must play our part in the universal trial whether we will or no, for upon the result depends directly the question whether our republic can endure."

As permanent chairman of the convention United States Senator Wadsworth drove home to the minds of his hearers the critical position in which the country stands today. "The people of this country," said he, "realize that we stand at the point of forfeiting the respect of the world. We Republicans insist that the people of the United States do constitute a nation and that their honor and dignity shall be the only question at issue. We shall invite our fellow citizens to judge of the soundness of our principles, and we will at the same time invite them to judge of the soundness of the principles of our opponents."

Delegates at Large.

The convention recommended to the Republican voters of the state for election at the primaries in April as delegates at large to the Republican national convention United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr.; Governor Charles S. Whitman, Frederick C. Tanner, chairman of the Republican state committee, and Senator Elon R. Brown, the Republican leader in the upper house of the legislature.

State Administration Indorsed.

It indorsed the present Republican state administration and gave Governor Whitman particular commendation for the courage with which he has faced the state's financial necessities.

The platform adopted by the convention declares for patriotism, preparedness and the protection of American labor. The substance of it follows:

The Platform.

The Republican party in New York speaking through its representatives in a convention advisory to the enrolled voters, declares its purpose to conduct with full confidence of success a vigorous and constructive campaign on behalf of the great principles of government and of social order for which it has stood from the beginning of its history.

We pledge ourselves to the support of a patriotic and forward facing Americanism. The Republican party stands for American principles of government; for the full rights and privileges of American citizenship; for the defense of America and Americans against attack from any quarter whatsoever; for the welfare of American business and for the protection of American labor; but above all for those enduring principles of national honor, of liberty, of justice and of fidelity to national obligations through adherence to which the nation has grown great. It believes in the truth of Washington's declaration that the name of American which belongs to us in our national capacity must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from either local or racial discriminations.

It is the fixed policy of the American people to observe good faith toward all nations and to do justice to them all. We wish to continue on terms of peace and friendship with the whole world, and we indorse and support the movement designed to make increasingly difficult and improbable a resort to force in the settlement of international differences. But we assert the right of America to oppose any violation of international agreements to which it is a party and its duty to insist upon the security and guarantee of the law of nations.

We advocate complete preparation for the common defense—economic, industrial and financial as well as military.

For defense against attack from without we rely first upon the navy. We urge that it be provided with a general staff and so enlarged, in ships, in officers and in men, and so supplemented by vessels auxiliary to the fighting force of such types as experience has shown to be necessary for effectiveness, that it will constitute a well organized, a complete and a certain defense against attack, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. We believe that the nation should continue to follow the advice of Washington and avoid "the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty." But we also believe in the vital principle of democracy, enacted into law under Washington's administration, that every citizen owes the freeman's duty of defense for his country and of the training necessary to make that defense effective. "The Republican party stands for the gospel of patriotic service to our country by every citizen according to his ability in peace and in war." So long as present conditions continue to prevail in other parts of the world, the military establishment of the United States should be substantially strengthened.

The enlargement of the naval and military establishments should be for purposes of defense only.

Enforcement of International Law.

We believe that it is the duty of the American government to bear its part in re-establishing international law and in providing it with sufficient sanctions. If the law of nations is to be binding and if the decisions of tribunals charged with the application of that law to international controversies are to be respected and enforced, then violations of the law that are of such a character as to threaten the peace and order of the community of nations must be deemed to be a violation of the right of every civilized nation to have the law maintained and a legal injury to every nation. In order to bear its proper part in carrying forward this world policy, America must show that while it has no purpose to interfere in controversies between other nations, it will insist upon universal observance of the principles and rules of international law.

Mexico.

No patriotic citizen will embarrass the government of his country in its dealings with other nations, but it is not possible to regard without the gravest dissatisfaction and dismay the results of the policies of the present administration toward Mexico. That policy which has been proclaimed as one of watchful waiting has in reality been one of action, but uncertain, inconstant and irresponsible interference. The Wilson administration destroyed established government in Mexico and now stands on one side while anarchy and chaos reign in that country. It has stood aloof while American men have been killed, American women outraged and American property destroyed. Intervention in the internal affairs of Mexico by the administration has inflicted upon the Mexican people and upon all foreigners resident in Mexico anarchy, bloodshed and suffering almost without modern parallel. We demand that American rights in Mexico shall be protected.

The Philippines.

We denounce the measure regarding the Philippine islands that has passed the senate and is now pending in the house of representatives as an abandonment of the duty of this nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos.

Tariff Commission.

We demand the restoration of the Republican policy of a tariff commission with ample power to inquire into matters of cost, protection and labor conditions in this and other countries and to supply the congress with the fullest possible and most accurate information for guidance in the formulation of a permanent tariff policy that shall adequately protect American labor as well as conserve and develop American natural resources and American industry. We condemn the destruction by the Democratic party of the nonpartisan tariff commission established under President Taft's administration.

The Democratic tariff now in force has proved wholly inadequate either to provide revenue for the support of the government or to protect American labor and American industry upon the farm, in the factory or in the mine. Before the outbreak of the European war the disastrous effects of this tariff were already felt throughout the land. The war has obscured these effects, but immediately upon the restoration of peace they will be felt again with redoubled force.

Government and Business.

We favor such legislation and such administrative action as will relieve honestly conducted business from persecution, while rigidly preventing monopoly, special privilege or unfair practices.

We insist that government regulation of business be not interpreted to mean government management of business.

In support of these principles and policies, the Republicans of New York pledge themselves to the Republicans of the nation to join with them to the end that there may be a new birth of American patriotism and that a new pride and strength may be given to American citizenship.

Commended Governor Whitman.

The following indorsement of the state administration was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, On Jan. 1, 1915, after four years of chaos, disorder and extravagance, the Republican party was returned to power in the state of New York. Order and efficiency have been restored, constructive legislation has been enacted and our state government has been placed in a position where the orderly progress of government is possible once more.

We commend Governor Whitman, the legislature and the entire Republican administration. We commend the governor particularly for the courage with which he has faced the financial necessities of the state and for his efforts to reform our fiscal system so as to insure economy and adequate public knowledge and disclosure of the state's business.

MARY'S DEFENSE

As Philip Langdon's car threaded its way through the heavy traffic, dodging drays and clamorous trolleys on its way toward the grim building where so many tragedies are staged by "the law" the young attorney felt his heart sink into engulfing waves of doubt and fear.

For the first time since the beginning of the trial he had lost his buoyant hope, his tremendous faith in his ability to prove Mary Page innocent and to be able to snatch her from a cell by the sheer power of his love.

The evidence was so overwhelming, so irrefutable. And Mary herself utterly unable to explain those last tragic moments. He knew she couldn't remember—couldn't explain. But the jury would not be convinced. He realized that.

Over and over in his brooding mind he saw again the tragedy of that night when the body of James Pollock, the clubman and wine agent, had been found with a bullet in its heart and beside it the unconscious figure of Mary Page. Between them had lain that revolver with its one accusatory empty chamber, the revolver that Mary herself admitted she had carried.

That Mary was innocent he had never doubted. His love was too great to admit of doubt, but he was a lawyer, and now he saw only too clearly that his defense might prove unconvincing in the face of the damnatory facts—first, that Mary had hated and feared James Pollock, who forced his attentions upon her; second, that she had carried the revolver hidden in the front of her dress when she went into the anteroom where Pollock was waiting, and, third, that the shooting had occurred directly after the door had closed upon the two of them.

If he, Langdon, had only been five minutes earlier—that was the acid that ate into his soul. If he had only reached that door five minutes sooner perhaps that fatal shot would never have been fired.

He wondered irritably why it was that the public, and that portion of it that comprised the jury, couldn't see how improbable it was that Mary would have ruined her career in such a fashion, however much she hated Pollock. It was inconceivable that a girl who at the falling of the curtain at 11 o'clock had touched the goal for which she had striven and been hailed as the greatest star of the century could have killed a man of her own accord at midnight and watched the dawn come from a cell in the Tombs.

He knew how much her career had meant to Mary. How close to her heart was the triumph and the fame, and to lose it this way—

He sighed heavily, then, realizing that they were approaching the Tombs and that to the world at least he must be the confident attorney, he straightened his shoulders and forced a smile to his lips.

Close to the curb two women were listening while a third read aloud from the early edition of an afternoon paper, stippling the monotony of her tones by ejaculations and questions.

From his car Langdon could plainly see the huge headlines two women were reading:

LOVER'S LAST FIGHT FOR LIFE.

State's Case Against Famous Actress Almost Complete—Young Lawyer Fights Final Hopeless Battle.

With a shudder of aversion Langdon dragged his eyes away. The notoriety of it was almost as bitter to him as the awful overshadowing fear. He hated to think that Mary's name should be dragged in the mud of common gossip as an actress who had shot a millionaire in the anteroom of a huge hotel, while just outside the door, amid laughter and music and lights, the great world indulged in supper dancing. He hated the thought that his love for Mary had become a spicy morsel to be rolled on the tongues of the general public, but, after all, what he had to bear was pitifully small compared to the burden on Mary's own slim shoulders.

The car drew up at the curb, and as Langdon leaped out somebody shouted harshly:

"Here's Langdon!" And the whole throng of men and women came surging toward him, sweeping him into the current of a wave of humanity. Jostling and staring, they flung a thousand questions at him, pulled at his arms and pressed against him until at last the impregnable doors clanged behind him, leaving him breathless with a feeling of being bruised and battered mentally as well as physically.

The quiet of the prison was almost like peace for the moment, but he knew that beyond that pool of silence in which he stood another clamorous throng surged about the door of the court and filled the room itself—thousands of them, some men and many women, voracious for sensation, glutted with the lure of this tremendous tragedy that was being played for them by living puppets. The law had indeed discovered the secret that every theatrical manager sighs to know—"what the public wants."

With a word or two to the officials, Langdon went hurriedly down the echoing corridors to Mary's cell; past row after row of monotonous barred doors, from behind which faces peered out with idle curiosity—faces, savage, despairing, dull with indifference or ravaged by tears. But they meant nothing to Langdon, for heart and brain alike were speeding on ahead of him to that distant narrow room where Mary waited.

At the cell door he halted and quickly removed his hat, unbidden tears springing to his eyes, for Mary was kneeling like a little child, her head in her mother's lap, and the elder woman was praying aloud:

"And God give us strength to go through this day and grant justice to this, my child!"

"Justice, dear God, justice!" echoed Mary. And no artistry of the great actress could have given to that simple prayer the poignancy that a great faith and a great sorrow gave to it.

Then they spied Langdon, and Mary, jumping up, gave a cry of joy and ran into his arms. He held her tightly, and the actress in her would have applauded if she had known the effort that lay back of his cheery greeting, his word of hope and the tender smile with which he put into her hand white roses to pin against her dark frock.

"I think we had better go on into court now," he said as she drew the blossoms through her belt. "The men are waiting, and it's about time, you know."

For an instant Mary shuddered and clung to him with closed eyes.

"If I could only be there without going across that awful bridge," she sighed. "Somehow the people are less terrible when they are sitting down and keeping quiet."

"I know, dear, I know," said Langdon sadly. "I wish to God I could spare you, but it's really only their way of expressing sympathy, and I'll give you a happy thought to say to yourself when you cross today. Just look straight ahead and say over and over: 'Today Philip begins my defense. Today we will begin to prove my innocence.'"

"Then you think"—cried Mrs. Page.

"The state will undoubtedly rest its case this morning," he answered gravely. "Our chance is coming now."

"Oh, then I shan't mind anything," cried Mary and, kissing him, lifted her lovely head.

And now the end was almost come. The last witness for the state was called to the stand, and Langdon drew a deep breath. Unless some one was called in rebuttal he knew that now the final stone was to be laid in that carefully built tower of evidence against Mary Page.

"If I could only be there without going across that awful bridge."

The police had sworn that they saw Mary threaten James Pollock with a revolver in the park that afternoon. Employees of the theater had testified to her fear of his attentions; her own maid had been forced to admit with faltering tongue that her mistress had cried out that he was a devil, and she wished he was dead. Waiters and innumerable patrons of the Hotel Republic, revelling in the publicity, had told gloatingly of having seen Mary Page, drunk apparently, reel from the cafe on the night of the murder and go directly to the anteroom where James Pollock was waiting. And now the last man was on the stand—the hotel detective, who, together with Langdon himself, had found the dead man with his living but unconscious companion.

The monotonous questions of name and age and occupation were rattled off swiftly enough, and then the detective, with the ease of one used to testimony, gave a brief resume of how he had first been called by the head waiter, to whom complaints had been made of the riotous behavior of a big supper party from one of the theaters.

"It was a pretty noisy bunch," he said coolly. "But they didn't seem to be doing any harm, so I just stood at the door watching them, and presently James Pollock came in.

"He was in evening dress," he continued, "and he called a bellhop and gave him a message, pointing out the young lady who was sitting at the head of the table with the noisy party."—

"Was that young lady Miss Page?" asked the district attorney, indicating Mary with a jerk of his head.

"It was," said the detective firmly. "Then Mr. Pollock went down to what we call the little gray room and, going in, shut the door. The bellhop started into the dining room, but almost before he'd taken a step the young lady, Miss Page, threw her wineglass on the floor with a hysterical sort of laugh and came reeling out of the room with her hands stretched out, as if she didn't know where she was going.

"I turned away to call one of the maids to take charge of her, and when I came back she was making straight for the gray room, walking as firmly as if she'd never had a drink in her life. She went in and shut the door, and a minute afterward Mr. Langdon there comes flying out of the cafe and shouts:

"'Which way did Miss Page go?'

"'In the gray room,' I answered, and with that he ran toward it, with me beside him, but before we got there we heard a shot, and"— He paused, enjoying to the full the sensation of the moment and the tense whispering wave of sound that quivered through the crowded room. "When we had broken in the door we found James Pollock shot through the heart and Mary Page lying in a faint beside him with a revolver not six inches from the ends of her fingers."

Mary, who had been watching him as if fascinated, quailed from that curt, almost vindictive, description of the finding of the bodies of the living and the dead, and, resting her arms on the edge of the dock, she buried her face in them and for the first time sobbed bitterly.

A murmur of sympathy arose, and several people stood up, only to be rudely pushed back into their seats by those behind. And now the district attorney, going to the gruesome array of "exhibits" in the case, picked up the revolver and, showing it to the jury, put it into the detective's hands.

"Is this the revolver," he demanded dramatically, "and is the prisoner the woman whom you found locked in the room with the dead body of James Pollock?"

"Yes," answered the detective. And at the word the pencils of the reporters began to spin like mad across the flaring yellow of their copy paper, and a gasp of dismay wrung from some woman's throat faded into a stifled sob.

One of the jurors blew his nose loudly, and two or three exchanged significant glances, and Langdon, the sweat beginning to bead his forehead, knew that they had already made up their minds that Mary was guilty.

The detective, released, stepped down from the witness box, and now the district attorney turned smilingly to the judge and said, with an oratorical flourish:

"Your honor, the state rests!"

The last stone in that brutal gallows of evidence had been cemented into place.

Four excited and self important office boys scuttled out of the room bearing sheets on which was scrawled:

"State rests its case after evidence of Detective Farley." And through the open door as they went came a murmur like the distant roar of wild beasts, the unadmitted public clamoring for the news borne by the boys en route for the newspaper offices.

But when the door closed again a tense silence held the room in thrall. Even Mary's sobs had ceased, and, lifting her tear stained face, she smiled rainbow wise at Langdon, as if she would have said: "Now is our chance! Now we will tear down this awful temple of doom that has been built for me!"

Langdon drew a deep breath, flung back his shoulders as if breasting a tremendous current and said quietly:

"Your honor and gentlemen of the jury, you have heard the case against Mary Page. Now listen to the case for Mary Page.

"She has declared herself that she has no recollection of those final moments in that hotel room to which she had been lured by a miserable beast. She remembers only a flash—like a dream—of his leering face, and then blackness swept over her. Gentlemen, it is not the first time that Miss Page has been affected in that same fashion. And if Mary Page killed James Pollock she did it in a moment of insanity superinduced by the horror of intoxication that has pursued her since the day she was born."

As with one accord the jury sat up and leaned forward in their seats, and onlookers broke out into a sudden babble, in which the word "insane" bobbed like a cork on a sea of rumor, and not even the judge's gavel could secure silence for several moments. In that time the color crept back into Mary's cheeks, and somehow she felt deep in her heart that the tide of feeling at least was turned again in her direction.

The district attorney was frowning and whispering to his assistant, who nodded from time to time as he nervously fingered the pile of papers in front of him, but now Langdon was speaking again:

"It is my intention, your honor and gentlemen of the jury, to show you step by step through this girl's life the part which that horror of intoxication has played, a horror that has entangled her in this mesh of tragedy. I shall call as my first witness Mary Page."

It came as an overwhelming surprise, this calling of Mary to her own defense, and, although she strove to be calm, she was obviously startled and afraid, and wave after wave of excitement swept through the room. At the reporters' table one "sob sister" whispered to the other:

"Poor thing! She can't stand much more. It's wicked to call on her."

"Miss Page," said Langdon, and his voice was very gentle, "isn't it true that because of a strong prenatal influence you were born with an unnatural horror of intoxication?"

"It is true," sighed Mary, but in an instant the district attorney was on his feet.

"I object!" he cried. "That question concerns something that took place before Miss Page's birth. She can—she must, in fact—know it only by hearsay."

"I must sustain your objection," said the judge. "Mr. Langdon, your question was unfortunately worded. Can you alter it?"

"I think I can," said Langdon. "Let us put it this way: What is your earliest recollection of your father?"

"I object to that also!" stormed the district attorney. "It is not relevant. What have a child's vague recollections to do with the action of a woman of Miss Page's age?"

The judge hesitated, and Langdon, still smiling, said quickly:

"I withdraw my question. The witness is excused."

"Do you wish to cross examine?" asked the judge, and the district attorney, with a scowl, shook his head.

"Are—are you through with me?" gasped Mary in bewilderment, and Langdon nodded. And now, as the throng waited, he turned to the little gray haired mother, and his voice rang out (was it with triumph?):

"Mrs. Page!"

In an instant the room was in an uproar. More copy boys rushed for the door bearing flapping sheets covered with scrawled, disjointed words, and the onlookers, who had so far considered Mrs. Page as merely a "prop," a bit of the setting in this gripping tragedy, now scrambled up on to their seats to gape at her. In vain the judge thundered with his gavel, and in vain the police shoved back the spectators and even thrust one or two belligerent ones out into the corridor, where they were welcomed with a roar from the waiting. The noise did not subside until curiosity had been sated.

"Mrs. Page, how long ago was it that you met your husband, Daniel Page?"

"Thirty-one years ago at Christmas," she said softly, and the district attorney leaned forward scowlingly, waiting to leap at the first irrelevant question.

"And you became engaged almost at once, did you not?" The question and the answer were equally quiet.

"Yes."

"But you were not married for some time?"

"No." The gentle old voice shook now, and a faint flush crept into the thin cheeks.

"Why?" The question snapped sharply, but her answer was long in coming.

"Because," she said at last, "I found that Dan drank, and I—I said I would not marry a man like—like that."

"But you did later on?"

"Yes," she continued. "He promised me that he would stop, and I believed—God knows a woman always believes that—from a man."

"Please make only direct answers to the questions," broke in the judge sternly. But some woman in the back of the room said aloud:

"That's the truth she's speaking. Let her say it."

"Silence!" commanded the judge. And now Langdon said:

"Will you tell us as concisely as possible of what happened after your marriage?"

For a long time it seemed as if she could not go on, and Mary leaned toward her, whispering softly:

"Oh, mother—mother, darling!" But as if the words were a draft of encouragement Mrs. Page took up the thread of her story.

"What happened," she said wearily, "is what happens to thousands of women. We hadn't been married very long before my husband began to drink again. The—the first night he came home really drunk was the night I had planned to tell him that Mary was coming to us from God. I don't think I shall ever forget the horror of that time. And all the while that I was making ready for her he was making my inability to go out with him an excuse for debauch.

"Oh, your honor," and now she turned to the judge, "it's no wonder my child is full of the fear of drink. For night after night I walked the floor, and I prayed like a wicked woman that my baby might die before it came into the world—because I was afraid it would bear the taint—would be born with that awful devastating thirst!"

More than one man in the room and, indeed, more than one of the jurors moved uneasily at the words, quietly spoken, but pregnant with tragedy.

"On the night that Mary was born," she went on, "Dan was too drunk to even be told—that—he had a daughter."

A murmur of sympathy crept through the room, and one voice could be heard distinctly:

"Oh, well, that's not unusual. Most men do—beastly drunk."

"I felt then," said Mrs. Page tenderly, "that it didn't matter. I had my baby, and I was too full of happy dreams for her future to fear for the present.

"Somehow," Mrs. Page continued, "the years passed, and Mary reached sixteen, but each of those increasing years had increased her fear of drunkenness. She was even afraid of her father, and because we were too poor for her to have pretty clothes she could not go to the parties and things like other girls. And I suppose my own horror kept building and blending with hers—until—that—day."

"Dan was too drunk to be told he had a daughter."

She broke off, and now Langdon was on his feet, a red spot of color in each cheek and his hands nervously clutching a scrap of paper as he asked sharply:

"What day do you refer to, Mrs. Page?"

"To the 16th of June ten years ago," she answered.

"Will you tell us why that day is so clearly remembered?" asked Langdon.

"Because," she answered deliberately, "that was the night of Mary's first wild attack!"

"I object!" shouted the district attorney, but the judge frowned.

"This seems to me to be particularly relevant to Mr. Langdon's somewhat curious defense," he said. "I will let the question and answer stand."

"Will you tell us," said Langdon, "what brought on that attack and what you know of it? Don't tell it to me, but to the jury, who were not there."

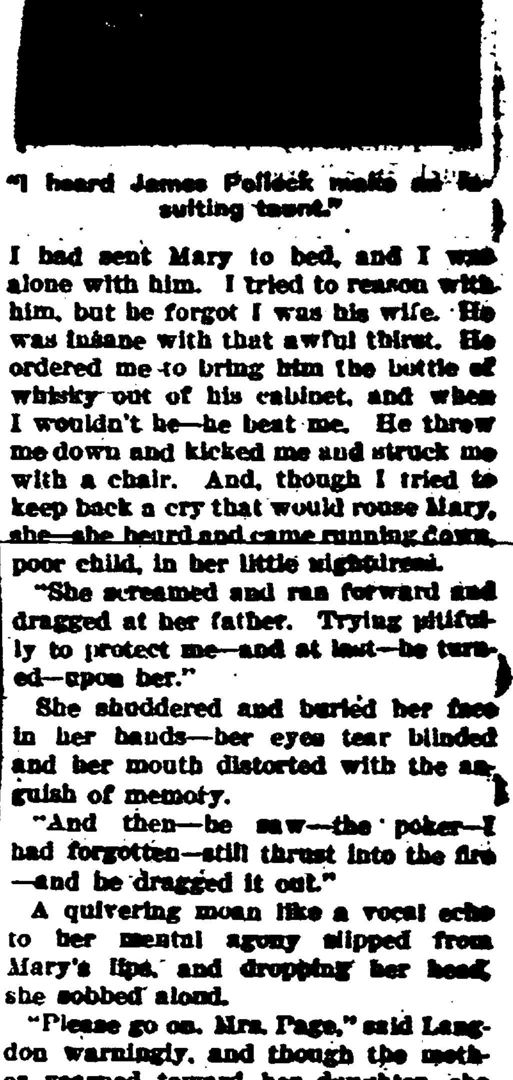
"I understand," she said softly, and Langdon sat down, overwhelmed by his own recollections of that terrible night and wondering where the frail little woman was getting the strength for the ordeal.

"It was early evening," said Mrs. Page, turning to the jurors. "Philip—Mr. Langdon—had come to ask Mary to go to a ball game with him, for they were friends even then," she explained tenderly. "And while they were standing on the porch my—my—husband came home—drunk. He saw the two of them and accosted them, using improper and insulting language. He didn't mean it—he didn't know what he was saying—but it was terrible for Mary, and she urged Philip to leave at once. I heard them—and heard Dan's words—and I ran out to help, leaving the poker thrust into the hot coals of the range, for I had been fixing the fire.

"We—we got Dan into the house and on to a sofa in the kitchen at last, where he lay babbling about James Pollock, with whom he had been drinking and who was also—or who had tried to be—a friend of my daughter's."

Again the whispering murmur of excitement swept through the room, but died of its own accord.

"Dan slept for a long time, and when he woke up he wanted more to drink.



"I heard James Pollock make an insulting taunt."

I had sent Mary to bed, and I was alone with him. I tried to reason with him, but he forgot I was his wife. He was insane with that awful thirst. He ordered me to bring him the bottle of whisky out of his cabinet, and when I wouldn't he—he beat me. He threw me down and kicked me and struck me with a chair. And, though I tried to keep back a cry that would rouse Mary, she—she heard and came running down, poor child, in her little nightdress.

"She screamed and ran forward and dragged at her father. Trying pitifully to protect me—and at last—he turned—upon her."

She shuddered and buried her face in her hands—her eyes tear blinded and her mouth distorted with the anguish of memory.

"And then—he saw—the poker—I had forgotten—still thrust into the fire—and he dragged it out."

A quivering moan like a vocal echo to her mental agony slipped from Mary's lips, and dropping her head she sobbed aloud.

"Please go on, Mrs. Page," said Langdon warningly, and though the mother yearned toward her daughter, she took up her story again in a voice that rose word by word into a poignant cry straight from a mother's anguished soul.

"He dragged Mary to the center of the room—that flaming poker in his hand. He forced her to her knees. I struggled to get to them, but I was weak—dazed, half conscious because of a blow on the head. It was all just a nightmare to me! But I heard Mary scream and scream and scream, and then—I saw—the poker burn into my child's forehead! I smelled the scorched flesh and from somewhere I got the strength to leap upon him—and then—the door was burst open and—Mr. Langdon came in.

"He—he had been worried about us," she panted, her voice breaking now, "and, coming back to the house, heard the cries. My husband rushed at him and they fought. Then suddenly Mary, who had been lying in a moaning little heap on the floor, writhed—got to her knees—to her feet—and before I could stop her, began to dance wildly about the two men, laughing and shouting and singing. And then, while we stood there appalled, even Dan—sobered by it—she ran on—out of the house—and into the street.

"Philip was after her in a moment. But it seemed hours before I could crawl to the door, and I saw—Mary disappearing down the street—and heard James Pollock make an insulting taunt. Then I was knocked down by my husband, who rushed by me with an oath.

"When I got up again Mr. Langdon was out of sight, and Dan and James Pollock were lying huddled in the path struggling to get to their feet."

Her voice dropped now and she finished quietly, firmly.

"Three hours later Philip brought Mary home—wrapped in his coat. Her nightgown was in ribbons; her feet were torn and bloody where she had danced and run over stones and stumps in the woods near our home. Her hands were bruised from snatching at trees and rocks by the way. She was in torture with the burn on her forehead, but she was—quite sane. And, your honor, she had no recollection of anything that had happened after she saw her father advancing with the red-hot poker."

SONG AND VERSE BY ODD FELLOWS

They Ate and Smoked, Remembering In Newly-Found Life the Principles of True Fellowship.

Last night may have been one of the coldest ones of the season, but that did not deter more than 100 Odd Fellows and a few friends from crowding into the Oneida st. temple to partake of the offerings of the veterans of the order who extolled the principles of fellowship; and, in one instance, the patriot whose name and memory America honors today. The one exception was Mr. E. P. Cole, who spoke on the "Life and Work of General George Washington." It is needless to add that this veteran Odd Fellow aroused his audience to a pitch of patriotic fervor by his eloquence.

Judge Wilson presided and everybody left the hall feeling that in him Odd Fellowship has one of its staunchest adherents, and Neahtawanta lodge in particular, a member thoroughly impressed with the duties and responsibilities of good citizenship.

Mr. John Painter, sr., assigned to the subject, "The Sunny Side of Odd Fellowship," exceeded the speedlimit provided by the committee, so that all who had half a mind to listen sat up and wondered why they had never before seen more than the serious phases of the order.

Mr. William H. Spanswick talked upon a subject, "The Three Linked Pin," in a way that brought to the ears of his audience some new reasons why the emblem is so near and dear to the hearts of millions of Americans. This poet laureate of Neahtawanta also recited a few verses of real merit, all of his own composition, and to the delight of the smokers.

Another member of the "Old Guard" of Neahtawanta, Mr. Charles Schafer, gave a number of reasons why he joined the Odd Fellows, the result being that the non-members present found themselves with a desire to go and do likewise.

"The Farmer and His Relation to the City," a question popular all over the country, was presented by Mr. F. Vogelgsang in a way that led the audience to take a different view of agriculture and the men who make it one of God's greatest blessings to humanity and indispensable to the life of any community.

"Reasons Why I am an Odd Fellow," a subject near to the heart of the Noble Grand of the lodge, Ray L. Crandall, gave everybody present an opportunity of taking a mental survey of himself and of becoming imbued with the noble principles of the order.

The musical features of the evening were in charge of William Joyce, Wirt R. Barker, Ray L. Crandall and William Merton. In conjunction with the vocal selections given by the quartette a Diamond Disc machine provided music pleasing to the lovers of the classic and modern composers.

At 10 o'clock a luncheon was served in the diningroom, the menu comprising oysters, scalloped potatoes, sandwiches, olives, celery, pumpkin pie, cheese, coffee and then, that the call for the meeting should not go misnamed, cigars in abundance.

FISH FRY TOMORROW NIGHT AT ODD FELLOWS TEMPLE

In keeping with the new life injected into the doings of Odd Fellowship in this city, there will be something to eat, and then some more, at the conclusion of the business session of the Odd Fellows lodge, tomorrow night, the occasion being a "fish fry" served to the taste of an epicure.

count for the high chlorine average found in the spring by presumptions that there are salt deposits in the vicinity.

A chart which was read to the board contained the readings of analyses made by State Engineers from time to time on the bacteria count and chlorine—or salt—content found in samples taken from the city mains, which showed that the chlorine count increased in volumes during the Spring thaws, Dr. Ogden, of the State Board of Health, following such an examination, recommended the closing of Spring No. 1, according to Dr. Hall. This was in 1911. The fact that such an excess of chlorine was found in the spring would indicate that river water was finding its way into the same. At time the chlorine content in the spring has been higher than that in the river.

River Water Seaps In

Every expert will differ in his opinions on the matter, Dr. Hall declared, but there is one certainty and that is tha t the land in the vicinity of Spring No. 1, from which the pump draws its water, should be given immediate attention. In the case of Spring No. 3, assuming that impurities from the barnyard are finding their way in to the spring, the whole supply would be affected as there is a pipe line leading from Spring No. 4, through No. 3, to No. 1. Another pipe leads from No. 2 to No. 1, and it is from the last-named spring that the water is taken. This is the largest one of the Springs and is believed to have been the original Great Bear Spring.

What was formerly a rich corn field between the casing of the spring and the river is now a swamp which is at present time filed with water due to the inadequacy of the state ditch to afford proper drainage. The pump well is protected from this pond of water by furnace slag which only serves to act as a coarse filter. Again it is probable that the condensing water from the pumping station and sewage from the same building back up into this pond. The waste is conducted to the state ditch by a pipe line, but on account of the clogging of the stream with weeds and other defects, the water does not leave the neighborhood.

A Slight Protection

Another danger to the city's health is the auxiliary water supply which is taken into a number of mills. These places draw water through separate pipe lines from Lake Neahtawanta and from the river and the auxiliary pipes are connected with the city's system. A check valve is the only guard against the impure water entering the city's mains and it is in connection with the probability of there being defective check valves in some of the factories that a recommendation is made by a health officer that strict attention be paid to this danger.

Following Dr. Hall's report, a resolution was introduced by the board and approved that the City Attorney acting in conjunction with Dr. Hall and City Engineer Hill examine the situation and report at the earliest possible time on their findings. Dr. Hall concluded his talk after 11 p. m. All previous records of the board were broken after Dr. Hall left, when within five minutes, five resolutions were offered and approved—or a resolution a minute. The Board convened in a star chamber session from 8 until 10 o'clock The resolutions which were passed upon authorized the sale of 35 tons of pipe at not less than $22 a ton, the sending of the flusher to the Studebaker company for repairs, and approval of the pay roll and a number of bills. Several communications were laid upon the table.

ANDREW GOT IIN WRONG BY RETURNING

Andrew Dzredziec, who was involved in a brawl in a West First st. saloon last November was fortunate at that time by fleeing from the city to escape the police, who at that time arrested five of his comrades. Yesterday he returned in company with Joe Eastenack, of Skaneateles. Today Dzredziec commences a three month sentence in the Oswego County jail, which Judge Wilson imposed on the man after he and his friend visited the same saloon yesterday and had an altercation with the bartender which resulted in the entire crowd being brought to police headquarters by Patrolman Fox.

MRS. F. J. NEWTON, CONCERT SOLOIST

Has Wide and Varied Experience; All Fulton Awaits Her Re-Appearance Here Again in March.

Little by little as the time approaches when the Fulton Symphony Orchestra shall make its first public appearance (the exact date being at present unknown) questions arise in the minds of the people who are on the tip-toes of expectancy, such as these: "Will the venture be a success?" "Who will be the soloist?" etc., etc.

The Evening Times is prepared to answer the queries, in this fashion: The venture is bound to be one of Fulton's greatest successes, provided the reader does his or her part to make it known all over this country that right here we have an orchestra of real merit. Secondly, does the reader know that righ there in the small city of Fulton we have a soloist whose reputation is country-wide? Mrs. F. Jess Newton is the answer to the question, she having traveled extensively with concert companies and lyceums. Mrs. Newton is the wife and mother of two persons of the the same name (naturally), and they too are members of the Symphony Orchestra. They are soloists, but willing to set aside—not anly as a matter of chivalry, but for the sake of art, and this they propose doing the evening of the concert, that the wife and mother may prove to the people of Fulton her ability to uplift and educate in matters musical.

Last Sunday's rehearsal of the Orchestra is described as the best ever, and more of them are in store for the performers, the schedule being as follows:

Friday night—Mr. George Brooker's home, 195 East 1st st., South; Sunday afternoon—Davis's hall, over First National bank, 3 o'clock sharp; Monday night, Elks hall, 8 o'clock sharp.

Building Delayed By Steel Shortage

Sunday's New York Times contained the following which appeals especially at this time, in view of the projected industry for Fulton—the steel die castings plant. The Pittsburgh dispatch to The New York Times says in part as follows:

The excessive demand for plates has caused a deadlock in car building and in ship construction. Inquiries for 100,000 tons of steel, mostly for plates, have been made, but the mills cannot deliver the goods in the time desired. Railroads have sent out tenders for plates in large tonnages which have been turned down by steel makers. Shipbuilders have declined to take on additional contracts for the building of vessels, as their docks will be filled until late in 1917 with contracts now on hand.

With the scarcity of steel is added freight congestion confined not alone to Eastern shipments but to all sections of the country east of the Mississippi River. Fuel is scarce because of a shortage of gas in theg as belt, and coal is difficult to get because the railroads lack cars to haul it. Coke is high in price and difficult to obtain. Some lines of crude steel are unobtainable at any price. Alloys are not only high inp rice but are so scarce that some plants cannot continue operations without them much longer. With an unprecedented market steelmakers have troubles that seem unsurmountable.

One of the chief causes for anxiety is the shortness in ferro-manganese. Imports from Great Britain are snapped up as rapidly as they are offered, 10,000 tons being taken with a rush on a recent offer of $150 a ton. These sales were made on extended deliveries. For prompt shipments ferro is bringing from $225 to $250 a ton Spiegeleisen, used as a substitute in some grades of steel, is selling at $40 a ton, furnace. Inquiries are being made for a 1917 supply. These prices are the highest on record, and it is probable a further advance will be made.

Steel pipe has been put up $2 a ton by the National Tube company. The announcement made is that black and galvanised pipe, twelve inches and under in diameter, is up one point, or $8 a ton. Lime pipe and oil country goods were advanced $4 a ton. Steel boiler tubes remain unchanged, but will probably go higher.

Buying Up Bars for Munitions

Steel bar mills refuse to accept open orders, and will only sell on specific contracts where the steel is going into use. A case came up where an Eastern mill was asked to bid on 6,000 tons of steel bars for shells. The steel company refused to consider the order unless the buyer could show that the bars were going into actual use, and that it was not for speculative purposes. Several other steelmakers refused to consider the order of 3.50c.

Negotiations are being carried on for steel bars to be turned into munitions on a large scale, for delivery during the last half. As high as 4c a pound is being asked, and if the demand continues this will be the accepted quotation before July 1. Steel bar makers refuse to consider less than 3.50c and then will only accept orders at the convenience of the mill.

Representatives of all the Allies are in Pittsburgh seeking to place contracts for last half delivery. Ordinary steel bars are held for 2c for delivery at the convenience of the mill. Bar iron is selling at 2c Chicago, and 2.10c Pittsburgh. Steel shafting is advancing and discounts are 40 per cent. off list for carloads with a spread of 30 to 35 per cent. in lesser lots. Sales have been made recently above the list price and the tendency is upward.

Wire products have been advanced $2 a ton. Nails are held at $2.30 a keg, and plain wire at $2.15 for 100 pounds. These are the highest prices obtained in thep ast fifteen years. Wire rods were sold by local mills at $50 a ton, and in some instances as high as $60 a ton, Pittsburgh. Mills are accepting contracts on a ninety-day basis and will not accept orders beyond that time. Chain has been increased $10 a ton, advancing from 4c to 4.50c. The last advance was $5 a ton.

Projected new construction is being held in abeyance because of the high cost of structural steel. Fabricators, too, have put up their bids so that only such operations are being carried forward that will quickly produce an income. Much of the structural work is confined to mills and plants for making war munitions and war material. Railroads having plans for bridge work will have to revise their plans or hold the improvements in abeyance.

Structural Mills Are Busy

In spite of high cost of building, structural mills have their books filled with orders several months ahead. They are only accepting contracts for two or three months. Premiums ranging from $5 to $10 a ton are being offered for prompt delivery. Fabricating pla ts are being worked to capacity and a number have withdrawn from assuming any more obligations in the line of additional work.

Sheet mills rolling heavy gauges are crowded with orders, especially in large widths. Those rolling light gauges have scarcely anything to do. The differential between light gauge sheets and the heavier gauges has been reversed and one maker established a quotation of 3.20c for No. 28 gauge. The proper price should be 2.60c to 2.75c and the arbitrary advance was probably made because of the enormous demand for heavy sheets. The demand is from domestic as well as from foreign sources. Tin plate is held at $4 as the base price a box, although the quotation made public is $3 75. The shortage of sheet bars has compelled tin plate and sheet makers to curtail operations.

While blast furnaces are creating a new record in jig iron product.on, buying has been very spotty and light since the first of the year. It is figured that foundries and steel mills will have to come into the market soon and a heavy buying movement

EASTERN STAR CHAPTER HEARS HOLLENGA PLEAD

ger things to be taken up and carried forward—things which affect the present and, future vitality of the citizenship. He pointed to the unsavory conditions—immoral conditions—at present existing Those bad conditions—such as bad housing, poorly-paid working girls, etc., are of far more importance to the welfare of the city, and to posterity, than an education in bridge whist and Shakespeare, was another observation of the speaker, as he continued to plead for an exertion of woman's influence in civic matters. He then enumerated a few of the things which should interest the women of Fulton, among them being: the unbelievable conditions—moral and political—existing here; the improvement of vacant lots by planting flowers there, and in gardens; and in affairs connected with the hospital.

It is the desire of the Secretary to see the women of Fulton become interested in the Chamber of Commerce; to become a working force in it. He said that the Chamber should not be dependent solely upon men to carry on the people's work; that by the women and men of the city pulling together—holding meetings around the big table in the Chamber of Commerce rooms, where could be discussed the question of ornamental lighting, the city's public debt, the city's bad political condition—due to the stay-at-home-from-the-polls-men, would result in a nearly ideal community.

Unfair Taxation

"Why is the grafting politician powerful?" cried the speaker. "Simply because of the indifference of the men who remain away from the polling places, and the always-to-be-relied-upon presence there of the men who vote for men unfit to hold office. This is where the women of our cities may wield their influence. They have it in their power to wield, then why not exert it?" asked Mr. Hollenga.

He cited an instance which caused a number of the women to look around the room, wherein he said he has found upon the books of this city a woman's property to be assessed at a higher valuation than that of a certain man—and this in spite of the fact that the man's property is acknowledged to be of greater value. This instance was used to good advantage by the speaker in driving home his argument for woman's interest in civic affairs; in beggin gof them to awaken to a realization of the great duties devolving upon their sex; including that of finding out why their sisters are made to work long hours for starvation wages; in doing something to save the boys and girls from contamination, etc.

"It is said by many persons," said Mr. Hollenga, "that men and women become bad because they insist upon it. Such statements are

PAGONE TRIAL FILLED THE DAY

Oswego—At yesterday's tria of Mariano Pagone alleged blackmailer, District Attorney Culkin wanted to introduce into the evidence two letters said to have been written by Pagone to Cosentino last July threatening him and the members of his family with death unless he deposited $1,000 in a tree at the end of Utica street. John R. Pidgeon objected to the introduction of the letters on the ground that they showed no connection with the attempt on Cosentino's life by the bomb explosion; that there was nothing to show that they were written by Pagone except expert Hamilton's testimony, and the objection was upheld by the court. During the argument the jury was excused.

That Mr. Pidgeon's defense will be that the letter, as quoted in the indictment, does not show an attmpt to do bodily harm, developed from the turn of affairs. It is claimed that the letter upon which the indictment was based said "on the worth of your life" and "you have not been molested, come to the aid of your countrymen, etc." and this, the attorney for Pagone holds does not constitute the charge of blackmail.

The letters which District Attorney Culkin endeavored to have introduced today bring the charge of blackmail directly to whoever the writer may have been for they declare that unless the money was deposited Cosentino would feel the pain of a dagger. They also said that Cosentino would wake up with a crooked mouth. The letters further described the efforts of thep olice of "bulls" as the writer classified the police to safeguard Cosentino when he went out Utica street.

The defense opened this afternoon with Mariano Pagone, the defendant, on the stand. He entered a categorical denial of all charged against him in the indictment or in the testimony of thew itnesses and denied all knowledge of the letters.

The letters which were offered in evidence this morning and were refused as the result of the objections by Mr. Pidgeon, were placed in evidence and marked for identification later.

WILL AND APPRAISAL FILED YESTERDAY

Oswego—The will of George H. Oxner of New Haven was filed in Surrogate's Court yesterday. He left and estate of $850 personal and $1,800 real. The estate is given to his wife, Alice M., and upon her death, what remains is to be equally divided between Floyd H., a son, and Mrs. Bertha B. Baumgardon, a daughter, both of Demster.

An inventory and appraisal of the estate of the late Hayes D. McKinley of Phoenix was filed yesterday. According to the appraisal the value of the estate is given as $30.911.83. Fred C. McKinley and F. J. Broach are executors and William H. Jennings and Omer A. Green appraisers.

Letters of administration were issued to Rebecca Eckart of Syracuse in the estate of her sister, Rachel Van Denberg, late of Constantia. The estate is estimated at $1,500 personal.

Letters of administration were issued this afternoon to Carl D. Calkins of Mexico in the estate of his father. Don A. Calkins of that village who died suddenly last week. The estate is estimated at $2,000 personal and $3,500 real property.

SHEEP RAISING WILL RECEIVE ATTENTION

Albany—Development of the sheep raising industry has increased in this State to such an extent that 5,000,000 acres of land better adapted to this industry than any other be devoted to it, is planned by the State Department of Agriculture. Commissioner of Agriculture Charles S. Wilson is of the opinion that there is opportunity for development along this line, and has announced that the department will urge the enactment of laws intended to foster sheep raising and to put to use some of the grazing land much of which is now practically idle.

ELKS BALL LAST NIGHT A SUCCESS

It was announced last night that the Elks would hold a dance St. Patrick's day, similar to last year's. Every effort will be made to have the affair as successful as the Charity Ball which was attended by more than 100 couples who danced gaily until the early morning hours. a goodly sum of money was realized to be applied to the fund which the order maintains for charity.

The Elks orchestra, led by A. F. Buell, provided the music for the affair last night. The lodge rooms were prettily decorated with wide streamers of purple and white, the colors of the order, and scores of tiny flags of the same color were suspended from the walls, with large American flags at the windows.

Thomas Farrell was chairman of the committee which was in charge of the affair. At midnight a luncheon was served. There were a number of visitors from Oswego, Phoenix and Syracuse.

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece.
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

CATTLE RAISING IN MEXICO.

Mexico ships several hundred thousand head of cattle to the United States for slaughter every year. Most of these beeves are raised in the tier of northern states bordering on Texas, where, before the revolution, there were ranches of from one million to seven million acres in extent owned by a few rich men.

The above photograph was not taken in northern Mexico, but down in Yucatan, where the new government, set up by the revolution, is preaching to the farmers the gospel of producing at home all necessary food supplies. Yucatan is extremely arid and for a long time little attention was given to anything except the production of henequen, or sisal grass.

Governor Alvarado has sent to the United States for numerous agricultural, horticultural and live stock experts, and is trying to show the farmers of Yucatan the advantages of diversification. Yucatan now has several fine cattle ranches and within a few years it is expected that the peninsula state will be able to produce all the beef needed there, and more.

Yucatan has more individual waterworks systems than any other similar area in the world and the farmers are learning the value of irrigation. In Merida, the capital of Yucatan, there are thousands upon thousands of windmills, which bring water from a depth of 200 to 1500 feet.

PRIMITIVE ROPE MILL.

The above photograph shows a peon's family in Yucatan, Mexico, engaged in making rope and cord by hand from the fibre of the henequen plant. Note that the man starts his rope by tieing the ends of the loose fibre to the "big toe" of his right foot and begins winding the long white strand with his hands. These Yucatecos make a fine quality of rope in this manner. After winding their strands from the henequen fibre the women of the household make carpets, etc. These poor people of Yucatan were slaves for so many years before the recent revolution that they have never accustomed themselves to wearing shoes. With the changed conditions in Yucatan, which give these people living wages and future hopefulness, a new and very important shoe market will be opened to United States manufacturers. Notwithstanding the absence of shoes, these peons of Yucatan are cranks on the subject of personal cleanliness and the cleanliness of their meagre wardrobes.

A Mexican Thinker.

Dr. Victor A. Rendon, former Secretary of State of Yucatan, Mexico, and one of the leaders in the progressive, political and social rejuvenation of Yucatan, is looked upon by Mexicans as one of the big "thinkers" of that republic. Dr. Rendon recently successfully negotiated a $10,000,000 loan in the United States to finance a farmers' marketing system of Yucatan, and is now the general director in this country of the Yucatan State Commission which acts as the selling agency for the henequen growers of that state. Dr. Rendon graduated from the universities of Mexico City and Paris, France. He organized the Democratic political party in Yucatan.

PLANTATION SCENE IN YUCATAN.

Not even on the farms in Yucatan, Mexico, are there frame buildings, except in rare instances. The homes of the "haciendados" (planters) are built of stone or cement, as are the storage barns, and the peons live in houses constructed of cement or "adobe." Unusual cleanliness is exhibited about the farm buildings and the homes of the laborers. The above photograph shows a henequen drying plot, where the shredded fibre used so extensively in the manufacture of binding twine is strung on wires attached to posts and sun-dried, preparatory to baling for shipment to the United States.

The farmers of Yucatan produce approximately 300,000,000 pounds of henequen fibre annually. They receive about five cents per pound net for it. The steamship companies charge 1 1-4 cents per pound for transporting it to the United States, or more than one cent per pound higher than the freight rate existing before the European war opened. The entire henequen supply of Yucatan is sold through a State Commission created for the protection of the interests of the growers.

Chiffon Powder Puff Bags.

It is not a difficult feat to manufacture a wide mouthed bag from pink, blue or lavender chiffon gathered on to a round or oval embroidery ring. Hangers of satin ribbon to match the bag should be fastened across like the handle of a basket and tacked to the ring on either side with rosettes of the ribbon and small chiffon or satin roses. Within the bag put a dozen small puffs made of absorbent cotton, drawn in at one side like a made puff by a string of narrow ribbon. Hung in the guest room or on any dressing table these individual puffs will prove useful where there are visitors, and the puffs can be replaced as those used are thrown away.

Welsh Rabbit.

Cut one or two slices of white bread about a quarter of an inch thick, toast on both sides and butter well. Take half a pound of cheddar cheese, grate it and put it into a small pan with two tablespoonfuls of cream, a teaspoonful of mustard, a dust of pepper, and stir these all together over the fire till the mixture is like cream. Cut the toast into square pieces and place them on a hot dish. Pour the cheese mixture over them and serve at once.

GRIP DO'S AND DON'TS.

One Health Commissioner Gives These Rules to Grip Victims.

DO.

Keep away from crowded places of assembly when grip is prevalent.

Have plenty of fresh air at home and where you work.

Wear clothes according to the outside temperature, but avoid too heavy clothes indoors to prevent unhealthy skin coddling, which will make you more liable to attack by the grip germ.

Keep in the open air as much as possible.

Keep the body functions regulated, so that waste matter may be eliminated.

Be temperate in eating and drinking.

Keep your teeth well brushed. Many evil minded germs lurk in the mouth.

Think of the other fellow if you yourself already have grip.

DON'T.

Don't sit around with wet feet.

Don't be promiscuous in your kissing. The grip germ may be readily passed from lip to lip.

Don't sneeze or cough in your friends' or neighbors' faces.

Don't ride in a crowded street car where all the windows are closed.

Don't be afraid of fresh air. Even drafts will not hurt you unless you are fatigued and overheated.

Don't fail to remember that grip is very contagious. Keep away from it if you can. The next best thing is to keep physically fit, so you can resist attack.

War Bracelets a Paris Fad.

Frenchwomen prize highly these days heavy bracelets made from the rings of shells fired by the French "75's." Mlle. Sorel, a favorite of the Paris stage, wears constantly one of these bracelets, which is large enough to slip up the arm above the elbow. Rings made up of metal which once formed part of menacing shells are also in favor and are worn outside of the glove.

Copper and aluminum jewelry is fancied more than ornaments of gold and precious stones just now, for all Paris is going in for economy and economical effects, and any ostentatious display is discountenanced.

But the war jewelry—the massive bracelets and the ungainly rings—are regarded as treasures indeed, for they may not be bought, but come as gifts from the very trenches themselves, where the soldiers occupy their leisure hours in fashioning these rude but valued gifts for sweethearts at home.

Cooking Pork Chops.

This is a very nice way of cooking pork chops: Use six or more chops. Bone them, fry until brown and nearly cooked enough to serve. Remove the pan from the fire and add boiling water to cover the meat, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, teaspoonful of dry ginger, salt and black pepper to taste and a good sized onion thinly sliced. Put back on the range and simmer slowly for half or three-quarters of an hour. Four cloves can be used if they are liked. Thicken the gravy after removing chops and pour over them and serve with baked pota-

NEW ANTHEM FOR NATION IS PROPOSED IN HOUSE BILL

First Since Forty-sixth Congress. $2,500 Prize Offered by Elks.

A fine, stirring and high sounding anthem has been introduced into the house by Representative Dyer of St. Louis, who has asked that congress adopt the resolution containing the verses as a national hymn. The introduction of this poetry as a joint resolution, according to Joel Grayson, the walking encyclopedia of the house document room, is the first since Representative S. W. Downey of Wyoming startled the Forty-sixth congress with a 200 page epic.

Representative Dyer's proposed anthem is the effort of Henry McEuen Jones of St. Louis to win the $2,500 prize offered by the Elks for a national anthem that congress will accept. The last verse of the resolution reads:

Give us peace by upright arbitration,
No death dealing shot to be hurled,
But if forced into war just remember
That Old Glory will never be furled.
For our union's cemented forever.
We have honored the blue and the gray,
Then we'll righteously follow Old Glory
With a power no nation can stay.

Indeed, a Wonderful Back

THIS is a study in spring greens. The tunic is of panne velvet of a soft, sagey green, cut very full and hanging in a graceful drape over a net base picked out with iridescent sequins. The negligible bodice, which is sleeveless, is also sequined net, while a sash of velvet ribbon quaintly hangs a la mode.

There is always a charm about the combination of fur with any very sheer fabric. So the new net sleeves that have cuffs of fur are very attractive. One of these sleeves is very long and flares so that it is wide at the wrist. There it is finished in a wide band of fur.

Gaberdine is again a leading fabric. It proved its durability as well as its style last winter and the preceding summer, and it has every reason to remain in favor. ANNA MAY.

For the Business Girl.

Shirt waist of flesh color silk crepe and skirt of hairline mohair for the business girl.

A modish, yet eminently practical, waist is illustrated here, carried out in washable silk crepe de Chine in flesh color. The front of the waist may be rolled to form revers and the collar worn flat. Being a convertible model, however, the collar can be buttoned to form a high neck with just as good effect. In medium size the waist requires 2½ yards 36-inch material, while the skirt calls for 3¾ yards 44-inch striped serge or mohair.

Only a few hours are required to make the waist. The front is creased as perforated, then the tucks stitched into place. Next, adjust underfacing to position underneath front, corresponding edges even. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Center-front indicated by line of large "O" perforations. Gather back on crossline of small "o" perforations and ⅝ inch above; draw gathers to the required size, stitch tape over gathers and fasten in front.

Face collar and sew to neck edge notches and center-backs even; leave free from small "o" perforation to front edge. Roll collar and front as illustrated.

Now, bind the slashed edges of the sleeve and close seam as notched. Gather entire lower edge. Line the wrist cuff, sew to gathered edge of sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve. Roll cuff on large "O" perforations. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Line and adjust the belt to position as shown, crossing the ends at the center-fronts. Trim with buttons.

A shirt waist of good design and a skirt of fashionable line never fail to interest the girl who goes to business.

A Word About Possessions

Some people are very much concerned about their possessions, while all the time the only things that it will ever be possible for them to own are scarcely worth having. Because, after all, the only things that belong to you are the things that you are big enough to love and appreciate, not the things that you can pay money for.

To be sure you can go out and pay money for chairs and tables, for coats and diamond sunbursts, and they will belong to you after a fashion. But in the end it's all a matter of chairs and tables, isn't it?

Not so with the ticket to a concert or the price of a book. You can buy your way into a violin recital or pay money for a poem. But the man or woman to whom the poem truly belongs, and for whom it was meant, is the man or woman who loves it and understands it. And once having that sort of a possession no one can take it away from you.

"I get to the opera once a year," said a woman who is not often able to meet grand opera prices, "but the opera is mine all the year. It belongs to me, not to the people who have season tickets and sit in the orchestra circle and the boxes and go as often as they wish, unless, perchance, they, too, go because they understand and love the music."

So what is the use of wasting time envying people their possessions?

Let them roll along in their autos and lean back in their furs. It's yours to look at them and laugh if yours is the capacity for owning one fine thing they can't buy with their money.

"The furs," you may say to them, "are yours—the stenciled line of that rugged tree, sketched against the gray of a winter sky is mine, all mine because I have eyes to see it."

So why get excited about possessions, after all? The big possessions of life, the things that are most worth having are within yourself, and no matter how slim your purse the world always holds fair riches that are made especially for you if you know how to own them.

A woman once moved to the country from the heart of a busy city. "But I miss the flowers so," she wrote back.

"Flowers! What, flowers in crowded streets?" you ask.

"Why, the flowers in the shop windows, for whenever I wanted to," she explained, "I could walk a block or two and feast my eyes on some florist's window. They were always there the year round; always where I could see them, and they belonged to me as much as to anybody."

To Keep Wall Paper Clean.

To keep wall paper from becoming blackened from hot air furnace try this: Purchase as many wire dish drainers as you have registers, cover with thin unbleached muslin, a few pins only being required to fasten the muslin covers; turn over the registers. It is necessary to wash covers occasionally but your paper and curtains will not be blackened. Wire dish drainers may be purchased at any house furnishing store.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE HONEY JAR.

HONEY FUDGE.—Materials: Two cupfuls of sugar, one-third cupful of honey, one-third cupful of water, two egg whites. Utensils: Egg beater, bowl and stewpan. Directions: Boil together the sugar, honey and water until the sirup spins a thread when dropped from a spoon (about 250 degrees F.). Pour the sirup over the well beaten whites of the eggs, beating continuously and until the mixture crystallizes, adding the flavoring after the mixture has cooled a little. Drop in small pieces on buttered or paraffin paper.

Butter Honey Cake.—One cupful honey, one-half cupful butter, one-half teaspoonful ginger, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon, one teaspoonful ground cardamon seed, three eggs, three cupfuls flour, one-half to one teaspoonful soda, one ounce candied orange peel, one ounce candied lemon peel or one cupful seeded raisins. Utensils—A granite stewpan for mixing, measuring cups and spoons, egg beater, sifter. Directions—Mix the honey and butter by warming slightly and stirring; add the spices and the yolks of the eggs unbeaten and beat the mixture thoroughly. Add the flour and the soda dissolved in a little water, then the whites of the eggs beaten stiff and finally the fruit. Try a sample for amount of soda. Bake in a moderate oven.

Honey and Nut Bran Muffins.—Materials—One-half cupful honey, one cupful flour, one-fourth to one-half teaspoonful soda, one-fourth teaspoonful salt, two cupfuls bran, one tablespoonful melted butter, one and one-half cupfuls milk, three-quarters cupful finely chopped English walnuts. Utensils—Food chopper, sifter, mixing bowl, measuring cups and spoons, gem tins. Directions—Sift together the flour, soda and salt and mix these with the bran. Add the other ingredients and bake for twenty-five or thirty minutes in a hot oven in gem tins. This amount will make twenty or thirty small muffins.

lies; men and women are guided wrong. If you want better conditions here in Fulton—better surroundings for your children, you must start at the bottom and build upward. The future of this country does not rest upon the dinner pail brigade; it rests upon the boys and girls who troop out of school at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Therefore, you must set up ideals for the boys and girls of tomorrow. How often do we find a fond father and mother cautioning their children to not associate with Pete and Anne, because Pete and Anne are too wise in worldly knowledge; but do we find father or mother trying to do things that will make Pete and Anne better?" were some of thec oncluding telling sentences used by the speaker as he plead for more interest in vocational education, recalling also the words of Secretary Redfield which he heard while in Washington last week. Secretary Redfield pointed to the shamefulness of the situation which compels sweet girls and clever boys to work for the small pittance of ten cents an hour, when by all that is holy and right they should be made self-sustaining by the States under whose flag they must in future serve. In conclusion Mr. Hollenga besought his audience to take the initiative—at once—for civic betterment, adding that by doing so they would find joy in the end in being able to say finally and, individually, "I have done my part."

will set in shortly. Valley furnaces have approximately 75,000 tons of steel making iron unsold for delivery before July 1. This is an abnormal condition when it is taken into consideration that steel mills have sold their output up to and after that date. No price changes are noted and Bessemer iron is selling around $21 a ton. Basic is held at $17.75 and $17, valleys and foundry and malleable around $17.50 to $17.75.

Southern iron, which had risen to $15 a ton, Birmingham, for No. 2 foundry, has declined to $14.50. # BRITAIN'S DEBT $10,410,000,000

London—The House of Commons last night passed the new vote of credit for $2,100,000,000 asked for by the Premier, Mr. Asquith, thereby raising the total expenditure for thee conduct of the war so far to $10,400,000,000.

Great Britain's mobilization of her financial resources to enable her and her allies and dominions to carry on the war was expressed in staggering figures by Mr. Asquith. These revealed the following items:

Total votes of credit for the war by Great Britain, $10,410,000,000.

Total loans to Great Britain's allies and her dominions, $2,959,500,000.

Total expenditures for year ending April 1, $6,100,000,000.

The continued increase in the cost of the war to Great Britain Mr. Asquith showed in the following figures:

Daily expenditure, April 1 to July 17, 1915, $14,000,000.

July 18 to September 11, $17,000,000.

September 12 to November 6, $21,750,000.

November 7 to February 19, 1916, between $21,500,000 and $22,000,000.

Mr. Asquith said the expenditures for munitions for the army and navy from April 1 to Febrdary 1 9were $4,174,000,000.

The first vote of credit asked for yesterday by Mr. Asquith was $600,000,000, to be applied to the supplement estimate for the current fiscal year. The second vote, to provide funds for the first part of the financial year beginning April 1, was for $1,500,000,000.

Mr. Asquith said loans by Great Britain to her allies and dominions showed a marked increase since November, and that the growth in the rate of expenditure was due almost entirely to loans to the allies from the vote of credit.

MARRIED 50 YRS.; WILL CELEBRATE

Mr. and Mrs. Hernando D. Hubbard, of 603 Buffalo st., will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, Friday afternoon and evening by giving a reception.

Mr. Hubbard comes from one of the oldest families in the community. His father's people came from New England about 1805. They followed the military trail up the Mohawk valley and on to Salina (now Syracuse). Turning north, they came on to the site of Fulton by a blazed trail. At that time there was so much fever and ague along the river that they settled back around what has since been called Hubbard's Corners. In the War of 1812 (which soon followed), several members of the family served around Sackett's Harbor.

Mr. Hubbard was born February 23rd, 1846, near Volney Center. When seventeen years old, he earned the name by which he has since been known, "Soge", by becoming a soldier. He enlisted at Oswego in the Ninth New York Heavy Artillery. Shortly after his return from the war, on February 25th, 1866, he married Miss Elizabeth Amelia Hale of Volney. Mrs. Hubbard was born in 1850, her parents coming from England in 1849.

In the late seventies and early eighties Mr. Hubbard served as deputy sheriff of Oswego county. During this time he figured in some of the most sensational round-ups of the shipping days of Oswego. In August 1886, they moved to Fulton, settling about their present location at 6th and Buffalo sts.

They have four children living: Mrs. J. H. Salladin of South Scriba; Mrs. H. A. Ackerman of Theresa; M. H. Hubbard and Mrs. C. B. Coman of Fulton, all of whom will assist in the celebration.

MRS. CLARK GIVEN A WASHINGTON SURPRISE

Mrs. George P. Clark, of S. 4th st., last night tendered a George Washington party to the members of the Girls' Friendly Society of the All Saints Episcopal chusch.

At the door, the guests were greeted by Miss Phyliss Bovard who was attired in a George Washington costune. About thirty-five people were present. They enjoyed card playing, for which prizes were awarded, and also listened to a number of musical selections. The Misses Deuell, Koch Bovard, Jennings and Bogardus assisted in the entertainment.

Light of the Future.

Professor Ulric Dahlgren of Princeton university predicts that the time will come when the luciferous substance of chemical composition carried by fireflies, certain fish and other animals will be used for illuminating houses and other purposes. He believes that this will come about when the nature and proportions of the chemical constituents of these substances are discovered and says they will give a light having an efficiency of 90 per cent instead of the 15 per cent produced by lights now in use.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time!"

Membership meeting, Friday evening, February 25th, in the Public Library. Be present it will be worth your while. The Chamber has some surprises for you.

Do you know a man who tracks the path from his home to his business wrapped in solitude of his own concerns and shrunken to the limit of shortsighted interests in the general welfare of his community.

Do you know a man who has no time for the general welfare of the problems of his community his town, his very home? The Schools, the Hospitals, the Libraries, they are not his business? Conservation of health; moral reforms; good government; parks and playgrounds; public improvements? Each of these and all of them affect every man as a citizen, every man in his business, every man in his profession, every man in his home. "Let those who like prominence attend to these things," says the man wrapped up in his own affairs. Yet the selfsame man wrapped up in his own affairs would not live in a community where these things were not in evidence.

There is as much difference between "boasting" and "boosting" as there is between talking and doing.

Every manufacturer, merchant and citizen of the City of Fulton should have this resolution written in their hearts:

"Whereas, we recognize that the manufacturers and merchants of Fulton are the very backbone of our City, and

"Whereas, these same manufacturers and merchants are taxpayers and the promoters and executors of the institutions that stand for the permanent advancement and development of Fulton; and,

"Whereas, the success of their enterprises depends on patronage, therefore be it resolved, that we, the Citizens of the City of Fulton do recommend a campaign of education and publicity to the end of encouraging the patronage of home manufacturers and merchants on the part of the Citizens of Fulton and

"Therefore, recommend that such a campaign shall be instituted following the approval of such ways and means as shall be suggested by the Chamber of Commerce. We the Citizens of Fulton therefore endorse the suggestion of the slogan under which this campaign shall be conducted namely—"Fulton Goods for Good Fultonians."

I have alway noticed great success
Is mixed with trouble, more or less,
And it's the one who does the best
That gets more kicks than all the rest.

Are you doing what you can to help the town?
Are you passing out a smile instead of a frown?
When there's anything to do
Do you help to put it through?
It will make you better too
And spread renown.

Do you buy your goods at home when e'er you can?
And support and aid you friend and fellowman?
A dollar spent right here
May come back within the year,
Bringing gladness and good cheer,
And help your clan.

Have you welcomed strangers just the way you should?
Treating them the very finest that you could?
You may call on them some day,
With perhaps a debt to pay.
And secure a slight delay.
If you would.

Will you invest your surplus cash right here?
Where you can watch it work and never fear?
It will help in taxes too,
And a lot come back to you,
Give employment to a few and be near.

Washington, Greatest of All Americans, Had Many Adorers in This City Last Night; K. of C. Leads in the Celebration

In three meeting places the birth of General George Washington was fittingly celebrated, last night. Perhaps the most pretentious of the events was the Knights of Columbus banquet in honor of the intrepid leader of the "Boys of '76," held in the Oneida st. club rooms, and addressed by the Rev. John L. Lindsman, the Rev. Timothy F. Howard of Oswego, and Prof. James E. Lanigan.

The Knights' club rooms were made bright with the national colors, draped about portraits of General Washington, and the dinner table presented a pretty sight with the places of the diners marked by minature American flags standing in the center of the folded menu cards.

Early in the evening the Knights drafted letters of greetings, sending them by special messenger to the rooms of the Citizens and Masonic Clubs, where in each the membership was also engaged in celebrating the day.

The resolution read as follows:

"'The Knights of Columbus, in banquet assembled, extend to the members and guests of the Citizens Club of Fulton, N. Y., their sincerest greetings on this the one hundred and eighty-fourth anniversary of the birth of the "Father of Our Country.

"ST. JOSEPH'S COUNCIL, No. 254."

February 22, 1916.

To which, in a very short time ,the recipients of the paper responded in a fitting manner, thus helping to bind closer the fraternity sentiment of Fulton.

Bright-faced young women, members of the Sodality Society of St. Mary's church, administered to the wants of the men as they tasted of the following bill of fare: Southern punch, pickles and olives; Baked Cape Vincent Salmon, sauce hollandaise; Roast Beef au Jus, mashed potatoes and Italian peas; vegetable salad; assorted cakes, ice cream and coffee.

Singing by everybody interspersed the courses, the instrumental music being furnished by Buell's orchestra. When at last the table was cleared J. William Branche, Grand Sir Knight, introduced the toastmaster, Mr. D. M. Sullivan, whose method of presenting each speaker added to his reputation in an official way.

The Rev. John L. Lindsman reviewed the life of General Washington, taking his audience on a trip around the scenes of the young patriot's youth. He told of the deeds of greatness which led to Washington's wonderful accomplishments; of how Washington had undertaken and carried on the tasks of the people, to be finished by another great man of iron—Abraham Lincoln.

Prof. James E. Lanigan's subject was "Knighthood, Past and Present." He admonished his audience of the high ideals set by the Knights of Columbus; of their duty to city, state and nation; and beseeching them to live clean lives that they may become the real safeguards fo the country.

"Patriotism" was the subject assigned to the Rev. Timothy F. Howard. The speaker rejoiced in the heroic deeds of Washington; the glorious country in whose defense he gave his life and sacred honor; of the productiveness of the land of Washington's birth. He told his audience that only through the patriotic fervor of the great leader of the colonists was it possible to hold together the bands of soldiers of the different states, so that they could withstand the trained armies of King George.

The bravery of the American soldiers from Washington's time to the present was lauded by the speaker, as was also the unanimity of action of the American people. These qualities, said the speaker are productive of the right kind of citizenship, for they mean truth and honor.

The soloists of the evening included Mr. Albert E. Krause, who sang "In the Garden of My Heart" and "The Rosary;" Mr. Edward Walsh, "My Dear;" and as a finale, Mr. Frank Massaro sang, "America, I Love You."

Washington's Reaching Hands Opened the Doors of the Citizens Club Where Judge Bulger Poured Forth His Eloquence

It is doubtful whether a group of more than 100 men—members of the Citizens Club, or any other Fulton organinzation has ever during their lifetime been presented with a clearer cut exposition of the character and virtues of General George Washington than came to them last night, presented with all the eloquence, force and logic for which the speaker, Ex-Judge Bulger of Oswego, is just noted. His speech lasted one hour, and no man of his audience would have regretted listening to the orator for a much longer period.

Washington was described by the speaker as a marvelous man, in the light of comparisons; the greatest of all men with one exception, the Divine man, born in Judea centuries ago. He accomplished more in the interests of human rights than any man, before or since, said the Judge, as he quoted the eloquence of one who described Washington as a man "Beset with difficulties beyond comprehension." Washington, said the speaker, was the man who feared not to cast into the scales "his life, his fortune, and his sacred honor." Some of the difficulties surrounding Washington can best be seen when we stop to think of a Congress with no power, no money, only a few enlisted soldiers, and no authority to compel them to serve. were mentioned as the speaker enumerated the jealousies of men, who served under the great commander, whose troops lacked guns and powder to defend their home from the threatening and advancing fleet under General Howe.

At Valley Forge Washington found new light. There he proved himself to be a gallant Christian soldier. It was there that he was often found on bended knees imploring help and guidance. It was there that the great principles for which Washington and his men were fighting received an impetus through the sufferings and hardships endured which led up to a realization of the colonists' demands, were some more of the Judge's glowing words, as he implored his audience to become familiar with the Constitution article by article and section by section. It is the most marvelous document in the world today. No code compares it. Washington more than any other man did more to bring about our government than any body of men. He was an example of patience, continued the Judge, as his speech gradually rounded up an endorsement of Preparedness as recognized today by the country at large. He said that never in history has our flag been carried by soldiers fighting for the country's or an individual's renown. He contended that no heritage left by Washington and his confreres is so worthy of the right to defend; and that no heritage equals the integrity enjoyed by the men who have dyed battlefields with their blood. In view of what has occurred in our history, "Is it worth while that our Government shall be perserved?" cried the speaker, as he brought his audience into a more modern atmosphere where he described the "Boys of '61" as a majestic host, whose mission was to fight battles, under the guidance of Abraham Lincoln, for the preservation of the Union and the Constitution. "And were those battles in vain?" asked the Judge, as he proceeded to point to the heroism of the women who remained away from the battlefields, but who gave all that was near and dear to them that the Union might be preserved.

Here the speaker reverted to Washington and the impossibility

THE SITUATION IN THE COAL FIELDS

If there were evidence that the miners would stand out for all the demands they are soon to make of operators in the bituminous and anthracite fields, the country might well apprehend great strikes this Spring. In their Indianapolis convention the United Mine Workers voted on Friday to ask, in the bituminous field for a 10 per cent. advance in wages on a mine-run basis, and a 20 per cent advance in the wages of day workers; and to back up demands already made in the anthracite field for a 20 per cent. advance in wages and an eight-hour day for day workers. The operators will hardly yield. Yet, despite the shortness of the time for a settlement — the present agreements expire in both fields on March 31—the miners are represented as optimistic. "There appears to be a general impression," the Indianapolis News reports, "that there will be no serious difficulty in bringing about a wage-scale agreement at this time." This is borne out by last week's decision that, if negotiations were unfinished on March 31, the miners would remain at work until they were concluded. The miners are soon to hold a conference with the anthracite operators; with the bituminous operators in Mobile beginning February 10.

The joint conference of bituminous operators and miners this year will be the seventh of importance since the adoption of this method of arranging disputes in 1898. The history of the series inspires faith in the probability of a friendly settlement. In the 1900 conference the miners received an advance of 14 cents per ton in some districts, nine cents in others, and of 20 per cent. for inside day labor. In 1903 the miners received another advance of six to 10 cents per ton, according to district, with another increase of day wages. In 1904 the operators came to the conference determined to force a general reduction of 15 per cent., on the ground of the prevailing industrial depression. This reduction in a modified form was finally accepted by a vote of theo rganized fields, the national officers advocating it on the ground that "it will strengthen us with the public, for it will demonstrate that a trade-union can, when the occasion arises, gracefully accept a reduction as well as insist upon an advance." In 1906 there was a failure to agree in conference, but separate agreements were arranged outside on the scale of 1903. So in 1908 a conference agreement was made covering only Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania; and in 1910 the questions at issue were such that contracts by states seemed better than for a comprehensive area. But all except sporadic troubles were still avoided. In 1912, moreover, an unprecedentedly large conference was held, the miners received an increase of five cents per ton, and arrangements was made for several varieties of industrial cooperation. So much have both sides profited by cooperative bargaining that each may be depended upon to make real concessions to preserve an amicable basis.

In the anthracite field the danger of labor troubles has always been far greater than in the bituminous. The strikes of 1902, involving federal intervention, ended with much bitterness on both sides; and neither showed any liking for the permanent arbitration board which the federal commission created. The scope of this board did not extend to wage questions. In 1906 the miners reluctantly signed an agreement to continue under the wage award of 1903, feeling that they had accomplished nothing beyond inducing the operators to do a little negotiating. They hoped that a satisfactory joint conference could be arranged in 1909. But the year came and they were forced to sign contrats to work three years more under the old award. In 1912 the long-awaited joint conference was held, and resulted in the agreement whose terms expire next month. by this agreement contract rates and wage scales for all employes were increased 10 per cent. It was settled that the miners should elect checkweighmen, and that in each mine there should be a grievance committee. But the miners' organization was not recognized, nor the miners' demand for an eight-hour day; while the 10 per cent. increase was just half what the miners had asked. They now return to their demand for a recognition of the United Mine Workers' organization, for a shorter day and for the 20 per cent. increase. It is to be hoped that this forthcoming joint conference, the second in four years, will thoroughly establish the principle of genuine conciliation.

Every threat of a strike in our coal fields should remind the United States that it still has scant legal provision for checking or dealing with such a calamity. Other countries, and most prominently the Dominion of Canada, have demonstrated that the government could use its good offices at such a time without interfering with the rights of employer or arbitrator, or with any voluntary system of conciliation. The Canadian Industrial Disputes Investigation Act provides simply that whenever a labor dispute has reached an acute point, either party may petition the Minister of Labor for the appointment of a board of conciliation. The board tries to bring the disputants together. If it fails, it makes a report on the merits of the affair and on its view of the proper settlement, and leaves public opinion to do the rest. The day may come when we shall have some such ready method of easing a strained situation and assisting a just issue by Federal or State action. Meanwhile, the cooperative settlement of their differences by miners and operators is t o be encouraged.—N. Y. Post.

WE NEED THE "PREPAREDNESS"

In his ringing addresses before the various fraternal societies of the city, Secretary Hollenga of the Chamber of Commerce has drawn some very clear and important distinctions with reference to the purpose of the organization which he represents. Throughout each speech there rings a real note of "preparedness" for activity that will lift this city from its unenviable and disgraceful position before the eyes of men skilled in the science of big business. And yet it cannot be said that the "preparedness" talk really means war upon the causes of the existing corruption, but rather the putting up of defenses in case the powers which have brought about the rottenness remain impervious to the threatening attitude of the decent people of this city.

It is evident to the people who would have this city a clean city, that there exists a profound necessity for agitation of the right kind, so that when the proper time shall arrive for clearing up things there may be found in training a large proportion of intelligent citizens ready and qualified to serve in the ranks.

The Chamber of Commerce is not a political organization. It has no selfish designs upon any interest or faction, but in view of what all of us know to be true, not only in a social way but in the way of political intrigue Fulton people cannot afford to leave affairs drift along without making a defensive effort—to be ready to resist the attacks of the despoilers of good civic conditions.

The whole purpose and object of those who believe in a proper "preparedness" could hardly have been stated more strongly than the words which fell from the lips of the Secretary, Monday evening, when he addressed the Eastern Star membership. He did not ask for a standing army to back up his work, but a citizenship united with enough training to make up a force of men and women determined to see an administration of fair play on all sides instead of a jumbled mass of meddlers who never can accomplish anything. This being a scientific age, a time when intrigue is employed by the unscrupulous ones to defeat the will of the decent persons, it requires the kind of training advocated by Mr. Hollenga to make a body of people worthy of the name of fighters. If a thousand of such men and women as the Secretary tells us we should be could be persuaded to think and act as we should think and act the city of Fulton would be free from the plight it is in, or from the danger of getting in the same position in the next hundred years.

IMAGINED WRONGS

(Owen Feltham)

We make ourselves more injuries than are offered us; they many times pass for wrongs in our own thoughts, that were never meant so by the heart of him that speaketh. The apprehension of wrong hurts more than the sharpest part of the wrong done. So, by falsely making ourselves patients of wrong, we become the true and first actors. It is not good, in matters of discourtesy, to dive into man's mind, beyond his own comment, nor to stir upon a doubtful indignity without it, unless we have proofs that carry weight and conviction with them.—Words do sometimes fly from the tongue that the heart did neither hatch nor harbor. While we think to revenge an injury, we many times begin one; and after that, repent our misconceptions. In things that may have a double sense, it is good to think the better was intended; so shall we still both keep our friends and quietness.

The Story of Forty-nine Children Who Go to School Outdoors All the Year Around and Are Ever So Happy About It Too—Also Some Games.

This nice pair is singing "So very, very early in the morning" at Morningside avenue and One Hundred and Sixteenth street, New York city. Here, winter and summer, Mrs. Calvert has her outdoor kindergarten for children all the way from two years old to eight. There are three classes in all—a morning and an afternoon class outdoors and another that does primary work indoors all the morning and then goes out in the park afternoons. All the children wear teddy bear suits—blue, brown and red. When Jack Frost pinches their toes they skip and play ring games to keep warm. "Once there was a princess" and "Red rose growing in a garden" are what they love best of all. When it snows they have the greatest fun rolling in it and making snow men. All the pleasant days they braid mats and sew cards and do arithmetic examples on the park pavements with pretty colored crayons. The very kind park commissioner lets them have four benches for a "house," and they learn all about the trees and shrubs from tiny sprouts in the spring, through flowers all the summer time to seed babies in the fall. On days when it mists and rains all the children wear waterproof caps and capes. But when it pours Mrs. Calvert takes them home with her and buries sea shells and marbles in her sandpile for the children to dig up with little blue and green shovels. It's just like going to a party outdoors every day, isn't it?

The Scoutmaster.

Every troop of scouts has a leader, a man who is known as scoutmaster He receives a commission annually from the national council of the Boy Scouts of America upon the recommendation of the troop committee This commission certifies as to his fitness and gives him authority to act as scoutmaster in carrying out the boy scout program in accordance with the official handbooks.

He must be at least twenty-one years of age and is chosen because of good moral character and his interest in work with boys. He attends all the meetings and outings of the troop and is responsible for the general program and supervision of the work of the troop.

Some Queer Drums.

Drums have always been used by primitive races to drive away evil spirits, to terrify foes, to make men fight better or to summon friends together. They are of all sizes, sorts and shapes. In China drums are made of baked clay, bowl shaped with a skin stretched across the top. A drum from Central America is cone shaped, over four feet in height and is hollowed out of a solid block of wood. An Ashantee drum is shaped like a bottle—a very large one. A Mandingo drum resembles a tenpin upside down, while a Friendly islands drum, between four and five feet high, is just like a post, with a head of leather not more than six inches across.—Chicago News.

Judge and Jury.

To play this game the players should be seated in two lines facing each other. One of the players should be chosen judge. Each person must remember who is sitting exactly opposite. The players, asking, "Do you like apples?" The player spoken to must remain silent, while the player who is opposite to him or her must reply before the judge can count five. A rule in regard to answers is that the reply must not be less than two words in length and must not contain the words yes, no, black, white or gray.

Fairies fly in their overshoes,
Orchards drip and meadows ooze;
Drip and drizzle and drop.
Will this downpour never stop?

Beetles gather beneath toadstools,
Muskrats play in the forest pools;
Drip and drop and drizzle,
What ways the waters whistle!

Squirrels hide in the hollow tree,

COMMENT BY STATE EDITORS

What a contrast between Elihu Root, the man of decision and Wilson, the epitome of instability. —Cohoes Republican.

The address of former Senator Root before the Republican state convention is the most memorable utterance which has come from a competent source as to the setting of the Wilson administration in respect to our foreign and our domestic relations.—Watertown Standard.

It is the general opinion of Americans that Elihu Root is the wisest and most far-seeing statesman we have in the United States today, and more than ordinary importance attaches to his ringing speech to the unofficial Republican Convention of New York State in the issues upon which the approaching National campaign is to be fought, and it is the business of patriotic voters to consider thoroughly his utterances. — Kingston Freeman.

• • •

The peculiar merit of Senator Root's address last night as temporary chairman of the unofficial state convention was that it was cool, dignified, temperate and so accurate in its presentation of the facts as to be unanswerable. No man in America is less of a demagogue than this distinguished statesman, and while his criticism of the administration policy was cogent and convincing, there was nothing of partisan railing in his remarks.—Rochester Post-Express.

• • •

Mr. Root's speech is a trumpet call to duty; for a revival of the old American spirit always upheld by the Republican party and always maintained. He pledges that the Republican party will be true to its traditions and restore to the nation that prosperity at home and that dignity abroad which has always marked it administrations from Lincoln all down through its splendid history.—Watertown Times.

• • •

Dansville, one of the strongest Democratic villages in Western New York, has just chosen a Republican village president for the first time in many years. This is just a little indication of the tide that is setting toward the Republicans.—Jamestown Post.

FAIR PLAY, SAYS EX-PRESIDENT

New York—Federal legislation insuring just regulation of the railroads was strongly advocated last night by William H. Taft, speaking before the New York Traffic Club, comprising traffic managers of railroads and industries, at its tenth annual banquet in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel. Amid the applause of the thousand or more diners he called the State laws and the rigid inspection of the Interstate Commerce Commission inequitable and unjust.

The legislative evils under which railroads are operating, Mr. Taft said, represented the revolt of a people indignant at injustices heaped on them by the railroads. Flagrant rebate evils, he said, which existed under trade competition, called for regulation, which came and then passed the bounds of reason.

In condemning government ownership of railroads Professor Taft said:

"Nothing could be more destructive to the best interests of the country than government ownership of railroads. The history of such experiments all over the world demonstrates its lackof wisdom. In Germany, only where the railroads are run as the Emperor runs his army—by one man—are they successful in any way.'

RUSSIAN WINGS PURSUE TURKS

London—With the center occupying itself in pursuit of the Turks who evacuted Erzerum the Russian right and left wings are making rapid progress against Trebizond on the one side and Diabekr on the other.

Unofficial reports which reached here last night indicate that the column which came down the Black Sea coast from Balum is about sixty-five miles from Trebizond, while the second column operating against the port has passed Barhure and is heavily engaged in the mountains just to the west of the town.

The entire Lake Van region now is in Russian control. The evacution of Bitlis by the Turks has removed the last serious obstacle between Van and Diarbekr, since Mush was occupied by the Russians four days ago. Diarbekr is one hundred miles west of Bitlis and only fifty miles from the route of the Bagdad railway.

A despatch from Tiflis, Russian Caucasus headquarters, sent to the Boerse Gazette, of Petrograd, says two Turkish army corps, which were on their way to reinforce Erzerum, have turned back on being informed that thef ortress had fallen.

TALKS ON BANKING

SAVINGS BANK CENTENNIAL SERIES

No. 4.—LENDING THE BANK'S MONEY

If the bank confined itself to receiving money offered for deposit and paying it out again on checks, it would render a very great and necessary service to the individual and the community, but it would soon cease to exist, because the life blood of all business (profits) would be lacking. The operation of a bank is expensive, and to hire clerks, pay rent, buy stationery and build vaults, merely to protect money and handle checking accounts, without some source of income, would prove a costly undertaking.

Therefore the bank must seek some steady source of revenue, and finds it in lending the money of its stockholders and depositors to those who can use more than they have, and are willing to pay for the accommodation. And only as it loans its funds, and gets them back with interest can it long operate as a going concern.

The peculiar fact of the matter is that a dollar in the bank will do as much work as from four to five dollars elsewhere. In a technical sense the banker does not loan money, but credit. He does not want your money to loan, but to use as a basis of credit, and one dollar to him is as good as four for business purposes. This may seem an impossible proposition. Let us prove it.

Experience has proven that everybody does not want all their money at the same time. If one hundred people were each to deposit one hundred dollars in a bank, the banker could safely assume that not over one-quarter of them would call for their money at one time. As a matter of fact, less than fifteen per cent. would do so; therefore, if out of every dollar deposited, the banker keeps fifteen cents in money, he can meet every ordinary demand for cash. When an unusual call arises, it is called a "bank run," which merely means that more than the usual number of people are demanding their money at one time.

Working on this theory, the banker does not, out of the hundred dollars you deposit, lend, let us say, ninety; he puts the hundred in his vaults (in his reserve) and discounts the notes of his customers placing the proceeds to their credit, against which they can check, the same as if they had deposited cash. The banker works on the law of averages, and seldom does this law fail him, for as long as he has a certain percentage of his obligations in cash, or quickly available, he is safe. (The amount of reserve money varies, in no case being legally required to be more than 18 per cent. of the deposits.)

If, therefore, the banker with one dollar in money can lend ten in credit when you hold back the ten, you deprive the community of the hundred in credit. The banker is a credit alchemist, making one dollar do the work of many, and you owe it to him, to yourself and to your community to make the credit structure as big and as strong as possible.

The place for every dollar that you do not need for your daily necessities is in the bank, for the bank will not only protect it against fire and thieves, pay it back on demand, but by the alchemistic process known only to banking, turn it into ten credit dollars, which are as effective in the business world as money dollars and cheaper. This is the bank's greatest service to the community and to you.

TO VOTE ON LIQUOR ISSUE.

Three Hundred Illinois Towns to Settle Question at the Polls In April.

Some 300 cities and towns of Illinois will vote on the wet and dry question next April as the result of petitions filed both by the saloon and anti-saloon forces. In about one-third of the localities the wet faction is seeking to regain control of the districts, while in the remainder the drys are trying to drive out the saloons.

In the district surrounding Chicago most of the petitions were filed by the wets in an effort to recover ground lost in the last test, which, coming soon after women were given the ballot, resulted disastrously for the saloon forces. Among the cities are Elgin, Sterling, De Kalb, Rochelle, Batavia, Plainfield, Geneva, Plano, Yorkville, Hinckley and Sycamore.

Apparently the wets have given up hope of regaining Rockford, the largest dry city in the state. No petition was filed there, despite the fact that the city for years has been one of the principal battlegrounds of the wet and dry forces. The wets also ignored a large number of smaller towns which were voted dry at the last election.

In addition to these larger cities the anti-saloon forces filed petitions in nearly 200 towns in the western and central parts of the state.

The drys are counting to a great extent upon the increasing number of women who are going to the polls at every election.

The Spot Light

What can we do when the world is at war?
What can we do but wait?
We have welcomed Teuton and Slav and Celt
In at our friendly gate.

Danebrog, tricolor, union jack,
Eagle and crescent unfurled
Rally their kin to the tap of the drum—
But we are the kin of the world.

What can we do when the world is at war?
Refrain from love or hate,
Stay our hand or give tongue to our grief—
There is nothing to do but wait.

Peace is our portion, bitter with herbs;
Little our talk is worth
When we have no power to be heard by our kin—
And we are kin to the earth.

—New York Evening Sun.

"Goodmen" and "Goodwomen."

A pleasing form of address that was common in the seventeenth century has gone quite out of use, probably because of its restriction to "inferior persons." The "Mr." was then a prefix to which only gentlemen were entitled, and among the Puritan fathers of New England the deprivation of the right to be so addressed was inflicted as a punishment. "Goodman" or "Goodwoman," by contraction "Goody," was the address of those low in the social scale. The term is preserved in some old songs.

PARIS OVERTURES TO U. S. IMPORTERS

A circular letter has just been sent out in Paris to American buyers for the big stores and to leading New York importers by the Chambre Syndicale de la Couture Parisienne, signed by M Aine, the president, and by M. Doeuillet, the former president, inviting them to attend a meeting at the American Chamber of Commerce to form a "Franco-American alliance" to settle the difficulties affecting the dressmaking trade. The letter says that "owing to the importance given to the question of Paris models and to the measures taken by certain dressmaking concerns and by the American press" the chamber considers it advisable to study with the chief representatives of the New York houses what methods shall be followed for the common good.

As the Chambre Syndicale Parisienne includes all members of the Couture Defense Syndicate except Poiret and Worth, it is expected that a satisfactory agreement will be reached and the Couture Defense Syndicate eliminated.

At the recent fashion show in Paris the tonneau, or barrel, skirt was a notable feature. It is quite distinct from the pannier, running in a convex line from the waist to the bottom of the skirt instead of puffing at the hips, as the pannier does. Tailor mades and evening gowns for young women attracted special attention. A striking novelty was serge satin faille walking coats embroidered in metal on the hips or in wide bands around the bottom. The predominating colors were mauve and various shades of violet.

The features of the Beers collection were cire gowns and coats and striking debutante frocks.

Premet and Bernard had larger collections than last year, the latter, as usual, showing elegant tailor made suits. Their tonneau skirts for gowns were less successful owing to the use of small hoops at the sides of the hips to produce the barrel effect, which gave a bunchy appearance instead of a harmonious line. The colors were chiefly somber.

Margaine-Lacroix, little heard of since the introduction of the Directoire skirt, came back with a very successful collection, whose feature was the red or blue Algerian coat copied from the voluminous cloak of the Spahi officers. Utilizable either as a cloak or pelerine, it is certain to be widely copied and worn everywhere. Long pelerines, almost reaching the ground, to cover the entire dress, shown by almost all the houses, form one of the season's most popular notes as the only style of over wear falling gracefully over the new skirts.

Some Styles For Men.

Buttons will be distributed on men's coats this season according to the height of the wearer, it was announced at the opening of the annual convention of the International Custom Cutters' association in Kansas City, Mo. The short man will have a one button sack coat; the medium sized man will have two buttons on his coat; the tall man will get three buttons, or four if he is tall enough. This decree was embodied in the report of the styles committee of the association.

The committee reported that the form fitting coat would still rule as correct, but that it would be longer and bear a narrower lapel and narrower collar than last season. Spring coats will be skeleton lined, unpadded and will run to crescent shaped patch pockets.

Full dress coats will be longer in front, the collar and lapels narrower, and there will be an outer breast pocket. The white silk vest should be "U" shaped, and there should be narrow braid on the trousers.

The coat to the dinner suit will have the outer breast pocket bound in a narrow strip of satin, and the lapels also will be faced with satin. The vest to the dinner suit will be of black silk, close fitting and "V" shaped.

Comforting.

"I like church." "Why?" "Well, it's comforting to see one man keep so many women quiet an hour."

MR. & MRS. LAMAY MARRIED 60 YRS.

Both of Them Born In Serbia 81 and 77 Years Ago Respectively.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lamay, who live on the Flood road, east of the city line, were the celebrants, yesterday, of the 60th anniversary of their marriage which occurred in Serbia in 1856.

Fifty-six relatives including daughter, grand children, great-grandchildren and other relatives by marriage assisted in celebrating the event which does not often come to married people to enjoy.

The Fulton correspondent for a Syracuse newspaper had the following to say, yesterday, concerning the happy affair:

At the wedding anniversary celebration there were present the seven daughters and the husbands of the six married daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Frank LaVeck, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Youngs, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Videon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bennett and Miss Josie Lamay, all of Fulton; Mr. and Mrs. William White, of Oswego, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moody of Syracuse; and 21 grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Lamay and the husbands and wives of the married grandchildren, Mr. and Mrs. Frank LaVeck. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Louis LeVeck, Mr. and Mrs. George LaVeck, William LaVeck, Joseph Youngs, Mr. and Mrs. Youngs, Alex Youngs, Mr. and Mrs. William Young, Miss Elizabeth White, Herbert Moody, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Smith, Arthur Bennett, Miss Mary Bennett, Miss Bernadette Bennett, Fred Bennett, Irvin Bennett, and Miss Ruth Bennett, and the 11 great-grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Lamay, Harold, Marguerite and Helen Allen, children of Mrs. Mary Allen; Loumella, Myrtle, Louella and Floyd LaVeck, children of Mr. and Mrs. Louis LaVeck; Hazel Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George LaVeck; Francis and Harry Holden, sons of Mrs. Libbie Holden, and Shirley Youngs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Youngs. Besides these relatives there were present Mrs. Ollie Champion, Mrs. John Shore and Miss Anna Shore, of Oswego, and Martin Lewis and Thomas Flood, of this city.

It is interesting to note that through one branch of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Lamay there are living ten separate four-generation combinations, with Mr. and Mrs. Lamay and the daughter, Mrs. Frank LaVeck, as the first two members of the combinations; Mrs. LaVeck's daughter, Mrs. Charles Allen, and her three children, Harold, Marguerite and Helen, furnish the completion of three of the four-generation combinations; Louis LaVeck and his children, Loumella, Myrtle, Louella and Floyd, furnish four more completions: George LaVeck and his daughter, Hazel Marie, furnish still another completion, and Mrs. Henry Holden, with her sons, Francis and Harry, furnish the remaining two of the ten four generation groups possible to be made up from this one branc hof the family. One four-generation group is made up from another branch, thus: Mr. and Mrs. Lamay, Mrs. Joseph Yoongs, William Youngs, Shirley Youngs.

WASHINGTON'S REACHING HANDS OPENED DOORS

of adding to his fame. "Nowhere in the schools of art has there ever been found a picture of a face like that of Washington—so benign in expression; so resolute, yet gentle and warm. From Washington's character and conduct the world has imbibed love of liberty whose sparks have been transmitted, kindling fires in such abiding places as France, China and even the steppes of Russia, were some more of the Judge's observations to elicit rounds of applause.

In concluding his speech the eloquent gentleman asked his audience as individuals whether they did not think it worth while to take serious note of the p resent time, incidentally mentioning the anxiety felt in Administration circles, from President Wilson down to the military and naval commanders who are in almost hourly conference upon the country's unpreparedness. In the event that war should result from Germany putting into execution her order to sink armed merchantmen on and after March 1st. He decried the efforts of the pacifists who are blocking the way to protecting our shores from hostile armies and fleets, declaring that those who would have our country unprepared should take their torches in hand and "go to Mt. Vernon, that sacred shrine, and there secure new inspiration." Vigorous applause greeted the speaker's last remarks, as he concluded his speech by asking: "In view of all that goes before and with the cause of liberty, is it not a duty we owe to the memory of the great Washington to now arise above partisanship for the protection of our shores?

A brief musical program followed the Judge's address and a buffet luncheon was served.

ORCHESTRA MAN JOINS MISS ALLEN

Fulton Symphony Orchestra members have reason to feel proud of the distinction conferred upon one of their number by the company surrounding Miss Julia Allen. The fortunate member is Mr. Byron J. Newton, flutist, and he is to perform on his favorite instrument in Oswego and Syracuse where Miss Allen has engagements. A telephone message reached the young man yesterday, calling him to Oswego at once.

Miss Allen appears in concert at the First M. E. church tonight, under the auspices of the Schumann Club, and for the benefit of the Women's Auxilary of the Lee Memorial hospital.

BISHOP FISKE COMES SUNDAY

The Right Reverend Charles Fiske, D. D., will preach at All Saints' church next Sunday morning at the 10:30 o'clock service.

Bishop Fiske was consecrated to the Episcopate in Baltimore last September and began at once his duties as Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of New York.

This will be Bishop Fiske's first visit to Fulton. It has developed that he will not be able to spend the day in Fulton and preach at Evensong as was previously announced, so the confirmation service cannot be held as was expected.

Bishop Fiske is a preacher of exceptional power and ability. During the present week he is preaching a mission in St. Paul's church, Syracuse. The people of All Saints' church feel highly privileged in having Bishop Fiske as their guest next Sunday.

Services will begin promptly at 1:30 p. m. and the public generally is cordially invited.

TO GET FUEL OUT OF NATURAL GAS

In Sandy Creek where District Attorney Colony and Peter G. Hydorn own most of then atural gas wells, strenuous efforts are being made to extract gasoline from natural gas. In a recent report of the operations it was admitted that the experiment had not reached a commercial stage, but enough was said to lead to the conclusion that there i sa serious side to the proposition. And if this be true perhaps we are upon the verge of cheaper gasoline. No definite predictions, however, should be made in this respect.

The Sandy Creekers appear to be basing their hopes upon what has been done in Pennsylvania and describe the accomplishments there. They say

"Out in Pennsylvania a company has erected a plant for the extraction o fthe gasoline from natural gas and has contracted for theg as from about 400 wells. The wells are small, the total production being less than a million cubic feet a day, but they have been producing for a long time and as the gas comes from sand 100 feet in thickness their life is said to be good for an indefinite time.

"Theg asoline company puts the gas through its compressors and then sells it to a large glass factory nearby, the taking out of the gasoline not injuring the gas in any way for fuel. The gas is put under 300 pounds pressure to the square inch, which forces out the gasoline, which is carried into tanks and blended with naptha, renderin gthe gasoline safe to ship, as without this blending it would be as dangerous as nitro-glycerine owing to its high gravity.

"The shipments of gasoline from the plant are running about 120 000 gallons a month and ten tank cars are required to caref or the production. The same company also has put in a high-pressure compressor at the plant, which will be used in compressing then atural gas into steel flasks under 800 pounds pressure. It is planned to sell the compressed gas in the same manner as Blau gas or Pintsch gas is now sold."

DOPESTERS PIN FAITH ON LOCALS

The entire Maccabee squad will scrimmage tonight in preparation for tomorrow's game with the Y. M. H. A. Stars of Syracuse.

Confidence is expressed by followers of the lodge team that the Syracusans will be defeated. Hope for a victory is based on the fact that the team used in the second half of the Normal game outplayed the visitors, scoring more points and the game would have gone to the locals but for the reason that they ha dto finish the last few minutes of the half with only four men.

Because of the inability of Samuels to come here tomorrow night, the visitors will have to reorganize their team. Silverstein will be substituted for Samuels. Silverstein is rated as the best center in Central New York. He is a member of the Y. M. H. A. senior team. He is not a sensational player like Landers, of the Oswego Normals, but his playing is consistent. Because of his height he has no difficulty in obtaining the jump on his opponent.

Dancing will be enjoyed after the game for which no extra charge will be made. Reynold's Orchestra has been engaged to furnish music.

The New Philanthrophy Presented to Borrowed Timers By Rector Peters

The young men who choose to be called Borrowed Timers were rescued from taking their regular Monday afternoon naps by the Rev. M. J. Peters, rector of All Saints' church. His subject was topical and therefore, all the more interesting, the choice being "Constructive Philanthropy." Mr. Peters in part said:

We are living in a philanthropic age. Today men are thinking more of the welfare of others in every department of life than ever before in history. A great deal of mental energy, time, effort and money are being invested in the welfare of others. It is a day of organized philanthropy when general social uplift is reduced to a science.

It may be interesting to begin this talk with a brief sketch of the history of philanthropy, viewing the subpect in its larger aspect, "Love of Man," and following it through some of the phases of its development.

We find the germs from which the subject has evolved and developed in the Decalogue, the law given to Moses on Mt. Sinai. Six out of the Ten Commands which are the vasis of some of the best of our modern laws, are concerned with duties to others. These six social commands, however, are negatively stated. They were designed to protect others from wrong and injustice, rather than for the purpose of promoting a positive system of philanthropy. But the teachings of Moses was not entirely restrictive and negative. The Jew was taught to love the Lord his God, and his neighbor as himself, but the lesson was never during the national history of the Jews thoroughly learned. He began to narrow his interpretation of the word, "neighbor" to imply his friends among his countrymen. At the time of our Lord's first advent the Rabbis were teaching the people to love their friends and hate their enemies. The Jewish conception of duty to others was negative and restrictive. He saw as his philanthropic ideal the duty of not injuring his neighbor. but failed to see rightly the corresponding positive duty of seeking to benefit him.

Early Advancement

But let us observe some of the stages in the development of philanthropy in pagan philosophy.

Plato recognized a responsibility for others in his ethical system, but only in a very primitive and unimpassioned way. He teaches friendship as an element of philosophic life, and dwells particularly upon personal affection between master and disciple, but there is [illegible]tion of the duty of benevolence.

Aristotle advances somewhat further than Plato. He recognizes the moral value of friendship, but teaches that in its highest form it can only be realized by fellowship of thew ise and good. Anything like positive beneficance is discernable only under the notion of liberality.

Cicero goes a little further still, and emphasizes positive service to other men as a social duty.

Both the Jewish and Pagan systems of ethics are wanting in the truest and realist conception of Philanthropy. The Jew's duty, at least as they commonly interpreted it was a negative one. The pagan philosophers' conceptions were philosophical and utilitarian rather than philanthropic. The real and constructive idea of philanthropy had its birth in Christianity. The ideal rises to its highest point in the teachings of Jesus Christ. With Him our relationship with others is transported from the realm of law to the realm of the heart. No longer are our duties to our fellow men graven in negative terms upon tables of stone; they are seen as positive and constructive duties written in human hearts. The foundation of our duties to others rests upon the Christian doctrine of the brotherhood of man. We are compelled to love our brother because we are the children of our common Father who loves us.

It is my purpose to try to follow the development of the idea of philanthropy under the influence of the Christian religion in our Christian civilization.

One of its fruits is seen in the history of education. The positive principle of the Christian religion insists that all that is good must grow. Necessarily, therefore, the mind, one of the principle medium by which we aree to know God must grow. Christianity recognizing that the human mind is so constructed that it cannot remain empty, proceeded to store it with that which is real and genune. The evil in it must be crowded out with that which is true. It thus created an atmosphere in which education naturally thrived and grew.

We can trace the progress of education through the various stages of the development of Christianity. During the early days of monastaries were the schools, and the Christian monks the teachers. The Christian church fostered learning through the years when the masses were unlettered. From the monastery learning expanded into the parochial school, and many more were able to reap its benefits.

Nation's Greatest Asset

In our own time the state has become responsible for education and learning has become general, and at least the beginning of an education is no longer optional. but compulsory. Those who frame our laws know that ignorance is a curse, and that the greatest asset to a nation is an educated populace.

Our idea of philanthropy today compels us to provide not only for the strong, but for the weak as well We are providing special schools for those whose mental capacity is limited. Not many years ago insane asylums were merely places to harbor unfortunates for their own protection and for the sake of public safety. Today these institutions are schools and experimental stations where philanthropists are studying out the problems of developing weak minds and fitting them for service to the world. Christian constructive philanthropy has created the atmosphere in which education in its best and richest sense is spreading and growing.

Let us watch the development of philanthropy in respect to the body. See how it has influenced the science of public health.

In the days when Greece flourished and the Spartans killed their deformed children at birth, for the sake of mercy as well as for public welfare. Today we are making new creatures of thousands of such unfortunates. It is interesting to observe what a tremendous influence our philanthropy of today has had upon the development of medicine and surgery. A doctor's chief business at one time was to relieve pain and cure individual cases of sickness. Today the medical science is much concerned with prophylactic treatment. The physician is striving to destroy disease by building up health. He is working on positive constructive principles. He is promoting principles of hygiene and sanitation, thus creating a favorable environmenet for health The modern physician has impressed his mind upon legislation, and laws protecting laborers and children from the avarice of those who would profit at the cost of human life

Our philanthropy extends even to the unborn In some places eugenic marriage laws are being enacted to protect future generations from pain and wretchedness We are beginning to realize that it is the right of children to be untrammelled with obstacles and handicaps over which he has no control.

Moral Help Lacking

But here lies a danger We are pat to turn all our interest in humanity over into the hands of organized boards, and feel that we have done our full duty We will gladly pay our money, but will leave the thinking and sympathizing to be done by the paid commissioner. Our organized professional methods of administering charity are useful and necessary, but they need more than our pecuniary contributions They need our interest and sympathy. Beware of the danger of feeling that your only duty to society is to furnish and maintain philanthropic machinery. As necessary as this machinery is, it is helpless to build God's creatures up in His likeness unless its wheels are lubricated with the milk of human kindness Our Lord, when here in the flesh was the ideal practical philanthropist. He ministered to all classes of people, and always in such a way as to make them better men and women in every respect. While he healed bodies He also healed souls. He never regarded suffering human creatures as mere social problems but as souls made in God's image, distorted and tarnished indeed by human weakness and sin, yet capable of being redemmed and restored. The greatest gift that He ever gave to suffering men, and the most effective was human sympathy Suffering men need not only our money, food clothes, etc What they need most of all is a touch of real human sympathy. They want to feel the kinship with them ore favored part of humanity.

The wonders that have been and are being wrought by modern Christian philanthropists are being accomplished by constructive methods. Christian philanthropists are striving to make this world's wildernesses of woe to blossom with joy and happiness. No longer are we contented with negative methods. We are striving to crowd out the tares and weeds by the positive provess of improving the soil and planting good wheat. We are not only striving to heal the sores on our civilization, but we are striving to find out and cure the very causes that produce them.

The best of the world's systems of philosophy could never produce the revolutions in philanthropic thought that we have today. Constructive philanthropy was born and nourished in the atmosphere of Christianity. Our philanthropy today is one of the fruits of the Gospel of Christ. We the serving mankind better than ever before, because we see them as our brethren in Christ, and children of our common Father. We are working in the Name and by the power of One who identifies His suffering people with Himself. Our modern philanthropy, is so intensely human because it is Devine. Our duties to God and our neighbor are inseparable because we are all one family. We strive to serve others patiently, gladly, and wisely, because we know that in serving them we are alsi serving Him who said, "Inasmuch as we have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece.
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

J. W. Alexander, Sponsor of Ship Purchase Bill.

Representative Joshua W. Alexander of Missouri, chairman of the house committee on merchant marine and fisheries, who introduced the administration's new ship purchase bill, will lead the fight for the measure on the floor of the house.

Government operation of steamship lines is authorized under the modified bill, but primarily the measure is intended to authorize the construction or purchase of merchant vessels suitable also for naval auxiliaries, "with a view to chartering, leasing or selling such vessels" to corporations, firms or individuals desiring to use them in the commerce of the United States.

A native of Ohio, Congressman Alexander was educated in the public schools of Cincinnati and Christian university, Canton, Mo. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1875 at Gallatin, Mo., where he has since resided. He has always been a Democrat and active in the politics of the state. In 1882 he was elected to the general assembly of Missouri, serving three terms, the last one as speaker of the house. He was twice chosen mayor of Gallatin and for six years served as judge of the Seventh judicial district of Missouri. He first went to Washington as a member of the Sixtieth congress and has since been regularly returned. Congressman Alexander is in his sixty-fourth year.

Noted Russian Statesman.

Sergius Sazonoff, Russian minister of foreign affairs, who recently received a deputation of journalists in Petrograd, gave an interview on the war situation in general. He expressed satisfaction with the relations existing between Russia and Roumania and said that the whole Balkan situation would find its solution only after the war had ended. Speaking of Sweden, M. Sazonoff said, "It is possible that Sweden may feel the need of taking measures for the defense of her frontiers, but we can declare categorically that she will not have to defend them against Russia and that this side of her frontiers is perfectly secure."

Sergius Sazonoff has long been prominent in Russian foreign affairs. He was secretary of the embassy at London for twelve years, frequently serving as charge d'affaires and later was secretary of the embassy at Rome and then envoy to the Vatican.

For the past five years M. Sazonoff has held the post of Russian minister of foreign affairs. He is a brother-in-law of Russia's former prime minister, Stolypin, who came to his end by assassination. Sazonoff is said not to be a man of the Stolypin type, but his political creed is much the same. A few months ago, about the time Bulgaria joined forces with the German allies, it was reported that M. Sazonoff would resign his portfolio, but that event did not occur.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Don't Cough.

"Don't cough" has become as much a health slogan as "Don't spit." Like the spitting habit, the coughing habit to a great extent is unnecessary and to no purpose. The dry, hacking cough especially is unnecessary, and when persisted in as a matter of habit it becomes detrimental in its influence on the lungs and larynx. Of course, there are times when coughing is necessary and helpful, as in the case of consumptives, to rid the respiratory tract of accumulated noxious material. But there is a right way to cough. Never cough without pressing a folded handkerchief or cloth firmly over the mouth, meanwhile inhaling deeply through the nose. This avoids infecting the air about you with the spray; it muffles the noise and relieves the throat of the irritation caused by the air inhaled through the mouth.

ESSAY ON SUNRISE.

Some Things About Which, Perhaps, You Knew Nothing.

Sunrise is what people are always sentenced to be shot at.

In some cases this is the first time the victim has ever either seen the sun rise or been shot at.

If he has been half shot the night before he doesn't see the sun rise.

Being shot at sunrise isn't such an awful fate for some folks.

Many people would just as lief be shot as to get up in time to see the sun rise.

Those who have seen the sun rise speak very highly of it.

But we do not let them fool us.

Associating with the sunrise is poetically presumed to make men better.

But look at the milkman!

Getting up with the sun is a much overestimated stunt.

To begin with, the sun is neither benefited nor impressed with our efforts.

It doesn't help him get up to have us rise at the same time, and he goes right off and leaves us, anyway.

For our own part, we think it is excruciatingly bad taste to stand and rubber while anybody gets up.

The orb of the day has little enough chance for privacy, as it is, with everybody gawping while he goes to bed.

What about the golden rule business?

Wisconsin.

Wisconsin has from time to time been an annex of various states. After Ohio was admitted to the union, Wisconsin from 1805 to 1809 formed a part of Indiana territory. From 1809 to 1818 Wisconsin was embraced in the territory of Illinois. When Illinois became a state all the country north of it, including Wisconsin, was joined to Michigan. After more than forty years of shifting, Wisconsin was admitted into the Union with her present boundaries in 1848.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE FIRST VIOLIN

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Fraulein Bertha Hauck left Germany just before the breaking out of the pan-European war to come to America. She was to be followed by a lover, Gustav Schultz, a young musician. They were both of the more refined class of Germans, but not noble. Their finances were cramped, and it was impossible for them to marry and live among the people with whom they had been used to associate. In America they could earn a living as they would not like to earn it where they were known.

Bertha had enough money saved to enable her to cross the ocean, and it was decided that she should come over in advance of her lover, who was serving his time of military service, which would not expire for several months. Bertha was to look into the new country and, if possible, make an engagement for him with an orchestra. In this way they might be self supporting at once on Gustav's arrival.

Bertha arrived in New York, found friends who had come over years before and as soon as she had settled herself went out to look for an engagement for Gustav. She met the leader of an orchestra, who promised her that as soon as her lover arrived he would give him a trial. All was arranged, and the girl was expecting her lover to sail for New York when news came that Germany had declared war upon Russia, and the rush of German troops into Belgium commenced.

From that day forward the fraulein heard nothing of her lover. She knew that, since war had been declared, he would not be permitted to come away even if he had chosen to come. Then came news of the fighting in Belgium, followed by more than a year of warfare. Bertha heard nothing from Gustav nor from any of her relatives. She had no great expectation of hearing from her lover, but thought she should hear from her mother and sisters. That she did not was probably because the censorship had caused the destruction of letters that might have been mailed to her.

At last, after waiting a year, a letter came stating that Gustav had been reported among the missing several months before, and since nothing later had been heard from him he was undoubtedly dead.

Bertha mourned for him as lost. True, if he were dead his identification badge should have been found. But if a man is buried under tons of earth caused by explosion or blown into numerous fragments what good is an identification badge? Nevertheless the poor girl had a ray of hope that Gustav lived and that they would one day be reunited.

Bertha was very handy with her brush and had the faculty of designing cards and other things needed at social functions. In this way she made quite a snug sum of money and, being frugal, had held on to nearly all of it. She met a countryman of hers, an artist much older than herself, who paid her a great deal of attention and ended by proposing marriage. But Bertha's heart was with her lover, be he alive or dead, and she would not listen to any other man.

Bertha's friends endeavored to cheer her by trying to induce her to go about with them to amusements. She yielded so far as music and pictures were concerned, but would not go anywhere else. Finally by holding up to her the fact that many scenes of moving picture plays were beautiful they excited some interest in them. When they told her that pictures of scenes in the great European war were given she was only too ready to see them.

She had been a number of times to see pictures embodying military service when one night the marching to the French rear of a number of German prisoners was given. What was her astonishment to see, pale and haggard, a bandage on his forehead, walking on a crutch while he held up one foot, Gustav Schultz. She at once became hysterical and was taken out of the building.

When she became sufficiently calm to tell what had moved her, inquiries were made in her behalf as to the time the picture which included her lover had been taken. An approximate date was given and was found to be nearly coincident with that at which Gustav was reported missing.

Thinking it possible that her lover was alive and in a French hospital, Bertha determined to go and seek him. She crossed the ocean to England and from there went to Paris. At Paris she learned at what camp the prisoners taken in the fight after which Gustav was reported missing were interned, and there she went. Upon examining the rolls she found her lover's name as an inmate of a hospital.

One morning while Sergeant Schultz was lying on his cot reading a newspaper, an autumn sun shining at a near window, he heard a cry, and, looking up, there was Bertha staggering toward him with open arms. In another moment she had clasped him and he her in an embrace.

Schultz was expecting that if he was ever returned to Germany he would be discharged from the service, for his foot had been so shattered that he would never be able to walk upon it again except with difficulty. He had exchanged a good foot for the iron cross, which he considered a fair exchange. Bertha's story excited a good deal of interest and sympathy among the French officers, who finally obtained permission for Gustav to embark for America.

He is now in New York, first violinist in an orchestra.

REAL PORTPAITURE.

A Beautiful Little Frock For the Schoolgirl's Afternoon.

A PROUD COSTUME.

This little gown, so simple and graceful in its outlines, is cut in a Russian blouse effect of bottle green velvet, with dropped shoulder seams. The edges are piped with a narrow banding of the plaid taffeta which makes the skirt, a handsome plaid of navy blue and bottle green. A crush girdle and sailor collar of the plaid are the only trimming, except the vestee of white lawn fastened with tiny crochet buttons.

Meteors.

Swift meteors become visible at an average height of eighty-four miles and disappear at fifty-six miles, while the very slow meteors come in sight at about sixty-five miles and fade away at thirty-eight miles. Of the very slow meteors those that become visible at the greatest heights come twenty miles nearer the earth than those of very low radiant.

revers and a side saddle skirt over Russian leather tan boots. A golden brown vest of glazed leather shows just below the cutaway, and a brown derby, with heavy gloves and a rattan crop, completes the costume.

Plymouth Sauce.

Work one-fourth cupful of butter until creamy and add one-half cupful of brown sugar gradually while beating constantly; then add two tablespoonfuls of vanilla, two eggs well beaten and one-half cupful of milk. Cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Pour mixture gradually while beating constantly on whites of two eggs beaten until stiff.

The Woman of Today

The wise ones who look at the age and would diagnose its ills call one symptom a "sense of restlessness." Women are restless, yes—but more than that it's a restless age. Everybody is trying to do something, to get somewhere, to change over from the old order to the new, but just what the new is they cannot tell you.

And we would hold no argument for stagnation or for that listlessness which lets well enough alone and leans back comfortably on the past and is content with what is.

But it is possible that in this very quest for the next thing, or the new thing, we are but providing for ourselves ingeniously enough a cloak to cover our excuses for not doing the thing that's here today.

We are all very eager and very restless and so sure that the big thing is just ahead or somewhere else. We could do this all so well if we were just in a bigger city or at a bigger job, sadly forgetting that the job of today is, after all, the thing we have been given to work with.

"Will you seek afar off?" writes Walt Whitman in a "Song of Occupations." "You surely come back at last."

In things best known to you finding the best, or as good as the best,
In folks nearest to you finding the sweetest, strongest, lovingest,
Happiness, knowledge, not in another place, but this place, not for another hour, but this hour

Such was the strong philosophy of Whitman, wholesome medicine for a restless age which wants always the thing that is just beyond the prosy reality of today.

Feverishly we mark time, waiting for a chance to live, unmindful of the fact that in the very act of marking time we are doing the living. Sooner or later we will then come back, "finding the best in folks nearest; * * * not in another place, but this place; not in another hour, but this hour."

No mystery touches the life of a tomorrow that may not be yours today; no magic makes the big metropolis hold for you the thing that is not really in you to work out where you dwell now.

Slot Machines and Fraud.

The income from the penny in the slot machines in the subways of New York is given in the trade as 600,000 pennies a day, or $6,000. The companies have various ingenious methods to counteract fraud, but none of these is infallible. If disks of iron go into the slot they are deflected into a discard channel by a magnet. Slugs cannot pass muster unless they are the exact weight and size of the coin for which the machine was intended. Any disk with a hole at or near its center is nipped by a hook and tossed aside, and no gum or caramels emerge.—New York Times.

Symphonic Din.

It is said that a din will be produced in a new Richard Strauss symphony by the following instruments: Eight horns, four trumpets, four trombones, two bass tubas, two harps, an organ and cymbals, triangles, tomtom and a shepherd's bell; also eighteen first violins, sixteen second violins, twelve violas, ten violoncellos, eight double basses, two large flutes, oboes and clarinets.

Prison Reform.

That prison reform, now agitated in America, is an old measure is shown by a report from Japan that the Japanese tried out the idea over two centuries ago. Self government among the prisoners of Tokyo prisons was established in the seventeenth century. It worked out satisfactorily, but was abandoned for some reason not known. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cattle In Paraguay.

Although various estimates place the number of cattle in Paraguay all the way from one to four million head, the cattle industry, with untold possibilities, is scarcely out of the stage when the animals are slaughtered for their hides alone. While all the world is clamoring for meat, cattle in Paraguay sell for but little more than what their skins will bring.

Tale of a Turtle.

In 1860 a young turtle was caught under a mill in Calais, Me., by some workmen, who cut the date on its shell. In 1899 the same turtle was caught again under the same mill, and last year it was once more captured by some fishermen off the coast of Grand Manan. During the fifty-five years since 1860 it has grown only six inches.

Mme. Cheruit Designed This Wrap

GOLDEN brown velvet, fox fur and gold braid along seams are the materials from which this charming opera wrap was fashioned. The way the gold braid has been used under the arm suggests Roman style of old, and the Portia sleeves are graceful. The garment is lined with brocaded white and creamy satin and gives sufficient warmth without cumbersomeness.

Some of the new hats, with their soft velvet crowns, have a distinct reminiscence of the beefeater and the tam. ANNA MAY.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

For the Debutante.

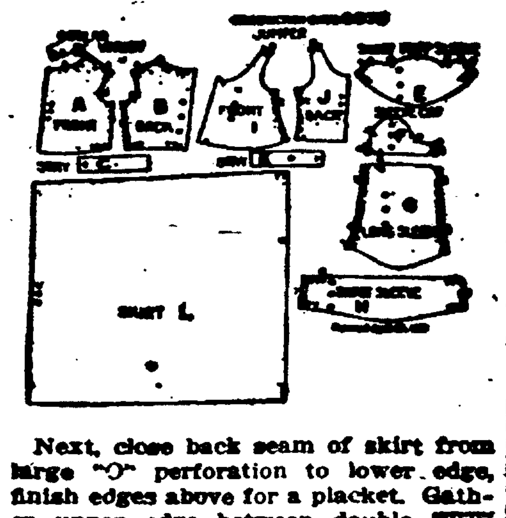
Topped with a smart little jumper of self-silk, this debutante's frock in rose pink chiffon taffeta is unusually pretty. It is trimmed with embroidery.

This charming costume is fashioned of rose pink chiffon taffeta and has a removable jumper extending below the waist-line and gathered to form a narrow peplum. Ruffles of self-material and embroidery trim the front, which requires 5½ yards 36-inch material.

The construction is a little more difficult process than is usually encountered by the home dressmaker, so that it is necessary to follow the construction guide carefully. Beginning with the waist, first close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Hem the back and gather upper and lower edges, leaving about 2 inches at the upper edge for a heading. Adjust stay to position and bring back edge to center-back.

Close seams of sleeves and sleeve cap as notched. Gather upper and lower edges between double "TT" perforations; draw gathers at lower edge to the required size and stitch tape underneath. Sew to lower edge of sleeve cap, notches and seams even, drawing gathers to fit. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing any fulness.



Next, close back seam of skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above for a placket. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Turn under lower edge on small "o" perforations for a hem. Adjust to position, stitching upper edge of skirt along the upper row of gathers in waist, center-fronts and center-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam.

Close under-arm and shoulder seams of jumper as notched. Hem the front at notches. Gather on crossline of small "o" perforations and 2 inches above. Adjust stay having large "O" perforation under gathers, center-backs and front edges even, large "O" perforation at under-arm seam. Arrange on waist, center-backs even and fasten the front edge with hooks and eyes. For belt, use ribbon or a straight strip of material.

The edges of the neck and armhole may be piped with narrow satin cord if desired.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6575. Sizes 16, 18 and 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

Embroidery No. 13193. Transfer in yellow, including 41 motifs, 10 cents.

FOR WINTER DINNERS.

ROAST SPARERIB.—Trim rough ends neatly, crack the ribs across the middle, rub with salt and sprinkle with pepper, fold over and stuff with the following: Beat the yolk of an egg thoroughly and mix with it a tablespoonful of hot vinegar, one-half a saltspoonful of powdered thyme, as much finely minced parsley as will make it quite thick. Boil a large Spanish onion in three or four waters until it is tender, press it well, mince it finely; mix with it the vinegar and add two ounces of boiled pickled pork cut up in very small pieces, a little pepper and salt; sew up tightly, place in a dripping pan with a pint of water, baste frequently, turning over once so as to bake both sides equally until a rich brown.

Hotpot.—Materials: Two pounds of lamb suitable for stewing, two pounds of potatoes, four onions, salt, pepper and a little flour, water or stock. Directions: Cut the meat into pieces convenient for serving. Peel the potatoes and cut them into small, thick pieces. Slice the onions thin. Mix the salt, pepper and flour and roll each piece of meat in the mixture. Put a layer of potatoes in a deep dish or bowl (a wide mouth bean pot is a satisfactory dish), then a layer of meat, next sliced onion, repeating the process till the dish is filled. Have potatoes for the last layer and fill the dish with water or stock. Bake three hours in a moderate oven, adding more water if necessary. Serve in the dish in which it is cooked.

Creamed Chicken.—Take the white meat of a boiled chicken and cut it into thick slices or disks and put into a saucepan. Put the saucepan on the stove, moisten with hot cream (just enough to cover the chicken), add one whole sweet red pepper cut into disks, a pinch of salt and pepper and let simmer gently for about fifteen minutes. Remove the saucepan to the side of the stove, beat the yolk of an egg and mix with the cream, but do not allow it to come to a boil. Add a piece of sweet butter the size of a walnut and serve immediately, very hot, over some fresh made toast.

Pork Stew.—Cut up and wash one pound of pork from neck or fresh spareribs, put in kettle with enough water to cover. Cut up in quarters one turnip (or yellow turnip enough to equal a large potato), one small onion (fine) and one small carrot. Put in pot with salt to taste and let cook about one and one-half hours until vegetables are done and pork nearly done, then cut up two potatoes and cook whole until done. Thicken if desired.

Baked Tenderloin of Pork.—Take two strips of tenderloin of pork and wipe clean with a damp cloth. Make a stuffing of stale breadcrumbs highly flavored with onion, sage, pepper, salt and melted butter, with milk or melted butter to moisten. Place stuffing between two tenderloins, tie all together and bake in a moderate oven until done. Baste often with melted butter.

DID ROOSTER WALK 88 MILES?

Lost In New York, He Turns Up In Port Jervis With Swollen Feet.

Edward and Albert Monroe, who have a large poultry farm near Port Jervis, N. Y., recently exhibited some Plymouth Rock fowl at the poultry show in Madison Square Garden, New York city, where one of the roosters won first prize.

When the birds were crated and ready to be expressed back to Port Jervis the prize rooster, valued at $250, escaped and for four weeks was lost. The other morning when the Monroe brothers went out to feed their feathered stock they were amazed to find the missing prize winner in the yard. His feet were swollen and calloused, and he was weak from exposure and lack of food. But he crowed lustily.

Port Jervis is eighty-eight miles from New York.

First Iron Skates.

Skating does not appear always to have been as common an accomplishment as it is nowadays. Iron skates seem to have been introduced by the Dutch, but the art itself was known in London at an early period. The monk, Fitzstephen, who was secretary to Archbishop Becket, describes the bone skates used by Londoners in the twelfth century. But Pepys, writing in 1662, has a reference. "Over the parke," he says, "where I first in my life, it being a great frost, did see people sliding with their skeates, which is a very pretty art." From which it is reasonable to infer that skating was not as general then as later or Mr. Pepys would not have missed it.

SOLVAY TEAM BOWLED LOCALS

McCollum, Star Local Player, Rolled 229 Pins, Also Took Honors for High Totals---Team 2 Totalled 2764 Pins

The biggest crowd which has ever attended a bowling match in this city was present last night to see the Fulton bowlers make a clean sweep of all the matches with the Solvay bowlers. Incidentally the visitors left a considerable quantity of money here, there being stakes waged on practically every alley.

It was expected that the visitors would arrive here twenty-five strong in the early part of the afternoon, but Manager Powell was advised at noon that about fifteen men would come here in the early part of the evening.

The group which appeared bowl in the Solvay league, but with one or two exceptions they were not as strong as the average bowler of the Fulton teams. McCollum made the high run of the evening in one set, rolling 229 pins. He also took honors for high total, thereby proving to be the star individual performer.

Two five men and two men matches were bowled, and in each there was sufficient excitement to maintain the interest of the spectators. The failure of one of the local bowlers to make good in the seconnd game in one of the five men matches permitted the visitors to win the set, but the entire Fulton team bowled strong in the next set and took the series by a wide margin.

Feeley, Paige, Van Buren, Hill and McCollum represented Fulton on team No. 2, while Stauring, Rear, Powell, Painter and Cole were the other quintet, No. 1. In the two men matches Fulton was represented by Feeley and McCollum, whow on two out of three games, and Stauring and Rear, who won three ctraight. Team No. 2 proved to be the highest scorers of the evening rolling a total of 2764 pins, while Team No. 1 obtained a total of 2687.

The results of the five men matches were as follows:

NINE DIE, SEVENTY-FIVE HURT IN CRASH BETWEEN FREIGHT AND EXPRESS

Bridgeport, Conn.—Nine persons were killed and more than seventy-five injured in the disastrous wreck on the N. Y., N. H. & Hartford Railroad ,yesterday, two miles east of Milford.

Speeding west at the rate of fifty miles an hour, local train, No. 5, attempting to make up lost time and loaded with Washington's Birthday excursionists, crashed into the rear of the Connecticut River Special, a fast express train from Springfield to New York city.

The impact caused the two westbound trains to rise from the rails, hover an instant in the air and then fall against a fast freight train, also going west, on the next track. There was a crash of grind ing steel, the scream of escaping steam, a whistle blast, and the three trains were scattered in different directions, hurling their human freight on either side of a fifty foot embankment.

One of the cars n the express train bounded completely over a steel gondola car in the freight train and rolled down the south side of the embankment, with its full complement of passengers. The engine on the local, after shunting the rear car of the express against a steel pole on the right side of the embankment, was separated in a mysterious manner, the boiler cab and upper structure crashing against a freight car and rolling with it over the three east bound tracks and down the steep side of the roadbed, while the wheels remained on the track.

An official of the railroad company estimates that 200 persons were injured in the wreck. He said 125 claims already had been filed against the company and that it probably would cost the railroad $500,000 when all the damage was settled.

Despite the fact that the block signals were set against the coming of the local train, G. L. Tourtellote, flagman of the express, with a red flag and other signalling apparatus, was ordered to go back to the curve and halt the local.

As Tourtellote started back the freight train, came thundering along on the westbound track, next to that on which the express train stood.

The flagman ran perhaps fifty yards back, when to his terror he saw the local train coming at full speed. Men of the express train crew say that Tourtellote began to wave his red flag violently, continuing to run toward the approaching local. When within a few feet of its engine he stepped aside, unfortunately placing himself between thel ocal and the long freight train.

The suction from the local dragged the flagman under its wheels and he was ground to death. The fragments of the huge locomotive which pulled the local indicate that the engine driver reversed his engine just before the crash but the momentum of his train was too great.

AGED MAN STRUCK BY CAR AND KILLED

An elderly man, name unknown, was killed this afternoon by an Empire United Railways car near Minetto, the body being badly mutilated and a number of bones broken.

He was brought to this city at 3:45, to then ndertaking rooms of E. S. Brown. It is said he was walking north on the northbound track and suddenly crosse dover into the path of a southbound car which struck him.

THE QUIRK

"Wild Oats," a George Kleine photodrama, released through Kleine-Edison Feature Service, is a powerful presentation of a theme interesting to the general American family, especially in these days of so-called "fast living" indulged in by young men and which so often proves disastrous. The picture, in five reels, will be shown at the Quirk theater, today.

Malcolm Duncan featured in "Wild Oats" achieved decided success in the speaking drama as Harrison Grey Fiske's leading man. In "Wild Oats" he is especially effective, demonstrating unusual dramatic strength, fine technique and a perfect adaptability for screen work. Three licensed reels will also be shown. Big 8-reel show.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, we have succeeded in reopening the Milk Station. Mr. Peach of Pulaski is to manage and conduct the plant. The Chamber has been working on this for some time and the deal was only closed this morning. This is only one of the many accomplishments of the Chamber of Commerce up to date. Watch this space for others which will follow.

A Farmer went to town to spend
Some of his hard earned dough,
He was feeling good because,
His toil would profit show,
And in a merry jest, and just
To show his printing skill,
He printed his initials on a brand new dollar bill.

He spent that dollar that same day,
Down in the village store,
He thought 'twas gone forever then
And he'd see it no more
But long before the year rolled by
One day he went to fill
A neighbor's order, and received
That same one dollar bill.

Once more he spent that dollar bill
In his own neighborhood,
Where it would do himself annd friend
The most amount of good.
Four times in two years it came back,
As some bad pennies will,
And each time he'd go out and spend
[illegible]

Had he been wise that dollar might
Be in his town today,
But just two years ago
He sent it far away.
The people who received it then
I know have got it still,
For 'twas to a mail order house
He sent his dollar bill.

No more will that marked dollar
Come into the farmer's hands,
And nevermore will help to pay
The taxes on his lands.
He put it where it never can
Its work of life fulfill;
He brought about a living death
Of that one dollar bill.

The things worth remembering are that your neighbors are good people. That good neighbors are the result of good, good neighbors. That no community can rise higher than the average level of all its people.

That discussion, publicity, and education will raise the average level of any community.

That the strongest community in the state is the best organized one.

That the farmer's club represents a powerful unit for organizing rural communities for social and economic service.

No country can become richer than its lands. From the soil comes our food and clothing, all other human needs are subordinate to these. Food is the chief material concern of life; it's production the most important occupation. In the hard school of experience we are slowly learning the lesson of real business economy—the greatest lesson of all time—that of feeding ourselves. Let us learn that lesson well.

A cordial invitation is extended to the general public.

GERMANY REFUSES TO JOIN LUSITANIA AND ARMED LINE ISSUES

Washington—President Wilson and Congress, facing a genuine crisis with Germany, were at loggerheads last night on the question of policy.

The situation is unprecedented. Never before in the history of the United States have the Executive head of the nation and Congress been so far apart on a matter of such gravity.

The President has informed leaders in Congress that he is determined to force "an immediate show-down" with the Teutonic allies. He has warned them that he will not tolerate any interference from any source whatever.

Congress is equally determined that Americans shall be warned not to travel on armed merchantmen. The position is totally in defiance of the President's expressed wishes.

Administration advisers and the leaders in Congress are in a state of uncertainty and apprehension that operates against the possibility of concerted action.

President Wilson is confronted by two crisis—one international, the other political. Thep official crisis is more imminent, but less important, since in it there is nothing more than the determination of whether the democratic majority in Congress is to be dominated by Teutonic influences, directed by Count von Bernstorff, and this means nothing more than the life of that party. The international crisis involves a breach of diplomatic relations with Germany. This is predicted, but there is nothing to indicate it is yet in the offing.

MAN KILLED IS IDENTIFIED

Joseph McDonald, Struck By Car, Was Inmate of County Home at Mexico.

The body of the elderly man, who was killed yesterday afternoon by an Empire United Railways car near Minetto, was identified several hours after at the undertaking rooms of E. S. Brown in 1st st., as that of Joseph McDonald, 60, an inmate of the County Home at Mexico.

The identification was made possible after C. A. Stone, County superintendent of the poor, had telephoned a description of the man, who had disappeared from the institution immediately after eating breakfast yesterday. Chief of Police Dyer made the identification.

When struck by the trolley car, the man had proceeded about twenty miles, his destination probably being this city, where a son, Anace McDonald, formerly resided. The son worked on the barge canal here and is now in Detroit.

Coroner Cusack, who arrived at the undertaking rooms immediately after the body was brought there, made efforts to identify the man. There was nothing in his pockets with the exception of a pair of gold eye-glasses. There were several deep scalp wounds found, as well as a fracture of the skull directly over the left eye ,which Dr. Cusack stated would have caused the man's death.

Fred McKinley was the motorman of the car which struck the unfortunate man and John McCarthy the conductor. The car left Oswego at 3:05 p. m. McDonald was walking south near Stop 35 on the northbound track. Just as the southbound car came by he apparently thought he was on the wrong track and started to cross. He ran into the car and was struck by a journal box on the front truck as it passed. He died while being brought to this city on the car which struck him.

Commissioner of Charities, J. R. Somers, took the case in charge last night and will attempt to locate the son in Detroit. The man leaves a daughter who is at the county home, as well as another daughter who formerly lived in this city and whom Mr. Somers will also endeavor to locate.

LOCAL W. C. T. U. TO OBSERVE WILLARD MEMORIAL

A program of music has been arranged by Mrs O. S. Bogardus, and a cordial invitation is extended to any in the city who are interested in the work of the W. C. T. U.

MISS ALLEN, ASSISTED BY MR. ROBERTS, WINS PRAISE OF ALL HEARERS

The music loving people of our city last night were out en masse to hear Miss Julia Allen in song recital at the First M. E. church.

The program was interesting thruout and Miss Allen is one of the few operatic sopranos capable of singing songs artistically and with fine vocal finish. The attractive personality of the singer, the artistic interpretation of her numbers, the beauty of her tones and splendid enunication, combined in making the evening one of beauty to the eye as well as the ear. While the arias from Mignon and Traviata were perhaps the best done of her selections, she was equally enjoyable in her simpler numbers. In the "Ah Fors E. Lui" from La Traviata, Miss Allen showed her command of a flawless scale, of technical equipment of high worth and of a ringing E. Flat in alt, which naturally brought forth a storm of applause. In giving MacCormick's "A Bit of Heaven" and "Annie Laurie" in response to encores, Miss Allen's lilting, happy expression reached the heighth of perfection.

With Mr. George Roberts at the piano, Miss Allen had that unusual fortune, an artist accompanying. Mr. Roberts not only supplied the accompaniment, in itself no easy task, but was also heard in a group of solos, including the A Flat Ballade of Chopin and numbers by Schumann and Mendelsohn. He is a pianist of significant and unconventional attainments and interested his hearers profoundly. Tho very young, his playing is characterized by all those points which go to distinguish the real artist from the average piano player.

DR. SHELDON TO SPEAK TONIGHT

Dr. Harriet E. Sheldon, who is leading the revival campaign in the Free Methodist church, and will speak tonight, was born in Lewis county, this state. Before completing her course in the Lowville Academy she taught school a year. After finishing her academic course she went to Chicago to study medicine and in due time was graduated from the Hahneman medical college. For two years she successfully practiced medicine in Chicago. She began a post-graduate course to become a specialist and had bright prospects ahead, when a change came into her life and she gave up all to follow Christ in the field of evangelism. She began her work in the Olive Branch mission in the slums of Chicago where she stayed two years. She was then sent to a similar mission in Hamilton, Ontario, where she remained eight years. From thence she went to Natal, South Africa, where she labored among the Zulu people four years. She has been in the home land now three years, spending her time mostly as a pastor or evangelist.

That war has not been declared on waterway improvements is the assertion of former Senator Burton, with particular reference to the defeat of the river and harbor bill in the upper house last year. The ex-senator argues that wasteful appropriations in $50,000 and $100,000 bunches have led to a conservative policy. It is suggested that all the expenditure for waterway repairs and improvements should be considered and provided for as one appropriation. In this way broad discussion and thorough illumination would be invited and worthy improvements could be made promptly. Under the piecemeal plan it seems that one improvement, that of James river, has been thirty years in getting two-fifths finished. At that rate the work is barely done when it becomes necessary to expend the same amount of money again on the same job, with a vast increase, probably, to meet new conditions.

Brand Whitlock and Henry Holt find fault with the drift of American literature. It is too trivial, inartistic and insincere. The writers do not give the readers the best that is in them, but write to meet a false standard. This standard is set by magazine editors and publishers merely having an eye to immediate sales and profits. It is a sharp indictment. The fact that the current output sells and is read cannot be denied. Perhaps a wholesome deduction could be drawn from knowledge of which of the numerous varieties are most read and best liked. But that knowledge is difficult to obtain.

The neutral world may as well settle down to a term of five years more of the terrific strife, observes the Baltimore American, unless Germany shall make overtures that will place an imperative moral responsibility upon the allies to desist. Germany can be counted up to keep up the war to the end of its resources if the way of peace is blocked.

With the oceans, the lakes, the gulf and the Rockies and canyons the country only needs a bombproof roof to be able to bid defiance to her foes and get away with it.

When the weather man gives us the kind wanted for a very particular occasion his failure to suit other folks and other times is forgotten.

However frightful the "frightfulness" this year, war will have to divide up with politics in public attention on this side of the ocean.

MR. PINCHOT ON GUARD

There ought to be rough sledding in the Senate and House of Representatives for the Shields Bill, now before the Senate, which gives to the power interests without compensation the use of water power on navigable streams. The Shields Bill is wholly removed from partisan politics, therefore Republicans and Democrats should stand shoulder to shoulder and lined up double-thick against making the people pay for something which is theirs already, and which has long been theirs. Not even the most ardent supporters of the bill should be allowed to have the least hope of holding their own forces intact for the support of such a remarkable proposition.

Mr. Gifford Pinchot is once more placing himself between the people and the same old interests which fought in Congress for control of Alaska's resources. He sees in the Shields Bill a pressing threat against the Conservation policy, adding to his statement that "the amount of water power the navigable streams will supply is larger by far than all the power of every kind now in use in the United States. It pretends to, but does not, enable the people to take back their own property at the end of fifty years, for in order to do so under the bill, the Government would have to pay the unearned increment, and to take over whole lighting systems of cities and whole manufacturing plants. Private corporations are authorized to seize upon any land, private or public, they choose to condemn."

It should be recalled by many persons that President Roosevelt and President Taft vetoed bills which gave away public water powers without due compensation. An examination of the Shields Bill elicits the information that it would do precisely the same thing.

If the United States is determined to prepare for war, or to protect itself from attack, there is little use in sacrificing the country's natural resources—those which lie at the foundation of all preparedness. The Shields Bill now holding the spotlight in the Senate where there is so much being said and, so little done for preparedness, is another one of those dangerous plans that sound well until they are analyzed. It means the giving up of the most essential element of natural resources—water power, which must be employed to generate electricity to be used in the manufacture of nitrates, as nitrates are the basis of gunpowder, and gunpowder in great quantities is needed for war or defense.

No matter how handsome a horse may be to look at, if he is gone in the knees and once stumbles with his rider, he is not likely to get him on his back again. Nothing can come out of a horse's feet or a man's headpiece which is not in him. It is therefore necessary that the smooth sentences contained in the Shields Bill be placed before the people in their true light, for if they are not and the ten-years fight against monopolistic control of the public water power is lost there will be little use of the people ever trying to get upon the back of one of their best methods of defense in peace or war.

If we must prepare, let's adopt a concerted movement that will break down the offensive put up by the enemies of Conservation. Official Washington is not doing it.

NO BACKWARD STEP FOR CONSERVATION

Gifford Pinchot, one of the strongest conservationists in the nation, has issued an appeal to the people and press to aid in the defeat of the Shields Bill, a measure now before Congress which plans to permit private power companies to take water power from navigable streams of the United States without compensation, according to Mr. Pinchot. He declares that the bill "pretends to, but does not, enabzle the people to take back their own property at the end of 50 years," claiming that the impossibility of taking back the water power sites is due to the fact that the "government would have to pay the unearned increment, and to take over whole lighting systems of cities and whole manufacturing plants.

We have noted from time to time that the bill has been strongly opposed by conservationists and the advocates have declared that unless some such "reasonable" bill were adopted the valuable resources now tied up and unused would never come into service. It was argued that great water power now goes to waste because there is no inducement to private capital to promote its utilization, and that unless a measure were introduced allowing private capital to harness this waste power at a fair return the power would continue to go to waste indefinitely. There can be no denial of the merit of this claim, but there has been so much viciousness in the past exploitation of national resources, and the temptation to corruption is so great, that no conservation bill should pass that fails to meet with the full approval of the men who are generally recognized to be unselfish public servants of long training in the subject of conservation.

Mr. Pinchot was one government conservationist whose rigid adherance to the policy of safeguarding the future public domain at all costs earned for him the bitter hatred of all the powerful interests engaged in exploiting public domains and his warning should be supported. That Secretary Houston is also opposed to the generous terms of the Shields Bill adds further weight to the opposition. While it is to be taken for granted that President Wilson would not sign a measure inimical to the public welfare it is decidedly important that the opposition shall become great enough to cause Congress to amend the proposed bill to meet all objections from the men whom the nation has come to recognize as true conservationists.—Auburn Citizen.

WHEN DEATH COMES

(From the Golden Sayings of Epictetus)

What wouldst thou be found doing when overtaken by Death? If I might choose, I would be found doing some deed of true humanity, of wide import, beneficent and noble. But if I may not be found engaged in aught so lofty, let me hope at least for this—what none may hinder, what is surely in my power—that I may be found raising up in myself that which had fallen; learning to deal more wisely with the things of sense; working out my own tranquility, and thus rendering that which is its due to every relation of life.

If death surprise me thus employed, it is enough if I can stretch forth my hands to God and say, "The faculties which I received at thy hands for apprehending this thine administration, I have not neglected. As far as in me lay, I have done Thee no dishonor. Behold how I have used the senses, the primary conceptions which Thou gavest me. Have I ever laid anything to Thy charge? Have I ever murmured at aught that came to pass, or wished it otherwise? Have I in anything transgressed the relations of life? For that Thou didst beget me, I thank Thee for that Thou hast given: for the time during which I have used the things that were Thine, it suffices me. Take them back and place them wherever Thou wilt! They were all Thine, and Thou gavest them me." —If a man depart thus minded, is it not enough? What life is fairer or more noble, what end happier than his?

DAIRY INDUSTRY IN WAR-TIME

Despatches from several countries in Europe contain notices of shortages of butter-fats and milk: Regarding the insufficiency of milk supplies in certain lands, much has been said about the hardship worked upon the babies.

Before thew ar Russia built up a large dairy industry in Siberia. Express trains sweeping across two continents, carrying nothing but dairy products, were a picturesque object-lesson of the world's craving for butter and cheese. The Chinese, Koreans and Japanese use comparatively little milk, their countries being too populous to admit of the keeping of many cows.

Denmark leads all the nations of the globe in exportation of dairy products. Danish butter is known wherever good living exists. Danish dairymen have been imported to many parts of the world to teach the secrets of high-class dairying.

Butter which in normal times reaches the channels of international trade amounts to 728,000,000 pounds. That is less than half of the butter production of the United States alone. Per capita consumption of butter in this country is about 17 pounds. On the same basis, Germany would consume 1,139,000,000 pounds. In 1913 that country imported 122,000,000 pounds more than it exported.

It will be seen from this that if Germany normally uses as much butter as we do, her shortage would be 10.7 per cent. However, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland have about 326,000,000 pounds to export annually. Austria Hungary has a surplus of 4,000,000 pounds. In ordinary times England takes three-fifths of the world's surplus of butter. In 1912, out of 728,000,000 pounds moving in international commerce, the United Kingdom took 450,300,000 pounds.

The United States produces more than six billion gallons of milk a year. This is an average of nearly one gallon per cow a day. Exclusive of the milk and cream consumed on farms, American dairy products are worth $600,000,000 a year.

One-third of the milk output of the United States is sold from the farm. Much of what remains is used for domestic purposes there. Yet, a billion pounds of butter is exhibited by the American farm as one of its by-products. The total production of butter in the United States is about 1,700,000,000 pounds. While ten out of every 17 pounds of our butter is produced on the farm, nearly all our cheese is made in factories.—Buffalo Times.

THE ABILITY WHICH COUNTS

For anyone who thinks, or ever has thought, that possibly there is no chance to get on in the world there is a wealth of suggestion in numerous instances of boys who have made good which Good Citizenship recently published. Among the examples which that publication citted are these:

Jay Gould was once a poverty-sticken surveyor. George W. Childs was a bookseller's errand boy at a salary of $4 a month. John Wanamaker started on a salary of $1.25 a week. Andrew Carnegie began life on a weekly salary of $3. Andrew Johnson was a tailor's apprentice and learned to read after he was married. James A. Garfield was a poor widow's son, and as a barefoot boy drove mules on a towpath of an Ohio canal.

Bunyan found opportunity in the Bedford jail to write the greatest allegory of the world, on the untwisted paper that had been used to cork his bottles of milk. Michael Angelo found a piece of discarded Carrara marble among waste rubbish, beside a street in Florence which some unskilled workman had cut, hacked, spoiled and thrown away. No doubt many artists had noticed the fine quality of the marble and regretted that it should have been spoiled. But Michael Angelo saw an angel in the ruin, and with his chisel and mallet he culled out from it one of the finest pieces of statuary in Italy, his young David.

An observing barber in Newark, N. J., thought he could make an improvement in shears for cutting hair, invented clippers, and became rich. A Maine man was called in from the hayfield to wash clothes for his invalid wife. He had never realized what it was to wash clothes before. Finding the method slow and laborious, he invented the washing machine and made a fortune.

Who says opportunity does not exist? For those who think so, increased introspection might reveal the fact that lack of ability to take advantage of opportunity is the missing thing. Such ability can be acquired. Such ability increases rapidly through exercise. It is up to the individual not to an outsider.—Batavia News.

START OF ANOTHER RIOT OF PENSIONS

The House of Representatives has passed a pension bill which will add $2,500,000 to the cost of pensions, and as years pass, increase that addition.

The annual pension bill had begun to decrease with alarming rapidity, owing to the death of veterans, veterans' widows, and not to mention numerous persons who were on the list without merit. Something had to be done, so Congress proposes to start all over with the Spanish-American War veterans.

But it is only a start. The law would pay pensions to widows and minor children of enlisted men who had served 90 days. It is expected that about 10,000 claimants will come under the law.

The bill as it stands is not so objectionable. It is what Congressmen will do with it after it has been signed by the President that may cause the people to worry. It will constitute a blanket to which Congressmen can tack numerous special bills for constituents who ask the favor.

If the bill should become a law, we shall see bills introduced granting So-and-So's widow a pension, although the veteran didn't serve but 20 days. There will be bills to grant pensions to veterans in place of pensions to the widows which they leave. There will be bills to grant men pensions because they tried to enlist but were rejected on account of lack of physical fitness. There will be no end of special bills for all who were alive when the skirmish of 1898 occurred. That is what happens when the United States goes in for pensions.—Utica Observer.

ABLE TO JUDGE AFTER ELECTION

Previous to Mr, Wilson's election the Democratic party was supposed to be in favor of direct primaries for the nomination of Presidential candidates.

Since Mr. Wilson's election neither the party leaders nor President Wilson has done anything to promote direct Presidential primaries.

Wilson, like every other man who gets in, prefers to use the machinery of the Government to secure his renomination rather than go out and appeal to the public, but Wilson, to carry out his promises, should have advocated a direct primary for President, and the law should be clear that no one can be nominated for President in any other way and no one can be nominated who isn't willing to go before the public as an avowed candidate in a direct primary.

That would put an end to such fraudulent positions as Hughes now occupies, of being a candidate while pretending not to be a candidate.

It would also put an end to the possibilities of a man like Root being nominated through corporation control of a national convention.

It would also, by the way, have made impossible the nomination of a man like Wilson when Clark was the choice of the people for the Presidency.

The Democratic party will be better able to judge the advantage of a direct primary after it has carefully studied the Result of the coming election.—N. Y. American.

WALKER'S HEN LAID TWO EGGS IN ONE DAY

Snakes have come out in January, daffodils have budded and the peach crop has been ruined a couple of times in the Winter that has bristled with freaks and phenomenons, but it has remained for Deputy Sheriff Thomas M. Walker to produce the hen that lays two eggs in one day.

Any references to snakes and daffodils in January mentioned in theopening linesof thisbrief narrative shouldnot inany manner be construed asbeing used forthe purpose of making light of the story that Deputy Walker is telling about his White Leghorn No. 20. His story of the hen that laid two eggs in a day is a serious one and there is no reason why it should not be accepted as such, for Deputy Walker is not surmising about the eggs. He has undeniable proof of such a strong nature that he tells of the happening, well understanding the jibes that may follow, without any fear whatsoever.

The deputy sheriff is a breeder of a well known laying strain of Leghorns and he has a hobby of trap nesting them and keeping a record of each hen's production. Briefly, a trap nest is a box into which the hen sits herself to lay the egg and she must remain there until released. Thus by taking her leg band number an accurate record of how many eggs she lays is easily obtainable.

Hen No. 20 has been a fairly good producer during the Winter but has been given to laying doubled yolked eggs. For three days during thel atter part of last week she failed to deposit an egg. Sunday the deput ywent into the hen house and found No. 20 in one of the nests. He picked her up and to his great surprise found two warm fresh laid eggs in the nest. They were both the same size and color and as it was impossible for any other hen to get into the nest without Walker's knowing it, the evidence was conclusive that No. 20 had turned the remarkable feat of depositing two eggs within an hour's time.—Auburn Citizen.

TIGHTER GRIP ON GERMAN TRADE

London—The government, through Lord Lansdowne, announced in the House of Lords last night it had decided to turn over all matters connected with the blockade of Germany to one man, who would rank as a full fledged Cabinet Minister. It is understood the new post will go to Lord Robert Cecil, who since the formation of the coalition government has been Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He will retain this post, joining the Cabinet as Blockade Minister.

The new Minister will be charged with the administration of the order in council regulating the blockade, as well as responsibility for the general policy and practice of the government with respect to trade passing into or from neutral countries.

Lord Robert Cecil is a lawyer of wide experience and a young man, as members of the British Cabinet go. In the Foreign Office he has been intimately concerned with the blockade operations, particularly in their relation to the complicated matters touching belligerent and neutral rights. His elevation to the Cabinet will give to the unionists another representative in the coalition counsels.

The whole question of the blockade was threshed out at considerable length in the House of Lords last evening, Lord Sydenham and Lord Beresford making the principal appeals for a stricter blockade, while Lord Lansdowne and Lord Buckmaster defended the government.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION PLANS COMPLETED

Albany— Arrangements for the Democratic State convention at Syracuse, March 1st, have been completed, it was announced yesterday. The convention will be called to order at noon by William Church Osborn, chairman of the Democratic State committee, and the principal speech will be delivered by former Governor Martin H. Glynn, who is to be both temporary and permanent chairman.

The delegates accredited to the convention will number 450, with as many alternates, and it is expected that several hundred other visitors will witness the proceedings.

KEEPING THE CITY CLEAN

Settling the Loose Paper and Rubbish Problem.

CHILDREN AS CIVIC GUARDS

Public School Pupils Should Be Taught to Guard the Trees and Flowers of Park and Street and Should Form Habit of Keeping Surroundings Neat and Clean.

By CLINTON ROGERS WOODRUFF, Secretary National Municipal league.

"Please pick up that newspaper you have just thrown away," said one man to another at Jackson and Biddle streets, in Milwaukee, one morning.

"Why?"

"If you don't pick it up I will."

The man who had tossed his morning paper into the gutter near the courthouse thought a moment and then retrieved the tightly twisted paper from the street. He thought a moment and then put it in his pocket.

"Again I ask why you made this request," he said.

"I ask it of you as one citizen has a right to ask of another citizen of our city," was the response. "Have you not seen the articles in the newspapers about this being the first of three cleaning days?"

The man who had tossed his paper in the street admitted that he had, but declared that he thought one more newspaper added to the thousands blowing around the streets would make but little difference. Then the man who had requested that the paper be picked up introduced himself as the health commissioner of the city. The two men shook hands, and the commissioner obtained a warm ally in the "clean city" movement.

"Wednesday is to be children's day," said he, according to the report in a local paper. "With the aid of the children we will attack the loose paper problem and make that a special issue on Wednesday. Through the pupils of the schools we hope to gather up every bit of loose paper flying around the streets and end its power of doing damage to the health and beauty of our city.

"When we have the city thoroughly cleaned we must all assist constantly in keeping it clean. Papers and rubbish must not be tossed into the air to be blown into our neighbor's yard, because the next change of wind may not only give back to us all the old stuff we have thrown away, but much more for good measure."

If, however, the health commissioner had stopped with his plans for a "clean up day" he would have done a piece of work of only moderate, very moderate, importance, for spasmodic efforts at cleanliness are soon over and soon forgotten. It is the habit of cleanliness that counts, and it is this which farseeing social workers are trying to inculcate. Carol Aronovici, formerly director of the bureau of social research of Rhode Island and now secretary of the Philadelphia Suburban Housing association, with the co-operation of the state department of education, has sought to accomplish this end through the organization of the school children as "civic guards."

It is the legal duty of the teacher to instruct pupils in moral conduct. This is the idea at the basis of the effort, as described by the Philadelphia commissioner of public schools, Walter E. Ranger, and in his judgment to no other instruction are they more responsive. As a practical example of such training, children may well be taught to help guard the trees and flowers of park and street and keep places clean for the sake of public health and beauty. It is in such service that the school may be accounted a civic guard. In all activities of the school it should be remembered that the school is already organized for public service. Each school is a unit of a town or city system and a part of a civic institution. It cannot be made a subordinate part of any private organization, however beneficent. It owes its first allegiance to city, state and nation. As every resident is a citizen of his town or city, so every pupil, as citizen of his school, is entitled to an equality of opportunity in the life of the school. For these reasons the formation of clubs and societies among pupils, not directly by the school and tending to disorganize the school itself, seems unnecessary.

Let the school, as a whole, assume its civic duties, co-operate with other public agencies and let every pupil share in its civic aims. For special ends the school will properly have its groups or committees of pupils, but they will serve in the name of the school.

Boys and girls are not always careful about the schoolyard, nor are they careful about the streets which lead from their homes to school. Perhaps they would not be so careless if they realized that the street is the hallway which connects the school and the home, and that the careless throwing of papers and rubbish into the street means dirty streets, papers flying all about and dust that gets into the eyes and noses and throats of people, often causing sickness and even death in the community.

JAP SHIPS IN MEDITERRANEAN

London—The Times this morning, in publishing a Copenhagen despatch quoting German newspapers for the statement that a Japanese fleet had safely arrived in the Mediterranean with a great number of aircraft, says:

"In view of this telegram, it is interesting to recall a message which appeared in the New York Herald of January 4, dated Tokio, stating that a squadron of Japanese war ships was about to leave Japan for the Suez Canal, presumably to protect Japanese shipping."

The decision of the Japanese government to send a squadron to the Suez Canal followed the sinking of two Japanese steamships in the Mediterranean. The Yasaka Maru was torpedoed off Port Said on December 21. The Kenkoku Maru was sunk by a submarine on December 22. Those on board both vessels were rescued.

650,000 ACRES FOR CAMPERS AVAILABLE IN NEW ENGLAND

Government Will Lease Five Acre Tracts at $5 Per Year.

There has been widespread interest in New England states in the decision of the United States forestry bureau to open to summer campers and vacationists 650,000 acres of public lands in the White mountains of New Hampshire, and many have taken it for granted that the terms offered by the government, $5 per annum for tracts of five acres for each person, the leases to run for thirty years, will be taken advantage of by thousands of persons next summer.

But there are some aspects of the offer that are likely to make it less attractive on closer investigation. The rate specified is less nominal than would appear at first sight, for whereas $5 a year for five acres is cheap enough and a thirty year lease would cost only $150, it must be considered that there are in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts thousands of acres of land suitable for camping sites that may be purchased outright for $5 per acre, so that for a total outlay of $150 one may obtain not five, but thirty acres of very desirable land.

The waste lands in Massachusetts that may be obtained for next to nothing, run into the thousands of acres, and inquiry at the state forestry commission shows that any quantity of such land can be purchased on lakes where the fishing and boating are excellent and in beautiful scenic surroundings. The state is buying up much of this land at an average price under $5 an acre and some of it on Cape Cod as low as 25 cents an acre, and what the state can do individuals may do if they possess the initiative.

Moreover, there is a law in Massachusetts which offers an even more attractive proposition than that presented by the thirty year leases in the White mountains. Waste land purchased by individuals under this law will be planted in white pine or other valuable trees and cared for by the state by scientific forestry methods at a trifling expense to the owner, the only requirements being a form of transfer back to the state for its protection in the event of default.

Some long headed persons are taking advantage of this law, and sportsmen's clubs are beginning to acquire considerable areas in this way, but the great mass of the people are not availing themselves of it, and most of them probably do not know that such a law is on the statute books. This act offers not only an opportunity to acquire a pleasant summer camp, but a permanent investment in growing timber.

PENSION FOR CARNEGIE.

If Bill Passes Congress His Civil War Services Will Be Recognized.

A civil war pension for Andrew Carnegie would be possible under the terms of the bill introduced by Senator Kern. The measure is designed to place on the pension rolls "any person who served ninety days or more as a military telegraph operator and who has received or is entitled to receive a certificate of honorable service in the military telegraph corps of the army of the United States."

Inasmuch as Andrew Carnegie served as a military telegraph operator in the civil war, the opinion has been expressed at the capitol that if the bill is enacted the former steel magnate would be entitled to the pension.

Whereas, Thomas Goss, the executor named in a certain instrument in writing, purporting to be the last WILL and testament of said James Tobin, late of the city of Fulton, in the County of Oswego, and State of New York, deceased, and relating to both real and personal estate, has lately made application to the Surrogate's Court of our County of Oswego, to have said instrument in writing proved and recorded as a WILL of real and personal estate: You and each of you are, therefore, hereby cited to appear before the Surrogate of the County of Oswego, at his office in the city of Oswego, in the said County of Oswego, New York, on the 10th day of April, 1916, at ten o'clock in thef orenoon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of said WILL and such of you as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your general guardian, if you have one; or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed; or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a special guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In Testimony Whereof, We have caused the seal of the Surrogate's Court of the County of Oswego to be hereunto affixed.

Witness, Hon. Clayton I. Miller, Surrogate of our said County of Oswego, at the City of Oswego, in the said County, the 21st day of February, A. D., 1916.

H. E. HINMAN,
Clerk of the Surrogate's Court.

BUSINESS BOOM IN I.O.O.F. CIRCLES

New Members Added at Every Meeting of Organizations Affiliated with Neahtawanta Lodge.

While it was not the primary object of the Odd Fellows of this city, when planning the big get-together dinner and entertainment, held in January, to secure accessions to their membership, the result is just what might have been anticipated. The same thing holds good with with the order's auxiliary—the lodge of Rebekahs, whose recent activity is resulting also in adding names to the membership roll.

As in all matters affecting the welfare of home institutions, The Evening Times persists in devoting a lot of space to the workings of secret, beneficial and social societies, and as might be expected, the publicity given in the cases of these and other organizations proves the truth of the assertion—that advertising does pay, and handsomely. For further information, ask the Rebekahs and Odd Fellows.

This week is a particularly busy one in Rebekah and Odd Fellow circles. Monday night the last named gave a smoker (see Tuesday's Times) and Tuesday evening the Rebekahs surprised their audience by the character of the George Washington party which was given in the temple. A "fish fry" was given immediately following last night's business session of the Odd Fellows, and tonight the Encampment meets, to be followed by a roast beef supper.

This article is not a paid ad. It is to tell the reader, more than anything else, that business booms "on the hill" and will continue to boom, if the entertainment committees keep up their activity—and then advertise the fact—in the Evening Times.

LOCAL TEAM HOPES TO GIVE A TOP DRESSING

The High school basketball team will go to Morrisville to play thhe Aggies Saturday night. Morrisville came here early in the season, scoring an easy victory over the local boys.

Coach Merrill's quintet, with two exceptions, is entirely different than the team which started the season. This leads up to the hope that a victory may be scored against the agricultural students. Individual work has been eliminated and the team work has been developed to a high degree.

MRS. JOHN WESTCOTT

Mrs. John Westcott, 61, died at her home in Dexterville, yesterday, after a brief illness. She was born in Lysander and had always lived in this section. She is survived by her husband.

The funeral will be held at the family home tomorrow at 1:30 p. m., and the Dexterville church at 2 o'clock. Burial will be made in Fairdale cemetery.

TWO LOCAL MEN ARE HONORED

Farm Bureau Association Holds Annual Meeting in Pulaski, Electing a New President.

Messrs. Goerge D. Adams and George Fuller, both of this city, received honors at yesterday's meeting of the Oswego County Farm Bureau Association held in Pulaski.

Mr. Adams succeeds M. L. Moran of Parish as president of the society and Mr. Fuller will represent the society at the county Pomona Grange.

The election of officers resulted as follows;

Vice-president Guy E. Frary of Pulaski; secretary, Frank H Barnes of Oswego; treasurer, Russell B. Quonce of Oswego; Advisory Council, M. L. Moran of Parish and B. W. Severence of Pennellville; representative to the Board of Supervisors. George Fuller of Fulton; representative to Oswego County Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, W. P. Gregg of Phoenix; representative to the Oswego Chamber of Commerce, David P. Page of Oswego.

Mr. Moran opened the morning session and gave his annual address. He urged the co-operation of the farmers of Oswego county in increasing the membership of the various town associations. The annual report of the treasurer indicated that the association is in a flourishing condition, with a balance in the treasury.

O. Bert Trowbridge, head of the agricultural department of the Pulaski High school, read the report of Frank H. Barnes of Oswego ,a delegate to the convention of the State Farm Bureau at Ithaca and which gave in detail the work of that gathering.

F. E. Robertson of Watertown, Manager of the Jefferson County Farm Bureau, delivered an address on the raising of oats. The speaker advocated the standardizing of crops, beliving that better results would follow. Mr. Robertson illustrated his talk with samples of oats raised in Jefferson county. At the close of the address the speaker answered various questions propounded by the auditors relative to the subject in hand.

Both sessions of the Farm Bureau took the form of a farmers' institute. E. Victor Underwood, manager of the Oswego County Farm Bureau, was in charge.

Prof. M. C. Burritt of the State Agricultural College at Ithaca and leader of the State Farm uBreau, was the first speaker of the atfernoon.The work of the farm bureaus was outlined and the speaker declared that there were 6,500 farms in Oswego county and urged all farmers to cooperate in the work of the bureau by affilating with the town norganizations.

DINNERS ONCE EACH WEEK, CITIZENS CLUB

Commencing Tuesday, February 29th, and until further notice, club dinners will be served weekly, each Tuesday evening at 6:30 o'clock. Reservations may be made with the steward on or before 11 o'clock of the same day. All members are invited.

"THE WARNING"

In "The Warning", which is coming to the Quirk theater today, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation has given Mr. Henry Kolker, the star of the piece, an opportunity to display his histrionic talents through a medium, and that the well known actor has taken full advantage of his opportunities is evident. The story of a man who falls to the uttermost depths through the weakness which makes him his own worst enemy is told in an allegorical form and in a convincing manner. There is a remarkable series of photographs illustrative of Dante's visions in purgatory, and another of New York's "Great White Way" at night, in which the lights of Broadway furnished the illumination for the camera, all blending in a vision which, in its entirety, is without a parallel on the screem. The presentaton makes a new high mark on the Equitable program, and is one which, in its remarkable and unexpected climax, will thrill every one who is fortunate enough to see it.

YEOMAN BALCH SENT TO BATTLESHIP NEVADA

A letter received this morning by the Rev. C. A. Balch brings the pleasing news that the pastor's son, B. T. R. Balch left New York harbor yesterday bound for Boston, and there to go aboard the battleship Nevada.

Young Mr. Balch is listed as a yeoman of the third class, his duties on board ship being of a clerical nature. Recently he visited his parents here, coming from Newport, R. I., training station. Upon the expiration of his furlough he was assigned to the battleship Maine lying in New York harbor, where he assisted in receiving disobedient tars sentenced to undergo unishment.

The young man's parents await the arrival of further news which will tell them of the movements of the Nevada.

DEGREE OF POCAHONTAS ENTERTAINS GREAT CHIEFS

One of the pleasantest events in the history of the Degree of Pocahontas was held last evening, in West Broadway. Speeches were made by the distinguished guests, wwho included Mrs. Mary L. Grover, Great Chief of Buffalo; Mrs. M. L. Gere, Great Chief of Syracuse; and Miss Mame Toomey, Great Chief, also of Syracuse.

Three Deputies were also present, as follows: Mrs. Shrimp, Mrs. Rine Smith and Mrs. Richardson, all of Syracuse.

At the conclusion of the speech-making a fine literary and musical program, followed by a dinner, concluded the evening's enjoyment.

Your Cows Yield as they Feel

Poor milkers are not accidents—they are usually backward because there is something wrong with their physical condition. You cannot expect such a cow to give a good milk yield until her sluggish organs have received proper medical treatment.

Kow-Kure has become the standard remedy in thousands of dairies because this famous cow medicine has great medicinal qualities that work upon and tone up the digestive and genital organs, making each perform its proper function.

You can prove for yourself the merit of Kow-Kure by trying a package on one of your poor milkers, and watch results carefully. Besides being a general tonic, Kow-Kure is especially recommended for the prevention or cure of such diseases as Abortion, Barrenness, Milk Fever, Scouring, Lost Appetite, Bunches, Retained Afterbirth, etc,

MIND HEALING AIDS HUNDREDS

New York—Hundreds of victims of alcoholism and nervous disorders are being treated and cured in New York today through the co-operation of physicians, clergymen and the highly trained social workers.

The work is the outgrowth of the Emmanuel movement started in Boston some years ago. It was fostered by the Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb, the Rev. Mr. Elwood Worcester and Dr. Isador H. Coriat, a medical practitioner of that city.

New York first came to know the work through the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Thomas Elliot Calvert. He was one of the priests attached to the Episcopal church of the Holy Communion and directly in charge of the psycho-therapeutic class formerly located at St. Mark's and under the auspices of the Guild of Intercession. Men and women of great wealth and noted for their philanthrophy have interested themselves in the work.

When a reporter called on Dr. Calvert in his study at the Church of the Holy Communion yesterday he was then awaiting the arrival of a "patient." She was a woman in a terribly depressed state who had baffled the skill of the medical men under whose care she had been.

There was little in her appearance to suggest the hypochondriac or the neurotic. Dr. Calvert explained she was well advanced in the class he has been conducting and her ultimate restoration but a question of weeks.

"This movement appealed very strongly to me," Dr. Calvert said, "from the moment I familiarized myself with what Dr. McComb was accomplishing. I studied it carefully and when I came to New York and joined the clergy of St. Mark's I at once set at work to see what could be done here."

DANCE FOLLOWS TONIGHT'S GAME

When the Syracuse Y. M. H. A. Stars played the Maccabees earlier in the season, the game drew the largest crowd which ever witnessed a basketball game in this city. It is confidently expected that tonight's game will draw a larger attendance than its predecessor, because of the special inducement—dancing. A 3-piece orchestra has been engaged, led by Merton E. Reynolds, who will provide the latest music.

Final practice was given by Captain Ives last night, and it proved to be very successful. One of the squad was absent on account of illness. The same line-up which finished in the last game with the Oswego Normals will be used tonight.

Information comes to the local camp, in effect that Silvertein, conceded to be the best center in Central New York, will play. This does not disconcert the hopes of the local team in the least. The Maccabees learn that the addition of Silverstein to the Syracuse team has made necessary an all-around shift. The Maccabees have now perfected their team work to such extent as to be in the running with the best teams in this section of the State.

Manager Snow has booked a game for tomorrow night, which will be played at Syracuse, with the strong A. C. U. outfit, who have Keib, the former University star, in their lineup. Confidence is expressed that a good showing will be made in each case as the Maccabee quintet have now "found themselves."

The preliminary game tonight, between the Tigers and Nationals of Oswego will commence promptly at 8 o'clock.

I will give you, free, with every gallon of oil, a twenty-five cent cake of Carner's Harness Soap. George T. Carner, 118 Cayuga st. adv

IRELAND HAS WAVE OF PROSPERITY

Dublin—There was never so much money in Ireland as at present. The general prosperity was the theme of speeches of the chairmen of all the leading banks at their semi-annual meetings.

The banks all maintaine ddividends showed increased profits and applied profits to wiping out the depreciation before the war on securities held.

Though 10,000,000 pounds were subscribed in Ireland to war loans there is as much mone yin the banks as ever. So well off are they that an absurd rumor was starfed that the Government intended to commandeer the money in them. This rumor was cited by the chairman of the National Bank as an explanation of a drop of 200,000 pounds in deposits, though the same bank had an increase of money on current accounts of 137,000 pounds.

STEEL ADVANCE CAUSES SURPRISE; $5.00 INCREASE

The steel trade has not yet become so inured to extraordinary developments that surprises do not come now and then. Commenting on price advances, the Iron Age said:

The Pittsburgh advance of $5 a ton on contract plates, shapes, and bars, announced February 18, was quite unexpected even by the selling organizationsof the companies making it. There was thus none of the "protection" to large users that has somethimes preceded important advances. Nothing in the remarkable price movement of the past four months has so disturbed buyers or impressed them with the chances of surprise in the while situation.

Two new ore vessels for the Steel Corporation were placed at lake yards last week, making five in all, and other is pending. It is now a question of getting further deliveries of such boats before mid-season of 1917. Two vessels have just been placed with the New York Shipbuilding company by the Coastwise Transportation company and two with the Cramp yard by W. R. Grace & Co. More than 250 merchant vessels are now under contract in the country. The steel for four lake boats, 13,500 tons, went on the books last week.

The Iron Trade Review said:

Statistics just made public show that the present stocks of merchant iron in makers' hands are less than a month's supply. Total orders of producers on January 1 were about 2,500,000 tons, an increase of 1,500,000 tons in the year. The weekly report in steel conditions is a monotonous recital of buyers pounding the mills for greater needs of steel and the inability of the latter to meet the demand.

Homemade Gas.

Spanish peasants living in the cork oak region use homemade gas obtained from cork refuse. As described by one authority, the process consists in filling several large teakettles with the waste bark and placing each in turn over the fire during the evening, burning the volatile gas as it escapes from the spouts. The carbonized residue forms the fine black-brown pigment known to commerce as "Spanish brown."

His Golf Prize.

When the Duke of York was living in Edinburgh in 1681 he was told that a certain shoemaker named Patersone was the best golf player in Scotland, and him, the duke, later James II., chose as partner in a foursome, winning a huge stake. He promptly turned over the money to Patersone, who forthwith built a house in which the duke placed a stone with a Patersone crest bearing the motto, "Far and Sure."

Always Wrong.

Manager—I'm disgusted with the mistakes that new man makes! He gets everything balled up. Assistant Manager—Oh, well, some of the best ones are that way at the beginning. He may bring home the bacon yet. Manager—He won't unless we send him for ham.—Judge.

His Motive.

Judge—Why did you commit a second theft after you had just been acquitted of the first one? Prisoner—I had to pay my lawyer, your honor.—Boston Transcript.

A SPOON FOR THE LEAP YEAR BABY

Will Fulton have a Leap Year Baby—a baby born on the twenty-ninth of February?

Think, this poor child must wait four whole years for a birthday. So to make the waiting more pleasant and as a reminder of the day for which to wait, we have decided to give, absolutely free—without any restrictions—a Handsome Silver Spoon, suitably engraved, to the baby who puts in its appearance next Tuesday. In case more than one arrives, the first to report will receive the spoon.

Who will it be?

GAS COMPANIES SEEK DYE SECRET

New York—Because since the war started it has been impossible to import dyes from Germany, the Consolidated Gas company of this city, the American Gas company of Philadelphia, the Consolidated Gas company of Baltimore and other gas companies in various cities in the United States are about to try to overcome the difficulty and find a way to produce the necessary dyes. Frank Johnson Goodnow, at the commencement day exercises of Johns Hopkins University, at Baltimore, on Tuesday announced that the gas companies had interested themselves in the establishment of a laboratory there for research work in thep ossibilities of coal tar products.

At the Consolidated Gas company's offices yesterday it was said that every effort would be made to discover the best means of producing aniline dyes from coal tar and that chemists were working on the problems.

WHITLOCK WILL NOT SUCCEED GARRISON

Washington — Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, will not be the new Secretary of War to succeed Lindley M. Garrison, who resigned two weeks ago. Mr. Whitlock is not a lawyer, and Mr. Wilson wants a lawyer for the place.

There still is no intimation from the White House as to who will be selected as Secretary of War. It is understood that Mr. Wilson has offered the place to a lawyer in the Middle West, and that he is awaiting his acceptance before making any announcement.

MAYORS OF 41 CITIES TO CONFER ON DEFENSE

New York—Fortyone mayors of American cities or their delegates will attend the mayors' conference on national preparedness to be held in St. Louis, March 3 and 4. Gordon Ireland, secretary of Mayor Mitchell's committee, left last night for St. Louis to assist in the arrangements.

OHIO DELEGATES DECLARE FOR BURTON

Columbus, Oo—Theodore E. Burton, formerly United States Senator from Ohio, today officially became a candidate for the Republican nomination for President. Three declarations of candidates for delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention, filed with Secretary of State Hilderbrant, were accompanied by formal statements, signed by Mr. Burton, giving permission for use of his name.

"THE PRINCESS PAT"

"The Princess Pat," John Cort's production of the Henry Blossom-Victor Herbert comic opera triumph, will be the attraction at the Quirk theater, Tuesday, February 29th. H. Blossom and Victor Herbert have become so well established as collaborators in the composition of light and comic opera that any work from these gifted men attracts far more than usual attention. They have to their credit such other pronounced successes as "The Prima Donna," in which Mme. Fritzi Scheff starred; "The Red Mill," the starring vehicle for Montgomery and Stone; "Mdlle. Modiste," another opera that gave us Mme. Fritzi Scheff at her best. And then Messrs. Blossom and Herbert gave us "The Only Girl" which ran all last season in New York. The five productions are the only ones Blossom and Herbert have collaborated in. They have all proven positive hits artistically and have been wonderful money makers, both for producers and authors. That "The Princess Pat" is by no means the least delightful of the number is demonstrated by the fact that the opera has been crowding the Cort Theater, New York, all season.

The book contains an abundance of scintilating lines, while the score of Victor Herbert is, as usual, a joy to hear. There are twenty numbers, and every one of them are distinctive of the brilliancy of the celebrated composer. To the cast will be Ruth Welch, Paul Nicholson, Effie Tove, Phillip H. Ryley, Earl Benham, Ben Hendricks, Georgio Gregorio, Edward Metcalf, Herbert Salinge, Tots Marks and Francis Bryan.

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece.
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

Bowser Is Tender

He Comes Home and Finds Mrs. Bowser With a Headache.

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When Mrs. Bowser arose the other morning she found herself heavy headed, and black specks floated before her eyes. It was a bilious attack, and she knew that she was in for a long day's headache. She said nothing to Mr. Bowser, knowing how he regarded such things, but went down to breakfast with false cheerfulness. The sight of food nauseated her, and he, being busy thinking of a deal he had on hand and being in a hurry to get away from the house, noticed nothing unusual.

Ten minutes after Mr. Bowser had departed Mrs. Bowser was in bed again with throbbing temples. The cook came up to say:

"It is what you call appendiceetus, ma'am. I had a brother who was seized with the mortal ailment, and he looked just like you do."

"It is nothing but a headache, Maggie," was the reply.

"Are you sure it is not typhoid fever? I had a sister who came down with typhoid fever, and her eyes had the same glare yours have got."

"I told you it was only a bilious headache, and after you have laid a wet towel on my forehead I wish you would go down and leave me alone. It almost cracks my head open to talk."

"POOR GIRL! POOR GIRL!"

"I will do as you say, ma'am, and I hope it won't be a case of consumption. I had a cousin who was tooken down with consumption, and we who stood watching over his bedside saw his ears twitch. I don't think yours are twitching any, however, and you may recover from it. There you are with the wet towel, and here I go, and I will come up every half hour to see if you are dead or living. If I find you dead I will run for the coroner and the police and the fire department. I have studied to be a trained nurse, and I know just what to do."

Mrs. Bowser dozed at intervals all day, and she had a bad day of it. One of the things that she worried about, sleeping or waking, was the return of Mr. Bowser at dinner time. She knew just how he would act and just what he would say. He would declare that it was all her fault; that she had gone around barefooted and caught cold; that she had eaten a whole cocoanut and thus upset her stomach; that she had done a dozen things no sensible woman would do. Having brought the headache on herself she must get over it by herself. He could have no sympathy for such a careless woman. Then he would go downstairs to eat his dinner alone and grow more vexed every minute, and when he was through with the meal he would go down to the furnace and slam and bang the door and toss the poker across the cellar to make all the noise he could. Mr. Bowser wouldn't do these things to be mean, but just as a moral lesson to teach her to be more careful of her health.

Mr. Bowser came home.

Mrs. Bowser heard him open the door and shivered.

The cook heard him come in and saw that the way was clear across the back yard to the alley in case she had to make a skip for it.

Not seeing Mrs. Bowser in the hall or the sitting room Mr. Bowser descended to the kitchen and asked:

"Has Mrs. Bowser gone shopping?"

"No, sir," replied the cook. "Mrs. Bowser is lying on her dying bed upstairs and has been ever since you left the house this morning. If I knew how to work that telephone I should have had at least four doctors here hours ago."

Having said this, she prepared herself for the impending outburst, but none came. Mr. Bowser turned pale and walked softly up two pairs of stairs and still more softly opened the bedroom door. Mrs. Bowser lay with closed eyes, and he tiptoed to the bed and kissed her and smoothed down her hair and whispered:

"Poor girl! Poor girl! I am so sorry for you. I'll go down at once and telephone for the doctor and tell him to let nothing interfere with coming at once."

"I wouldn't do it, my dear," replied Mrs. Bowser as she opened her eyes. "I have had one of those beastly bilious headaches all day, but I am getting the better of it now."

"Thank heavens!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he raised his hands. "Maggie told me that you were as good as dead, and it took all my courage to come up here. Ah, yes, you are better, and probably by tomorrow you can be out of bed again. I am not a trained nurse, of course, but as any doctor will tell you, the first thing is for you to get some food in your stomach. Mrs. Bowser, how would you like some fried pork sausages?"

The invalid managed to restrain the smile which was coming to her face and the shudder which was going to shake the bed and feebly shook her head in reply.

"My grandmother always wanted fried pork sausages when she had a headache, but of course things have changed since her day. I wish Maggie had known enough to have a corned beef dinner. With a choice among the meat, cabbage, carrots, beets and grains you could probably have found something to tickle your palate."

"We will have such a dinner some day next week," replied Mrs. Bowser. "I do not want anything to eat tonight."

"But a doctor would insist," persisted Mr. Bowser. "I will run downstairs and counsel with Maggie."

Maggie was of the opinion when gravely consulted that a cocoanut pie would be much better than anything in the meat line, and Mr. Bowser was not more than a minute in getting under his hat and inside his overcoat and starting on a run for the bakery. He was back in less than ten minutes with a bland and good natured look and cocoanut pie, and with his own hands he cut it in halves and hastened upstairs. Mrs. Bowser thanked him very sweetly, but declined to eat. She said that in about three days she would eat three cocoanut pies all at once if he asked her to.

"But there must be something," he went on as he scratched his head in a puzzled way. "How about chicken soup? I can get the chicken at the butcher's in five minutes."

"Let it go this evening, dear."

"But mutton broth?"

"You are very kind, Mr. Bowser, but we won't talk of anything more in the food line. You may wet and wring out the towel, if you will, and then I will try to sleep again."

Mr. Bowser hastened to do as she wanted and then patted her cheek in a loving way and walked softly out of the room. He went down into the kitchen and told Maggie that he had pulled Mrs. Bowser through the crisis and was quite sure she would live. He warned her against rattling the dishes or the stove lids and then went up to the sitting room and took a seat and folded his arms and waited. He felt a glad relief and did not kick at the cat when she came around to rub against his leg. He thought of telephoning to the doctor. But what could the doctor do more than he had done if he should respond? He thought of the way he had conducted himself on previous occasions, and he felt ashamed of himself.

Mr. Bowser heard autos and wagons going past the house with a rattling and a banging, and he wanted to rush out and throw frozen potatoes at the heads of the drivers.

A cat wailed out in the back yard, and he softly raised a window and made use of such words as promptly sent her jumping over a seven foot fence.

There was a boy yelled out in front of the house, and he wished that that boy had no less than six boils on his legs.

There came a long interval of silence, and Mr. Bowser was dozing off to sleep when there came a sharp ring at the door. He started up with muttered imprecations on the head of whoever it might be and tiptoed down the hall and opened the door. There stood a man who whiningly asked:

"Boss, can you give a poor fellow 10 cents for a night's lodging?"

"I will give you ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred!" shouted Mr. Bowser as loud as he dared, and he surprised that poor unfortunate by throwing him off the steps headfirst into a snowdrift and then picking him out again and throwing him over the fence. Neither of them enjoyed the performance very much—the tramp because he was the victim and Mr. Bowser because he had to be quiet about it.

The tender hearted guardian and protector of Mrs. Bowser returned to the house and his watch, and nothing further occurred to create a disturbance. Even the cricket on the hearth buttoned up his lips, as they used to term it.

Bowser nodded. Bowser slept. In his dreams he saw Mrs. Bowser dancing around the room and declaring that she had never felt so good in ten years.

The bells struck midnight. Bowser awoke. Mrs. Bowser stood before him and was saying:

"My headache is all gone, Mr. Bowser, and I want to thank you for your kindness."

"Y-e-s," he replied, with blinking eyes. "You had one of your durned old headaches and made me no end of trouble. You brought it on yourself by some careless act, and if you ever do it again it will mean but one thing—divorce!"

Bowser had recovered from his tenderheartedness. He was Bowser again.

Getting Even.

The Only Fool

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Sarah Martin married Jim Hewson because she was a hired girl and working for $2 a week; because, again, she was tired of work and wanted a home.

Jim Hewson married Sarah Martin because he also wanted a home and because he knew that she earned $8 a month. That would pay the rent on a cottage in a village in those far back days.

Jim was lazy. He was born that way and couldn't help it. He hadn't energy enough to sweat a shirt collar, and therefore when he worked he got paid according to his energy, which pay seldom exceeded 15 cents a day.

The bridal tour of the newly weds consisted of walking a mile arm in arm, each with a basket on the free arm, to a huckleberry swamp a mile away. There they picked twelve quarts of berries—that is, Sarah picked ten quarts and Jim two. Then they walked back to town and sold the berries to a grocer for 60 cents in cash.

"You see," said Jim as he jingled the money in his hand, "we can get along as easy as grease. This money would buy us provisions for a week."

The bride half laughed at the remark, but soon felt serious and hadn't much more to say. Two weeks later, however, she had. Jim had gone to see her in the kitchen in which she worked and was feeling glad that he was a married man when she said:

"Jim, I have been thinking things over."

"Well?" was the query.

"I have come to the conclusion that I was either a lunatic or an idiot to have married you. You are all wrong. You are lazy and shiftless. You haven't got the energy of a potato bug. You want me to work and support you instead of it being the other way. If you were the best husband in the state I wouldn't do it."

"Well, what are we going to do?" asked the husband after a lapse of a minute.

"I can't get a divorce from you, Jim, for I haven't got the money to put one through. If we agreed on a separation it would do me no good, for I'd still be bound to you. If I was free altogether I might stand a chance of getting a husband who would provide a home and comforts for me."

"You mean if I should die you'd have your chance?"

The wife didn't reply. She only looked at him.

Jim rose up and left the house without a good night and went to his bed of hay in the stable, and for an hour he did more thinking than he had done in a year before.

In about a week he tried suicide. He went over on the railroad track in midafternoon, and when the 3 o'clock express came along he was standing between the rails and facing it. The whistle screamed and tooted, but Jim stood there as if spiked to a tie. The engineer tried to stop the train, but the pace was thirty miles an hour when the cowcatcher did its work. Five minutes later a man who had witnessed the accident from forty rods away came running up just as the victim was climbing the fence of a cornfield into which he had been hurled. He had a slight limp in the left leg, but that was nothing for Jim to kick about.

Sarah had heard of this attempt and started out to look for Jim, but she didn't have the luck to find him. He was missing from his usual haunts for three or four days, and then he turned up on a bluff overlooking the mill pond half a mile from the bridge. He was going to try the water cure this time. The bluffs were thirty feet above the water, and Jim couldn't swim a stroke. Instead of striking the water, however, he struck a strip of mud.

"You blamed idiot! What did you jump for? I saw you when you made the leap!" said a passerby.

"I wanted to die," replied Jim.

Sarah got every loose boy in town to hunt for Jim, but they hunted in vain. He had one more attempt coming to him, and if found at all he wanted to be found dead. He went two miles away from town and hired to a farmer to sprinkle paris green over the potato vines of his patch. The farmer left him alone for an hour, and Jim mixed a big dose of the powder and drank it down. It was an overdose, however, and it was thrown off, and his life was saved again.

It was when poor Jim was tottering down the road toward the village that a man in an auto overtook him and halted to say:

"If you aren't drunk, then you are sick. Get in here. Now, what's the matter?"

Jim told him all, and, curiously enough, the autoist proved to be an uncle of his whom he had not heard of since his boyhood days. When the uncle had heard the story to its end he said:

"Jim, you had a fool for a father. You have got three fool brothers and fool sisters and about five or six fool uncles and aunts and the Lord only knows how many fool cousins, but you are the first fool in all the family that ever owned up to being a fool. You shall be rewarded in consequence. I will buy you a house and lot in the village, give you $5,000 to set you and Sarah on your feet and bet that you'll come out very near the top. A man who is a fool and knows it is a better man than one who thinks he is wise and doesn't know it."

And Jim and Sarah made up and have lived happily ever since.

STILL ANOTHER.

This Hat Might Be a Modern Version of Moorish Taste.

SO ULTRA.

Headgear after this model resembles old Moorish styles somewhat. The jaunty high white feather is held by a knot of tan straw like the hat itself, which is of a pretty, fine weave. This design leaves no doubt in our minds about height being one of the season's features.

SHINING TRESSES.

A Doctor's Suggestions About Shampoos and Daily Care of Your Hair.

Although it may not be possible or indeed desirable for every woman to have tresses of Godiva-like abundance, it is within the power of almost everybody to have a fine head of hair or to possess what looks like one, whether her locks are long or short, thick or thin, dry or oily, dark, fair or just mid-brown. The whole secret lies in the state of the health and the daily care of the hair.

If the hair is in an impoverished condition, abnormally greasy or abnormally dry, showing a tendency to become brittle and break off short; if it loses its color and bulk, then it is no good in beginning any hair treatment without first attending to the general state of the health.

One should take sufficient exercise and rest and correct any indiscretions in diet. Where an anaemic condition exists a tonic often does wonders, so will a course of cod liver oil, while raw eggs and unboiled milk are articles of diet which directly beautify the hair.

As to the general care of the hair, it should be washed as often as it requires cleaning. Once a week is not too often for a very oily type of hair, and about once in three weeks is a good average for ordinary hair.

If it is washed at home liquid soap is the best thing to use. The hair should be thoroughly wetted with warm water, then a handful of the liquid rubbed in. If it does not lather at once use a little more water and a little more liquid till the whole head is in a perfect foam; rinse out the lather very thoroughly, take the worst of the moisture off with hot towels and dry by brushing and fanning. Do not on any account seek to dry it by the fire.

The daily care of the hair is most important. It should be well brushed every night, the scalp being first of all treated with a rather hard brush to stimulate the circulation and the long hair afterward brushed with long, sweeping strokes, two brushes with rather long, stiff bristles being used. This is to keep the hair clean and give it a natural gloss.

Some Tasty Sandwiches.

The Midnight.—One cream cheese, twelve olives stoned and chopped fine, moisten and spread between thin buttered slices of white or entire wheat bread.

The Boston.—Mash cold baked beans, add two tablespoonfuls horseradish to each cupful of beans, spread between thin slices of brown bread, buttered. Tomato catsup or prepared mustard may be used to season beans instead of horseradish if preferred, seasoning to suit the taste.

The Walnut.—Butter the bread, spread over each slice a layer of cheese, then a layer of chopped nuts. Sprinkle with salt and cover with another slice. Serve with olives.

The Onion.—Soak finely cut Bermuda onions in ice water for an hour, the water being previously sweetened and salted. Drain and mix with mayonnaise and place between slices of white bread.

Smurche.—Two packages of cheese, one hard boiled egg, a ten cent bottle stuffed olives, salt and cayenne to taste, one tablespoonful melted butter and a little chopped onion. Chop and mix all together and spread between slices of bread.

Homemade Tea Wagon.

A discarded gocart may be used for the purpose. Remove the seat part from the gocart, leaving the wheels and handle. Then saw the legs off from an old wicker table about five inches from the ground. Fasten the table to the gocart and paint all a dark green. Place on top of the table first a piece of cretonne, then a piece of glass over that. Hold both in place with four strips of molding nailed on firmly and painted the same dark green.

THE ART OF DRESS.

How Clothes Influence Character and Even Destinies.

The influence of clothes on human destinies is enormous. We say "it is not the cowl that makes the monk," but that is another erroneous proverb. Its stamp always remains and molds the individual, body and soul, in a certain way. The prestige of the costume has a great deal to do with the sacerdotal or military vocation. Who will ever know how much Mlle. de Montijo's dresses had to do with making an empress of her? She ordered her dresses for Compiegne from Worth, whose fame was just beginning, and, according to her own expression, they were her "battle horse." On them she won her victory, and we all know the effects of that victory.

"The death of a delightful man of my acquaintance," declares Pierre de Coulevain in one of her sprightly books, "was caused by a hat being worn on one side. One of his mother's friends wanted him to marry a pretty girl she knew, who was very charming and well off. He happened to be staying at her house near Vernon when this young protegee was going through on her way to Rouen.

"Anxious for her guest to see the girl, she persuaded him to go to the station with her. He went, saw the girl; but, alas, she had her hat on one side, in the most comical way possible. It was no doubt one of those odious hats, so badly balanced that no pin in the world could keep them straight. The harm was done, though. He never dared tell his mother's friend what his objection to the girl had been. He owned it to me later on, adding, 'I should always have seen her like that.'"

Imagination plays tricks on Frenchmen as it does on no other men. This one married another girl who wore her hats straight, but whose head was rather turned.

The marriage ended in a divorce and the divorce in sudden death, such sudden death that it was generally believed to have been suicide.

Delicious Salad.

Six medium sized cold boiled potatoes, three boiled beets, a small onion, a small pepper and any other cooked vegetables left from dinner diced together.

Mix with the following dressing: One teaspoonful mustard, two teaspoonfuls sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, a teaspoonful flour, blended into a tablespoonful soft butter; a well beaten egg, one-half cupful milk, one-quarter cupful vinegar. Cook in double boiler until thick. Have all ingredients ice cold and mixed some time before serving so as to be well blended. Serve on lettuce leaves garnished with hard boiled eggs. This makes a hearty supper for five persons.

Sandwich Fillings.

Pimento cheese and thinly sliced tomatoes.

Tomatoes, sliced thin, with mayonnaise dressing and English walnuts.

Sardines made into a paste spread on white bread and dotted with tiny bits of lemon and ripe olives.

Peanut butter and paprika.

Cottage cheese and minced onion.

Stuffed olives (ground) and mayonnaise.

Chicken, finely minced; bits of celery and mayonnaise.

Brown Bread Sandwich.—Jelly mixed with wet ground raisins and candied orange peel.

Bananas sliced thin, dipped into juice of lemon, mayonnaise dressing and nut meats.

Ham, chopped fine, with hard boiled eggs, mayonnaise dressing.

On the Wall.

Those who go to war without their parents' consent and are killed in battle occupy a peculiar position in the after world in Mohammedan theology. They are on Al-Araf, the wall separating heaven and hell. Because of their treatment of their parents they should be in hell, but death in battle is martyrdom, which entitles the deceased to enter heaven. Because they are martyrs they should not be sent to hell; hence Al-Araf for them. There are other denizens of Al-Araf, among them those whose good and evil deeds so exactly balance that they are neither fit for heaven nor hell.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Gloves With Fingers.

It was in the twelfth century that gloves with separate fingers were first worn.

Crepe Georgette and Taffeta.

Afternoon costume in blue crepe Georgette and taffeta, showing an unusually dainty arrangement of the waist.

Dark blue crepe Georgette in the shade known as mud blue is used for this costume, 3 yards 44-inch crepe and 4 yards 36-inch taffeta being required for the design. Since the waist is a model that can be used independently, however, today's dressmaking lesson will be devoted to the arrangement of its section on the material and the process of cutting.

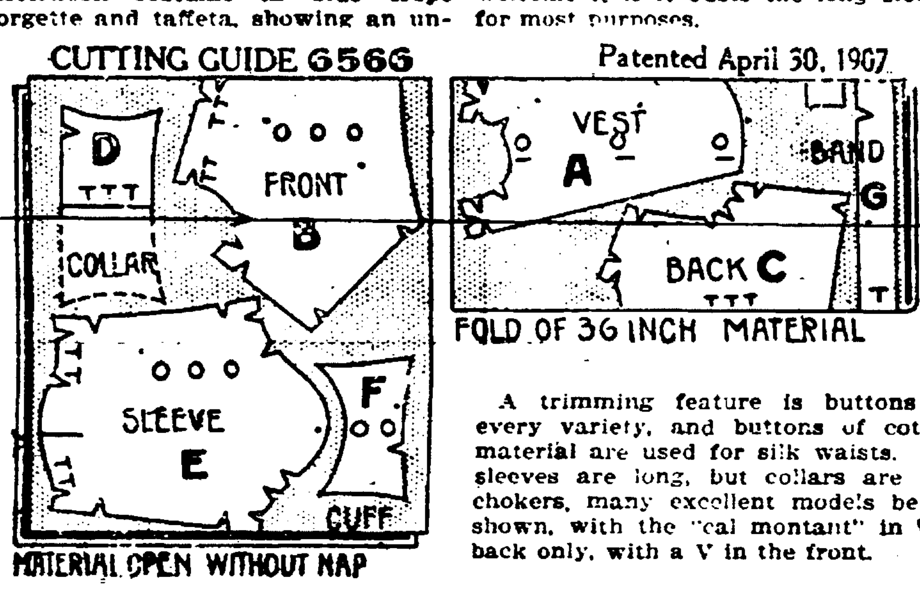
The sleeves, front and collar are of Georgette and are laid on an open width of material. Even though silk be used for the collar and cuffs, the pieces are laid on the silk in the same way as shown on the cutting guide. Every section is placed on a lengthwise thread of material.

Now, folding the taffeta, place the back on the lengthwise fold and the band next to it, at the right. The vest is laid on a lengthwise thread. If the revers are buttoned across the front the vest may be omitted, for often with such waists a guimpe is worn.

When made in two shades of blue the dress is very attractive. Or, if one has a silk slip of white silk or satin to show under the sheer crepe, the effect is quite as charming as a two-toned effect.

For the bright touch of color so often shown in the new spring costumes, the tie may be of vivid green satin.

The very long close sleeve has practically passed. The long sleeve with full top and close deep cuff, whether with greatest width at top or at elbow, has had its vogue and is still worn, as is the full long sleeve drooping over some form of narrow cuff or wristband; but the sleeve of the future shows signs of being abbreviated and taking unto itself little undersleeves of muslin or chiffon or other sheer stuff, when it is not frankly short or of elbow length. The short sleeve is always shockingly abused and makes distressing disclosures, but it is comfortable, particularly as a warm weather mode, and most women will welcome it if it ousts the long sleeve for most purposes.



A trimming feature is buttons of every variety, and buttons of cotton material are used for silk waists. All sleeves are long, but collars are not chokers, many excellent models being shown, with the "col montant" in the back only, with a V in the front.

Jumper Frock In White Serge.

Middy Blouse costume for juniors. It is made of white serge trimmed with braid, the skirt being pleated and attached to a sleeveless underbody.

In medium size the dress requires 4¾ yards 44-inch serge, with 1⅛ yards lining 27 inches wide for the underbody.

Close the back seam of the skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge; finish edges above for an opening. Turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations.

Form pleats, creasing on slot perforations and sew to lower edge of underbody, center-fronts and center-backs even.

For the blouse, gather the shoulder edge of front between double "TT" perforations, and make three rows of gathers below, ¼ inch apart. Close underarm and shoulder seams as notched. Face large collar, sew to neck edge, notches and center-backs even. Stitch straight straps of material or ribbon (½ inch wide) to position at the small "o" perforations in front; leave the left ends of straps free and finish for a closing.

Adjust a straight belt of material (3½ inches wide when finished) to position as illustrated.

Close sleeve seam as notched; gather lower edge between double "TT" perforations and add cuff. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched.

Pictorial Review Dress No. 6604. Sizes 8, 10, 12, 14, 15 and 16 years. Price, 15 cents.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WINTER VEGETABLES.

MACARONI, ITALIAN STYLE.—Break a cupful of macaroni in one inch pieces and cook in boiling salted water. Drain and reheat in sauce made of butter, flour, milk and a little cheese. As soon as cheese is melted season with salt and tabasco pepper sauce. Turn on to a serving dish. Sprinkle with ham and garnish with parsley.

Minced Lamb With Peppers.—Add one shredded sweet pepper to remnants of cold lamb which have been chopped fine. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a hot frying pan, add the lamb and peppers, season well and dredge thoroughly with flour. Then add enough stock to moisten. Serve on small squares of buttered toast.

Sweet Potatoes and Marshmallows.—Boil as many sweet potatoes as needed in unsalted water until tender. Remove the skins and mash. Stir into them a little sugar and butter and salt to taste. Place in a buttered baking dish, cover the top with marshmallows and put into the oven until the marshmallows swell and brown.

Escaloped Tomatoes.—One can of tomatoes, two cupfuls of diced bread, one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper. Take a shallow earthen dish, brush bottom with butter, cover with half the diced bread, half the tomatoes, sprinkle with sugar, salt and pepper, then the rest of the bread and tomatoes, sugar, salt and pepper and the butter over top. Put in oven thirty minutes. Serve in dish in which it has been baked either in nickel or silver holder or on asbestos mats.

Scalloped Cauliflower.—Cut cauliflower into small pieces, boil until tender, then put in baking dish and pour over sauce made of one tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of flour, one pint of milk. Pour over cauliflower and bake one-half hour.

Equality.

"No such thing as stuckuppishness about her," says the loyal servitor, defending his mistress against the criticisms of the acquaintance who is inveighing against class discrimination and the attitude of the wealthy toward the working element.

"Well, but don't she order you around?"

"Sure she does! She bawls me out just the same as what she does her husband. She don't make no difference between me an' him even."—Judge.

The Mean Thing!

"Phyllis is the meanest kind of gossip."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because she never tells you anything herself, but gets you to tell her all you know."

Familiar Name.

"Well, Davie, did you enjoy your visit to the museum?"

"Yes, mother."

"Do you remember any of the nice things you saw?"

"Oh, yes, I remember lots of them."

"And can you tell me what they were called?"

"Yes; most of them were called 'Do Not Touch.'"—Exchange.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

The secret of the vitality of the one piece frock is its versatility. Here one sees simply an extension of the front of the waist to give an entirely novel line, although the drooping shoulder attracts attention also. Checked serge and plain taffeta are the materials used; 4 yards of 44-inch serge and 2 of taffeta.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6559. Sizes, 16 to 20 years. Price 15c.

Pictorial Review Patterns may be procured at the J. R. Sullivan and M. Katz & Co. Department store, Fulton.

The Real Albanians.

South of Valona lies the only part of Albania where the people call themselves Albanians, or something like it. It is said, according to Sir Charles Eliot, that the names Arboerf and Arboerec are applied to this region and its inhabitants. The natives of the rest of the country know what is meant when Turks speak of Arnauts and Europeans of Albanians, but they do not use this name themselves, preferring to be called Shkyipetar, which means eagle men. Northern Albanians are also generally known as Ghegs, southern Albanians as Tosks, but these names are considered not quite complimentary.—London Telegraph.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Firmin Cassignol, Noted French Billiardist.

Firmin Cassignol, who has challenged Willie Hoppe for the 18.1 or 18.2 billiard championship, is acknowledged to be the only player in the world who compares favorably in point of skill with the title holder. The professionals in this country themselves admit that they cannot compete against Hoppe with more than a slight possibility of victory.

But now comes Cassignol from France, not expressly for the purpose of playing Hoppe for the championship, though this undoubtedly had some bearing on his making the trip. If nothing else has been accomplished, Cassignol, by his challenge, has aroused an interest in the professional game. In practice he has clinched the belief in many minds that he is better than Hoppe. In touch and closeness of play he is the master, but many are of the opinion that a match between the two will depend on temperament perhaps more than playing ability. There is agreement that Hoppe is one of the coolest exponents of the game, never ruffled — excitement being reflected in his work with the cue.

Perhaps no billiard match ever staged would attract such wide interest as one between Cassignol and Hoppe.

The Temperamental Hal Chase.

Since peace was declared between the National, American and Federal leagues no club has made much of an effort to obtain Hal Chase of the Buffalo Federals. Although Chase was a star in an inferior league, his eccentric conduct while with the Yankees and White Sox has caused major league clubs to hold aloof from the one time great first baseman. It is said that no club in the American league wants Chase, but that if he can obtain a position in the National league no opposition will be offered by the American league.

New Golf Links For Florida.

According to recent announcement, Florida will have two of the finest eighteen hole courses in another year. Contracts have been awarded for their erection, and at Palm Beach work has already begun. The other links will be at St. Augustine, which has not yet a golf course. The new course at Palm Beach will be situated a mile and a half north of the hotels on a strip of land a third of a mile wide and extending from the Atlantic to Lake Worth.

National Bowling Tourney.

The tenth annual national bowling tournament will be held in the Grand Central palace, New York city, from March 18 to April 1 under the auspices of the New York Bowling association. The National Bowling association will again manage the tourney, and Major Gage will be in charge. There will be matches in singles and doubles and for five man teams.

Opening of Baseball Season.

President Ban Johnson of the American league, Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pittsburgh club, and Secretary Heydler of the National league have finished the task of putting into final shape the major league schedules already agreed upon for 1916. It has been definitely decided to open the season Wednesday, April 12.

Navy to Row Syracuse.

After a four years' lapse Syracuse university will resume athletic relations with the United States Naval academy on May 20, when the varsity crew meets the midshipmen in a two mile race on the Severn.

Simple Griddlecakes.

To one well beaten egg add one cupful of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, three-fourths cupful of sweet milk, one tablespoonful of butter melted after measuring and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Beat well and cook on a hot griddle.

AN IMPROVED VILLAGE.

Civic Pride Is Abundantly In Evidence In Ramsey, N. J.

Among the villages where civic pride is abundantly in evidence to the visitor who inspects the municipal equipment is the borough of Ramsey, N. J., less than an hour's ride from New York city, writes F. W. Gertzen, mayor of Ramsey, in the American City. It lies on the old Franklin turnpike, an improved state road, built of amiesite, the direct road for motorists from New York to Tuxedo and "up the state." The main business street is clean, well shaded and inviting looking and is lined with modern stores. Many of the thoroughfares are kept oiled, and most of them have cement sidewalks and curbs. The council meetings are held in the fire house, thus making it a sort of town hall. The borough's pride is the municipally owned water system.

The village schools are well planned and kept in good condition. One building houses all the grades from primary to sixth. It is equipped with modern sanitary arrangements and ample fire protection. On adjoining ground stands the fine high school, built about two years ago. It contains seven classrooms, a large office for the principal and the board of education, a library, an up to date auditorium, seating 300, with manual training rooms, gymnasium and toilet facilities. The entire building is ventilated by one of the modern systems, with a motor in each room.

At the side of the high school two full size clay coated tennis courts have been built. These are so popular as not to be able to meet the demand for their use. There is a fine baseball diamond on another side of the building. Back of the "old school" is a playground for the little folks, neatly set off from the other grounds by a privet hedge.

The ladies of the village have been active in matters of civic improvement. They have formed a free library and have improved the station grounds, giving a bright and welcoming touch to the entrance to the village. The board of health has done considerable work in seeing that dairies are kept in first class condition and has also undertaken publicity work in regard to the killing of mosquitoes. The work of the shade tree commission in caring for and setting out shade trees on newly improved streets deserves commendation. Electric lighting and good police protection are among the other features of the municipal housekeeping which make Ramsey a good place in which to live.

SALE OF NEW HAVEN'S HOLDINGS URGED

Boston, Mass. — Recommendation that the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad should further divest itself of properties not essential parts of its system are contained in a report by the State Public Service Commission to the Legislature. The report is based upon an investigation of the capital expenditures and investments of the road company by the last Legislature.

The Rutland Railroad company stock and the securities of all gas, electric and water companies should be sold within three years, it is declared. Four small street railway companies which the New Haven owns directly in Condecticut should likewise be divorced from the railroad system, accordin gto the commission.

NEW HAVEN WRECK A FULL CREW PLEA

Albany — Before the Assembly Railroad Committee today, representatives of railroad employes referred to the New Haven wreck near Milford, Conn., as an argument in favor of thef ull crew law. For the third time the railroads of this State attacked the statute and the hearing today was on the bill of Assemblyman Hoffman Nickerson, designed to repeal the law and lodge with the Public Service Commission the power to regulate the size of train crews.

John Fitzgibbon, legislative agent for the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, said there is no full crew law in Connecticut.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollections present them to view.
The church, and the store, and the school in the wildwood,
And all the loved spots that my infancy knew.
Last summer I wandered again to the village,
But found not a neighbor of old or his spouse;
The streets were deserted, the farms need tillage —
The town had been killed by the mail-order house.

But one lone survivor, as scared as a rabbit
I found, and asked why the village was dead.
"The town got the mail-order catalog habit,
And that was what killed it forever," he said,
"It was not a far, epidemic or pillage,
No foeman's invasion or robber's carouse;
The money that should have developed the village
Was all sent away to the mail-order house—
The money we earned here—never returned here,
When once it was sent to the mail-order house."

Every city's claim to prosperity must be measured only by the interest taken in community affairs by the citizens, both as individuals and collectively.

* * *

There are three kinds of people in the world, the "Wills," "Wont's" and "Cants". The first accomplish everything the second oppose everything and the third fail in everything.

* * *

If you believe in Fulton, you should buy in Fulton. The mere fact that you live here is pretty good evidence of your faith in Fulton, as is evidenced by the fact that the great majority of our citizens do believe in the City. Faith in Fulton, knowledge of Fulton, optimism for Fulton— these three planted in every man, woman and child in the city with greater assets than a fine harbor on the coast, a dozen trunk railroads, or any of a dozen other natural or industrial advantages, we might enjoy. We believe in Fulton, we are proud of her. Let us support her in every way. Fulton has no reason to be proud of a man who buys in another city.

Let's add this plank to our program:

"Enlarge the spirit of cooperation. Develop larger civic consciousness and civic loyalty. Awaken the spirit of civic unselfishness and an enthusiasm for Fulton, for its men, and for its institutions. Teach each man that he owes something to the community in which he lives; that he must put back part of what he takes out.

Stimulate the loyalty of each citizen to the point where he will say: I will not condemn the Chamber of Commerce for failure to secure results unless I myself have personally given time, thought and diligent effort to help secure those results."

Be sure to attend the public meeting which will be held in the basement of the Public Library this evening at 8 o'clock. The Chamber of Commerce has some real surprises for you. It will be worth your while.

Chautauqua, July 31-August 5, to Bring Some Old, But More New Faces; Six-day Program Announced Last Night

The first business meeting of the Fulton Chautauqua association met in the parlors of the Presbyterian church last evening. A goodly number of members were present and plans for the coming season were discussed.

Mr. George Dalgety, field manager of the Redpath Chautauqua System was present, and outlined the good things planned for this season's program. The date arranged for Chautauqua's appearance in this city is that of the week of Julyy 31-August 5.

The program as outlined by Manager Dalgerty was as follows:

The first day presents Luvatt's Highland Band, the band that has all season been touring with Harry Lauder. It consists of seven men who play the Scotch music on the bagpipes, drums, etc. Following them in the afternoon is Hon. Jos. R. Hanley, in a patriotic address. Mr. Hanley is a whirlwind speaker and comes to the East after three successful years on the western Chautauquas. At night Mr. John B. Ratto, the prince of impersonators, will be seen in a program of characterization of noted men.

On the second afternoon Judge Marcus A. Kavanaugh of the Superior Court of Cook county, Illinois, will deliver a lecture, "Traitors to Justice." It is a plea for one judicial procedure as well as law observance and law enforcement. At night the Ben Greet Players will again appear and play "The Merchant of Venice." Mr. Eric Blind who will play Shylock has appeared in that character with Ellen Terry. Miss Grace Mills gives the finest rendition of Portia of any of her Shakespearian roles. It will be remembered that these two people are the same who played the leading parts last year.

Miss Elsie Baker, one of the best known and best liked contraltos will come on the third day. Miss Baker is known to all music lovers because of her tours with leading symphong orchestras and through her many Victor records. With her will be Mr. William Durieux, cello soloist, formerly with New York Symphony and Kaltenborn String Quartette, and Mr. Frank Hauser, pianist.

On the third night Dr. Russell H. Conwell will deliver the famous lecture, "Acres of Diamonds." This speech has been given over five thousand times and has earned four million dollars. Dr. Conwell was the associate of Gough, Beecher, Wendel Phillips and brings to us the masterpieces of inspirational literature of America.

Band day follows and another great band will be the attraction. Organized by Buhumir Kryl and directed by Cimera, another thirty piece band with several new features, will furnish a memorable organization. With the band will be Miss Lillian B. Hayward, mezzo soprano soloist, who won the Welsh International singing contest three years ago.

The Marigolds is one of the most successful and entertaining company of young ladies that has yet appeared. Voices of beautiful quality and a program of clever fun and some serious numbers, all splendidly presented, forms the musical number for the fifth day. In the afternoon following them will be Mrs. Sarah Tyson Rorer of Cook Book fame and a woman who is known on three continents. Who's Who in America deals with her history at length. She is a rousing speaker and will discuss some Home Problems. Her lecture will be followed by a series of demonstration. At night Alton Packard, cartoonist, will give a delightful series of cartoons, musical numbers of his own concection and an entertainment in general that will leave something to think about.

The last day brings in the afternoon a group of five artists, any one of whom could put on a thoroughly satisfactory concert recital. These five will appear in a grand concert of classical and popular music. Mr. Reed Miller, tenor; Miss Marie Stoddard, soprano; Miss Nevada Van Der Veer, contralto; and Frederick Wheeler, baritone, with Miss Blanch Barbott at the piano, marks a new high mark for star entertainment on the Chautauqua. Each one has been soloist for the New York Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Theodore Thomas Orchestra, the Victor Herbert Orchestra and the different prominent oratorio societies with which they have appeared would be a list of America's leading musical organization.

At night the children of the Junior Chautauqua will present a brief masque or pageant and will followed by Dr. Edward Amherst Ott who last year made such a decided impression in his lecture, "Sour Grapes."

FRENCH WITHDRAW TWO WINGS BEFORE GERMAN DRIVE; LINE UNBROKEN

London—With Emperor William, the Crown Prince, General von Falkenhyn and virtually every member of the General Staff on the battlefield, and with the Kaiser himself directing the army and exhorting the troops to win a decisive victory the German drive for Verdum yesterday was continued with ever increasing violence.

It becomes more evident with every hour's reports that the battle raging on a twenty-five mile front from Malancourt to Etain is the most desperately fought and the most important since the battle of the Yser, in November, 1914. It is estimated that for this offensive, in preparation for more than two weeks, the army directly commanded by the Crown Prince has been brought up to more than 300,000 men.

While the number of French engaged is not known, military observers here, judging from well understood conditions, estimate the dence to consist of between 300,000 and 400,000 men.

The centre of the titanic struggle for two days has been the eight miles between the Meuse River and the Ornes Ridge, north of Verdun. The first attacks were launched with tremendous force against the Caures forest and the positions before the villages of Brabant and Haumont. In the meantime an intense artillery fire was maintained against the positions west of the Meuse as far as

OBJECTIONS TO SALE OF ABANDONED CANAL LAND SUSTAINED IN ALBANY

City Attorney Hillick's request made to the Commissioners of the Land Office, in Albany, relative to the sale of abandoned canal lands in this city resulted in a postponement of action until one month later. In the meantime the city is privileged to file application in addition to those already sent to Albany, which include that of Mr. F. A. Gage.

According to Mr. Hillick, it is the opinion of the city authorities that the city should have a street 30 feet wide along the present line of Wall st. This land was taken by the State without compensation and it is the sentiment that the State should allow the city to have the necessary land for highway purposes.

The City will, in all probability, file an application for the use of this land as a highway and a further application for the grant of of the land lying west for a public market, leaving Mr. Gage ground sufficient to have laid a railroad switch leading to his factory. Papers will be prepared at once by Mr. Hillick, and the case will in all probability be heard by the Land Office commission at its next meeting which takes place on March 24th.

Wall st. which adjoins the proposed market site is only 12 feet wide from curb to curb, and it is necessary in order to properly conduct the public market to have a suitable highway on the east side. The street would not only serve for the market but would also be beneficial to a number of enterprises located north of the site.

A WISE MOVE

The Aluminum company at Massena, which has endeavored to establish a community feeling amongst its employes by providing hospitals and entertainment ,have wisely started a new movement to give an opportunity to its foreign employes to learn to read, write and speak the English language. There are about 1,200 foreigners employed, under 30 years old, who desire to improve their condition, and the company is anxious to help them. They recognize that the first and fundamental necessity is a knowledge of the language of their adopted country. The company is to hire a special teacher, a college graduate preferred, who will be placed in charge of this work, all of which will be under the supervision of the superintendent of schools. The company will get more intelligent workers and further than that will not be as likely to have trouble with its workers through misunderstanding. A high school boy broke up a riotous strike at the Ansonia brass works, Connecticut, by having a knowledge of seven languages, so that he could explain away the misunderstandings of groups of workers of different nationalities. It would be better yet if instead of one man having to understand seven languages, all the nationalities employed could speak one language. The project of the Aluminum company is in the direction of making good Americans and also good workmen.—Watertown Times.

"TAINTED" MONEY

One must respect the moral courage of any person who sacrifices ease, comfort or power at the dictates of conscience, but the case of Miss Kitchin, who refuses the $40,000 which Francis F. Ripley of Brooklyn left to her because Mr. Ripley made his money "in mortgages," is so devoid of common sense that it makes sympathy impossible and respect at least a little difficult.

One gets his bearings in the matter by contrasting this refusal with the healthful optimism of the late Edward Everett Hale when the cry of "tainted money" was first raised against Rockefeller contributions to some religious work. "Tainted money," exclaimed the veteran preacher; "I would take all the tainted money I could lay my hands on, and then put it to such uses that it would do good for all time."

If all tainted money could be put through the Hale disinfecting process this world would be made a very much better and happier place even in one generation. It would hardly take a century to wipe out poverty and ignorance, and the physical and social diseases that spring from them. Miss Kitchin's philosophy leads nowhere except to the righteousness of one individual and to a testimony whose sincerity is proved by the sacrifice involved, Such testimony has been valuable, from the days of the martyrs who risked wild beasts or the stake instead of merely the discomforts of life in a hall bedroom, but in a town which is crying loud for money to carry on all kinds of beneficent work a refusal of the power to help such constructive work loses most of its appeal. Living morally and spiritually to one's self alone seems to most of us to be a very limited, not to say cold, sort of right living, in a world where helpfulness is so much needed and where one of the first requirements for helpfulness is the power to do the good one sees the need for.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THEY CAN'T EXPECT TO BE LOVED

A truly pathetic question was addressed by the President of the National Life Underwriters' Association to the members of the New York State section when assembled for their annual dinner here this week. What Mr. Woods wanted to know was why the men representing one of the country's greatest, best, and soundest businesses were the least welcome of all guests in the offices of other buiness men.

The inquiry was evidently of the sort called rhetorical, for the questioner proceeded to answer himself without waiting for anybody else to do it. The trouble was, he said, that life insurance agents did work for which they had not received an adequate amount of proper training.

As the propounder of this theory is presumably well informed concerning the state of facts in his own domain, it would not become outsiders to deny or even to doubt his assertion as to the training of insurance agents for their task, but for a phenomenon as complex as is the status of solicitors for the insurance companies his explanation is suspiciously simple. That these agents as a class are viewed by the great majority of the objects of their attentions with something between apprehension and hostility—that they are avoided when possible and at other times received with sadness and heard with impatience —all this is indubitable. But that they are untrained in their art or trade is the last charge that would be brought against them by those whose ears they succeed in gaining and holding. On the contrary, to the layman they often seem to have an awful skill in making people do what the people want to leave undone.

And the unpopularity of the agents is due far less to incompetence than to competence as persuaders. The truth is that though everybody knows life insurance to be an excellent thing there is something in the acquisition thereof which, like the making of wills, is as repugnant to human instinct as it is commendable to human reason. There hangs about it the menace of death, the odor of the grave, and it demands and enforces explicit recognition of those ultimate inevitabilities that nobody really likes to think about. It is with this feeling that life insurance agents will always have to contend, and they might as well resign themselves to the fact that, though they may in time come to be respected by all, fervent affection will never be their reward.—N. Y. Times.

THE QUIRK TODAY

World Film Corporation presents the 5-part Chas. K. Harris Feature photoplay, "Hearts of Men," based upon the story by Mr. Harris.

The opening scenes of this photoplay are laid in Germany, where two young men are shown at work in a perfume manufactory. One of them has devised an Arabian perfume of great exquisiteness. (His covetous friend steals the formula and decamps to the United States, whither in due time he is followed by the patentee.)

The two men drift apart and only meet again when the thief has grown rich out of the proceeds of the sale of "The Arabian Rose". The poor man demands the money that is his due, which is refused. Thereupon a quarrel ensues.

The little children of the former friends appear and fall in love, which further complicates matters. Finally the two former friends become reconciled through the instrumentality of the little children.

School scenes are frequent in this photoplay, which is well produced, cleverly acted, and competently cast.

TIME TO THINK ABOUT THINGS

It would be extremely extraordinary to find opinions united upon the wisdom of establishing a public market at the intersection of East 1st and Oneida sts., or for that matter, at any other point, hence the subject remains open for debate, there being but one way to settle it, and that is by making the venture. It is true that the city needs a public market, but whether the right time has arrived is another thing.

It is unnecessary to mention the number of things needed in the city. Everybody knows of and about them, one of them being a community center—a common meeting place where all classes may rest and be refreshed. Especially is this true at the present time, or since it is an established fact that the milk station is to reopen under safe and sane management. With that important addition made to the city's industries we can expect to realize more activity in local trading circles. At least that should be the logical and inevitable result of having an increased number of dairymen driving in and out of the city each day. It therefore behooves the city to hip, hip, stepping faster every day, as other towns have done to make themselves attractive in the eyes of the people who want to trade, but who, in too many instances, are driven away to more congenial surroundings.

As one single instance of the good that comes to a town by establishing a community house on a small, economical scale, the following article is reprinted from "The Country Gentleman:

For forty years the quiet county-seat town of Marysville, Kansas, has, like other country towns, wished it could do something to bring the business men and the near-by farmers closer together. But the farmers appeared to think that the business men were selfish and the merchants blamed the mail-order houses and felt that they were misunderstood.

Entertainments for the farmer were planned and well attended, but after they were over the farmers' wives found it as wearisome as ever to sit in the stores after shopping was done and wait for their husbands to bring round the teams or car for the homeward trip.

Two years ago the leading men and women adopted another plan. Just off the main street was a brick building, 50 by 135 feet, erected by a public-spirited banker for a church recreation hall. It had not proved popular and was about to be abandoned. The new organization transformed it into a Community House, and it is one of the striking examples of what public spirit can do when rightly aroused.

Entering its broad door one finds a large reception room. In it are the desk of the matron, easy-chairs, tables loaded with magazines, generous rugs, home-like comfort. In one corner is the office of the County Y. M. C. A. secretary; adjoining is a playroom for boys, with games and boys' books and papers; there is a public library of several thousand books; and finally a white nursery with beds and chairs for little children. Opposite is a room for the women's clubs, with another library and more magazines.

This house is the town forum. Here meet the committees and societies; it is free to everyone. Farmers' wives bring their babies and leave them in charge of the matron while they go shopping; they come here to rest while their husbands are busy in the stores. Short entertainments are given frequently, and if a distinguished visitor is in town he is asked to speak.

The country women make it headquarters for their neighborhood visits, sometimes twenty or more bringing their lunches and having a picnic dinner in the big room when they come to town for shopping.

In the basement is a great tiled pool filled the year round with aerated water and in charge of an attendant. The boys and girls of town revel in the plunge and it is the favorite resort of many older folks. In the rear is a gymnaism. The floor is used as a roller skating rink and the gallery has a roller skating race track. In the gymnasium are held the business men's dinners.

All this takes money—about $2,200 a year. The men and women of the town contribute the larger part, giving five or eight dollars a year each, the subscription carrying with it the privilege of the pool and the rink, for which a small charge is made. More than 200 out-of-town visitors a month register at the Community House. The townsfolk wander in and out as if it were their club—as in a sense it is. The receipts are ample for its maintenance and it is the pride of the county.

The Community House has solved two problems: For the town —it has made a place off the streets where the boys and girls can go and under proper management have entertainment, healthful and moral. It has brought the men and women of the city closer together and has made them better acquainted; it has helped the town spirit and crystalized it into neighborliness. For the surrounding country—it has developed a better understanding of the oneness of town and farm.

Farmers and their wives have met the city folks and have learned that all of them are really working out about the same problems. Many farmers have become contributors to the maintenance fund.

The success of this Community House lies in the fact that it belongs in spirit to the whole community, that it is free, that no dues or taxes are levied—it is the door of friendliness opened by men and women who want to extend good will.

HOME TRADE

(By I. E. Hyde.)

Walt Mason may boost home trade,
  And so would I, no doubt;
But read the lines below and find
  A few things I found out.
I find I must renew my floor
  And buy a brand new rug;
And for this once I give home trade
  A breezer on the mug.
Home trade quotes eighteen-fifty
  While Roebuck says fourteen
(I'll buy my rug in Illinois
  And so would you, I ween).
I go to buy a davenport,
  I'm asked a thirty brick;
In Illinois it's twenty bricks;
  I say, that looks like luck.
If the merchants here in Fulton
  Want a profit big today
They'll find the people here at home
  Will trade the other way.
They think our credit is not good;
But, bless your heart, it is.
Just watch that wise mail-order house;
They'll run you out of bizz.
They're instalment list you cannot read,
  Its longer than your arm.
I'm pleading for a cut in price;
  I'm wishing you no harm.
If you cut your profits square in two,
  You'll boost your trade this spring;
You'll want to get up early
  And hear the birdies sing.
It's not merely price of furniture
  I find it all about
Home merchants shouting "Cash," to me
  Is like a baboon with the gout.
If I patronize some foreign trade
  And save a dollar there,
I can make it go as far as you,
  And that is on the square.
Yet if a cuss does fall for you.
Don't pinch him when he's down,
Just make a price that he can reach—
  Help boost your own home town.

BANKING PROSPERITY

The aggregated returns of 7,607 national banks on December 31 show an increase during 1915 of $1,010,095,177 in loans. That corresponds roughly with the amount of American securities thought to have been imported, but the agreement of amounts is only a coincidence. Only a few hundred of these thousands of banks loan largely upon securities, and the activity of business sufficiently shows that the increase of loans must have been to a large extent commercial accommodation. That the situation is one of accumulating strength appears from the larger increase of deposits by $2,163,000,000. Part of this is accumulation of profits, part the transfer of foreign capital here for safety, part the unexpended proceeds of foreign loans or security sales. The specie also increased $154,000,000, besides the increase in the Federal Reserve system.

The aggregate resources of the banks are $13,467,000,000, an increase of $2,110,000,000, and an unprecedented total. In the background are the State banks and trust companies, and the unaccustomed facilities of the Federal Reserve system. Those relying for their happiness upon finding food for worry must look elsewhere. —N. Y. Times.

NATION BOWS BEFORE HIS MAJESTY AMERICAN BABY, OUR GREATEST ASSET

Baby Week to Be Observed by Hundreds of Cities and Towns Throughout the Country.

Importance of Birth Registration Vividly Pointed Out by Sponsors of the Movement.

HIS royal highness the American baby will have the entire nation bowing before him during the week March 4-11. For that is baby week, and hundreds of cities and towns will devote seven full days to the betterment of the country's greatest asset—its babies.

Baby week begins Saturday, March 4, in Jewish synagogues as baby Sabbath. The next day will be baby Sunday in the Christian churches, and ministers will preach on child conservation. Then throughout the week there will be other features, including a mother's day, a father's day and others.

Baby week is only two years old, having originated in Chicago, but it has spread all over the United States and even to our insular possessions in its brief existence. A women's club in the British West Indies has written to the federal children's bureau for information about what baby week means and expects to initiate a local campaign. The Philippines will likewise take part in the celebrations. Alaska also is progressive, and even the Indian reservations in the west have planned unique methods of teaching mothers how to improve the papooses.

Wisconsin initiated a state wide campaign in which especial emphasis was placed on adequate nursing care and instruction for prospective mothers. In Nebraska a child welfare exhibit was prepared by the women's clubs of Omaha and Lincoln and will travel about among the clubs throughout the state after the baby week in those two cities is over. One town in Maryland is going to have a birth registration day and announces that an enterprising merchant has promised to give a toothbrush to every mother who goes to the city hall to find out whether her baby's birth is registered. Another community is having a competition for the cleverest window plan for baby week publicity.

Many leaders in the movement hold that the registration of babies is one of the most important features of the different campaigns and have pointed to many instances where lax methods have caused much trouble.

Birth Record, a Box of Cigars!

When a young woman wanted to go to Europe as a nurse and applied for her passport she was told that she must furnish official information of her birth, with the date, place and parents' names. She wrote to her home city for a copy of the official record, but it transpired that her birth had never been recorded. The physician who had attended her mother is no longer living, and the only available record was found in the following newspaper item, under date of Monday, July 16, 1894:

A baby girl made her appearance Saturday morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. ——. In consequence a box of cigars made its appearance at the Republican office last evening.

The life of a wealthy New Yorker who was under sentence of death in London on the charge of being a spy depended on the official record of his birth. No other proof of his American citizenship would satisfy the British authorities, but examination of the birth records in New York disclosed the fact that his birth had never been recorded. Fortunately it was possible to procure affidavits from the physician who attended at the birth of the condemned man and from two citizens who knew his parents at the time, and by special arrangement it was possible to save his life.

A farmer in Indiana left his valuable farm in trust to his unthrifty son, to go to his granddaughter on her twenty-first birthday. When she believed she was twenty-one and claimed her inheritance, her father disputed her age and declared she was only nineteen. The family Bible was consulted, but the leaf of the record was gone. The court was in a quandary. At last a neighbor remembered that a valuable cow belonging to the grandfather had given birth to a calf on the day that the girl was born, and he could swear to the coincidence.

Perhaps the grandfather had recorded the date of the birth of the calf. His farm books showed that he had done so, and the date of the birth of the girl was thus established. This story has a cheerful ending. In too many instances hardship and loss have been suffered because of a similar lack of indisputable birth records.

Another of many examples shows that a child born in this country of Swiss parents was consigned to a life of poverty and drudgery because for want of a birth certificate she could not establish with the government of Switzerland her right to a legacy of $12,000 left her by a paternal uncle who died in that country.

Mortality of Babies.

It is roughly estimated that about one in ninety of all the miners employed in this country die every year from all causes combined. Yet a calculation based on census figures puts the mortality among babies at 124 per 1,000. Because we have no adequate birth registration laws it cannot be accurately shown how many babies are born in our country year by year nor how many babies die.

Dr. Wilbur, former vital statistician of the census bureau, estimates that 300,000 babies die annually in the United States before reaching the age of one year. The children's bureau, reducing this estimate to terms of total population, says:

"It is as if Chicago, the second city of the United States, were to be wiped out of existence every ten years, not a single life being saved. It means the annihilation each decade of a population as large as that of the state of New Jersey and greater than that of such states as Alabama, California, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia or Wisconsin."

Such a statement grips the imagination powerfully enough, yet it does not even touch upon the vast sum total of human anguish which it cost the mothers of our country to give these children to the world nor their greater anguish at losing them.

Infant mortality appears never so tragic as when it is remembered that the highest medical skill of the day is authority for the statement that most of it is unnecessary. The New York state department of health has adopted for its slogan these words, significant of the enlightened spirit of the times: "Public health is purchasable. Within natural limitations a community can determine its own death rate."

For decades past Uncle Sam has had a corps of experts whose duties included the studying and remedying of causes of mortality among the horses, cattle and hogs of the country. Within more recent years—a bit tardily, perhaps, but with enthusiasm—the old man has turned his attention to the babies.

What We Owe the Babies.

A baby is entitled to vigorous, good, intelligent parents. There is a vast amount of illness and mortality among parents from tuberculosis, from occupational disease, from industrial accidents and from diseases like typhoid, for all of which society is largely responsible.

The baby is entitled not only to both his parents, but to the physical essentials of a good home, such as fresh air and sunshine and clean water and good drainage. He is entitled to intelligent and wholesome care. But how many parents have had little or no opportunity to learn what their babies need or to provide for their babies that which they know to be necessary?

Here we touch, of course, the whole great problem of poverty and ignorance which must be solved before all babies can have their full inheritance of health and right living. But even before this fundamental problem is solved there is much that every community can do which seriously wishes to serve its babies by such expedients as public health nurses, by infant welfare stations, by a carefully supervised milk supply, by instruction for mothers and by special provision for families where the mother of a baby is compelled to earn the living.

One-fortieth of the life of the nation is renewed every year. It is for us to determine how that new life shall be protected.

In Boston this year the retail stores, the Milk and Baby Hygiene association, the state board of health, the officers of the Floating hospital, the Women's Municipal league, the hospitals, the settlement houses and the boy scouts will co-operate in the movement. Many of the city's most prominent physicians will lecture, and free exhibits will be on display all over town.

Tuesday, March 14, will be known there as "Mother's day" and will be featured by a number of lectures on prenatal and obstetrical subjects by a number of well known authorities. Thursday, the 9th, will be "Father's day," and a mass meeting will be held at Faneuil hall from 12 noon to 2 p. m. The boy scouts will render active service in distributing a flag to families who have a baby less than one year old, and on a day which will be designated as "Flag day" the flags will be displayed from the various homes.

Sell Stamps In Philadelphia.

In Philadelphia 1,000,000 little life saving stamps printed by the Baby week committee will be sold at 1 cent each, or as much more as the buyers wish to give, during the better baby campaign.

The stamp sale proceeds will form the nucleus of a summer fund for the baby saving work of the city, to be conducted in outdoor hospitals, on settlement roofs, in health centers and in baby clinics, which will be held in trust for the sick little ones of the poor by the Child federation.

By this simple and inexpensive means every man, woman and child may be a participant in the campaign.

The stamps represent a mother and child and are printed in colors after the painting by Eleanor Plaisted Abbot, which has been used as a symbol of baby saving work for several years.

Pittsburgh Baby Week.

The purpose of Pittsburgh's baby week was thus summed up in the leaflets freely circulated among those who might be interested in taking part in the campaign:

Fundamentally the purpose of baby week is educational. It seeks:

First.—To bring to every Pittsburgher the fact that it is sound civic economy to reduce the sickness and death rates among babies and to improve the coming generation by measures which will keep the baby and mother well before and after the baby's birth. The community's responsibility for its babies is the central thought for baby week.

Second.—To tell the people of Pittsburgh facts concerning the present status of infant mortality in their city and what is being done, both by public and private organizations, to improve conditions which injuriously affect the health of their babies.

Third.—To give directly to the fathers and mothers, the brothers and sisters of babies such information about the care of babies as will result in better care and feeding during the summer months, when the mortality rate is especially and needlessly high.

Fourth.—To effect a better understanding which may co-ordinate the various agencies, public and private, which have baby welfare as their primary object, with a view to avoiding duplication and waste of effort.

BACK TO JUNGLES TO TALK TO APES

Professor Garner Will Again Try to Learn Monkey Speech.

RECORDS IT ON PHONOGRAPH

Monkey Proof Cage His Home as He Gets Chummy With Inhabitants of African Forests—To Take Moving Pictures of Animals—Uses Ammonia as Weapon.

"Our'h"—Hello, there, my friend! Where are you?

"Eunh"—Here I am under these palms, not far away.

"Qhui"—Well, wait there a moment. I want to join you.

Which is monkey talk, small chit-chat of the African jungle, as interpreted by Professor Richard L. Garner. It is the talk of the little apes that swing by their tails. It is not the talk of the giant gorilla, which walks upright like a man, or the talk of the chimpanzee. Of their conversations, however, he has some samples.

Within ten days or two weeks, maybe, Professor Garner will sail from New York for the French Kongo, his scientific hunting ground. He goes partly on his own account to pursue his studies of ape language and partly on behalf of the Smithsonian institution and the Bronx zoo, for each of which he expects to obtain a collection of invaluable animals and natural history specimens.

In a Monkey Proof Cage.

For nearly twenty-five years Professor Garner has been going to Africa to imprison himself in a cage, too strong for even the mighty arms of gorillas to rend apart, while he listened night and day to catch the strange inflections of the ape voice. Now he can converse with little monkeys and big, returning their stare, but there is much that remains to be learned.

He has many big ideas for his new expedition. The study of ape language is his first scientific aim. He will attempt to increase his vocabulary of monkey words. He will take with him phonograph records for the recording of monkey language. He will try to capture two or three young gorillas for the Bronx zoo and two or three young chimpanzees as well.

"I shall go to the French Kongo," said Professor Garner, "and will establish headquarters in the Lake Fernan Vaz basin, about two degrees south of the equator and perhaps 150 miles inland from the coast. Thereafter I shall work inland to about 500 miles from the coast. As on my former expeditions, I shall construct a strong cage of stout steel rods about five-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, the whole inclosed by a netting of steel wire. The cage will be disguised by a covering of branches and leaves. Within the cage I shall have all of my necessary equipment for a long vigil—revolvers, a magazine rifle, three moving picture cameras, an ammonia squirt gun to discourage too inquisitive prowlers, my food suply, and so on.

Gorillas to Be Lured.

"I know of a pineapple plantation that will exactly suit my purposes, and I plan to lure within this plantation and to my cage many gorillas. You cannot find a gorilla merely by plunging into the jungle after him. You must bring him to you by the lure of food, by calls he understands, by scents agreeable to him. Naturally I expect to get some wonderful moving pictures and to capture several young gorillas and chimpanzees. I have arranged with the Smithsonian institution to have one of their men accompany me or to join me after I have made my arrangements in the jungle. He will assemble a collection for the institution.

"I am especially anxious to capture a young chimpanzee which can be trained as satisfactorily as was Susie, which I presented to the Bronx zoo several years ago. She died a year ago in an epidemic. Susie could do about anything that a four-year-old child could do. She could assemble geometrical figures, both plane and solid; could count up to three perfectly and up to four imperfectly; could select six colors and understood and obeyed at least 150 commands and about 300 words.

"This will be the most important expedition I ever attempted. Twenty-five years ago scientists used to laugh at my opinions, but they don't any longer. The novelty has worn off, and experiments have shown that I was correct in my deductions about the ability of apes to convey ideas by means of the spoken word."

KNIFE REALLY A GUN.

New York Police Warned of Arrival of New Deadly Weapon.

A new kind of dangerous weapon, consisting of a 22 caliber pistol, which is to all appearances an ordinary silver pocketknife, has arrived in New York. The police have been instructed to be unusually careful in "frisking" prisoners, not to be deceived by the device.

The knife contains two blades, with a heavy handle, a spring on the side of which can be moved by the thumb. The front part of the handle then turns around to admit the cartridge.

The firing is done by pressing the side spring.

THE COST OF WAR.

National Debts In Europe That Are Mortgaging the Future.

"The national debts of England, France and Germany are now equal to from one-tenth to one-sixth of the total wealth of these nations, and the interest charges on the debts are appreciable portions of the entire income of the nations," declared President C. R. Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin in a recent address.

The national debts of the three countries at the end of 1915, according to his figures, are: United Kingdom, $10,419,000,000; Germany, $7,275,000,000; France, $10,514,000,000. The annual interest charge upon these debts is about as follows: United Kingdom, $521,000,000; Germany, $364,000,000; France, $526,000,000. The total wealth and incomes of the nations are about as follows: United Kingdom, wealth $90,000,000,000, income $12,250,000,000; Germany, wealth $80,000,000,000, income $10,500,000,000; France, wealth $65,000,000,000, income $7,500,000,000.

The magnitude of these debts will be appreciated when it is recalled that the debt of the United States after the civil war, at that time the most colossal debt of any nation, was $2,758,000,000.

These unexampled debts and the industrial and regulatory measures which have accompanied the war will result, Dr. Van Hise declared, in a social transformation in Europe following the war at a speed never before approached.

Forests Left In the United States.

Before the coming of the white man the forests of the United States covered an area of 800,000,000 acres and contained about 5,200,000,000,000 board feet of lumber, according to Leonard Lundgren, writing in the Engineering Magazine. The forests today cover 550,000,000,000 acres and contain about 2,900,000,000,000 board feet of lumber. The annual cut is about 43,000,000,000,000 board feet. Seventy-six per cent of the forest land is privately owned, 21 per cent is held by the United States in the national forests, and 3 per cent is on other public land.

Money to Burn.

Millions of dollars in Confederate currency have been put to a use never dreamed of when printed. A canny individual bought this money up for years and in turn sold it to a big electric company for a good price. For certain small incandescent lamps which the electrical people were manufacturing a certain kind of carbon was needed which could best be obtained from paper made out of sea grass. The Confederate money was all made out of sea grass paper. From this the carbons for the lamps could be manufactured.

Coal Under the Peat.

At one time iron ore was found in considerable quantities in the northeasterly provinces of the Netherlands. In late years apparently less has been found. Recently, however, further deposits of iron ore have been found in the province of Drenthe, where it was discovered previously. These deposits were revealed by the digging of peat in the bogs of that section. The ore is found in layers just under the peat and also in collections or heaps six or ten feet high and thirty to fifty feet in circumference.

War Will Produce Smaller Men.

The present war is likely to produce many and new racial conditions. The killing off of so many of the strongest and best physical type of men will produce in the next generation a race of men calculated at an inch shorter in stature. The same effect was observed after the Napoleonic wars. Also the length of life will be materially affected.—New York Herald.

Gets Them Both Ways.

A Cleveland restaurant has provided a novel luncheon menu. On one page is the caption, "If You Wish to Reduce, Select Your Order From This Page." On the other pages is a list of dishes that will add to one's weight. The menus are based on United States government tables.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Gallstones.

Removal by surgical operation is the very best treatment for gallstones. When the conditions of health are such that surgical treatment is inadvisable then palliative treatment may be effective. As much as possible starchy foods (potatoes, rice, oatmeal, beans, etc.) and sweet foods (pastries, candies, preserves, jellies) must be avoided. Daily exercise is most important. Walking for an hour or riding a bicycle, alkaline medicines or mineral waters are helpful and aid in preventing the formation of gallstones. A half teaspoonful of phosphate of sodium in a small teacupful of hot water taken half an hour before meals three times a day is a valuable remedy. Three glasses of alkaline mineral water should be taken each day—a glass between each meal. During an attack of colic heat in the form of a flannel wrung out of very hot water and sprinkled with a few drops of spirits of turpentine should be kept constantly over the painful locality. At this time a half teacupful of olive oil should be taken. Drink it as soon as the pain begins.

BELL-ANS
Absolutely Removes Indigestion. One package proves it. 25c at all druggists.

Some Queer Ones

Berlin, Ont., is to have another name if the citizens have their way.

Mr. Golden Rule of Washington was arrested in Philadelphia on a charge of deserting his family.

"When God gave folks legs he intended them to be used," said Pittsburgh pastor in advocating trousers for women.

Because there was an orange instead of a green stripe in shirt clerk showed him Pittsburgh Irishman wrecked haberdashery.

"Go, gab, gobble and git" made up the life of Colorado man, he says in divorce suit, as a result of money inherited by wife.

Why women hate rats demonstrated in Milwaukee street car when rodent got under woman's sk't and she had partially to disrobe to get rid of it.

Jar of guns used in testing shells kills chicks before they are hatched, and Bethlehem Steel company is having to pay damages to the farmers around Townbank, Pa.

ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS OR GO TO THE BUGHOUSE

Test Used In New York on Prisoners Suspected of Being "Nuts."

"What is the difference between a fly and a butterfly?"

A fly is a baseball batted to a certain altitude. Buckwheat cakes make the butter fly.

That is one answer. But if you utter it to any police lieutenant of New York you will be conducted politely to the mental studio of Dr. Louis E. Bisch of Columbia university, official psychologist and alienist to the police department.

Dr. Bisch has given to every one of the 552 police lieutenants a list of questions a lieutenant must ask any person arraigned before him whose mental balance he doubts.

The doctor has also presented to every lieutenant a blackboard and ten simple problems, which are to be submitted to the subject who appears to be a "nut."

If the suspected person fails to answer most of the questions and problems—then turn to Dr. Bisch.

Here are some questions or commands the lieutenants are instructed to ask or deliver:

"What is a book?"

"What is a table?"

"What is a horse?"

"What day is this?"

Some highly intelligent persons could not answer that at 12:03 a. m.

"What is the difference between wood and glass?"

"What is the difference between paper and cloth?"

"Count backward from 20 to 1."

"Give me the days of the week, the month, the year."

"Repeat the numbers 64,982, 62,139, 437,159, 6,419,386."

"What ought one to do when one has missed a train?"

"What ought one to do when one has been struck by some one who did not do it on purpose?"

"What ought one to do when one has broken something that does not belong to him?"

"Why does one judge a person more by what he does than by what he says?"

"Make up a statement, using the words 'New York,' 'money' and 'river' and other words that may be necessary to form a complete thought."

"Give three words that rime with 'day,' with 'spring,' with 'ill.'"

Dr. Bisch has been at the lineup of prisoners in police headquarters every morning recently. He took the prisoners who appeared mentally or morally defective to his brain laboratory and examined them carefully. The punishment or medical treatment of the prisoners depended upon Dr. Bisch's diagnosis. Thus if a man answered correctly, "Twice two make four," he was merely fined $5. If he said, "Minus ten equals two cold bottles," the psychopathic ward at Bellevue opened for him.

Holding Up the Earth.

According to East Indian mythology, the earth is supported by eight white elephants.

First Duty of a City.

A city is in reality a kind of apparatus or mechanism consisting of fixed places in which to live, work and be amused, with means of transportation of products to and from desired points.

The first duty of the city is to furnish a free means of access, belonging to the public, to the private property of each individual. Such avenues of communication in the rural districts are called roads and are widely separated, but in cities they are multiplied and called streets. It must always be possible, and it is possible, for a citizen to take to the highways and reach without interference the land of any other citizen throughout the United States.

TROOPS EAGER TO SPEND THEIR CASH

Hucksters Near the Trenches Make Big Money.

REPORTER TRIES SCHEME.

Finds That Men Are Anxious to Spend Their Coin For Any Article, However Useless—Gives Profit to Officer to Buy Delicacies For the Men—Had Cleared a Gain of 500 Per Cent.

So much has been said about the way the soldiers are robbed by hucksters who manage to circulate just behind the front and offer a miscellany of goods for sale that the French chamber of deputies has sent commissaires to the front to investigate the question. These hucksters are generally residents in the military zone and obtain permission to carry on a trade in objects ranging from a piece of soap to an anthology of French poets as a recompense for the losses they have suffered.

A newspaper man who had left the army from illness determined to become a huckster for a day to see what there was in the business. His experiment seems to show that at the bottom the fault, if it exists, is due as much to the inherent desire felt by human nature to buy something when the opportunity has not occurred for some time.

About 6:30 one morning he laid out his little stock on the steps of a church in a little village of some thirty houses, four or five of which were still intact. To his right he placed the soaps, of many colors, and the perfumes to the left, letter paper, collections of songs, and in the middle knitted goods, socks, etc., under which were hidden a few bottles—not bottles containing alcohol (the risk of prison would have been too great), but of light drinks of legal degree of spirit.

Pay Ten Times the Price.

"How much is the mirror?" asked his first customer.

"One franc (20 cents)."

It was a little mirror sold at 2 cents in Paris, but it was taken at ten times the price without an attempt to bargain.

Ten cents for a glass of light wine about as big as a thimble, yet the bottle was emptied in five minutes. Five cents, a sheet of paper with Joffre's portrait. An automobilist paid 8 francs ($1.60) for a bottle of eau de cologne and offered two 5 franc bills. He refused to take change and was delighted with a child's trumpet to make up the remaining 40 cents. He at once began to blow it and his comrades to dance to his music.

For men who had just come back from six days' burial in the trenches to buy sometimes meant civilization and life. The seller was soon cleared of all his goods. What had cost him $10.40 had cleared $65.20, a profit of more than 500 per cent.

Before leaving the village the amateur huckster handed over the $65.20 to the captain of the section to be used to add some delicacies to the men's rations.

The officer smiled and invited the donor to lunch, adding a few words which showed that officers are no more free than men from the desire to buy something. "If you have anything left we will buy it."

REORGANIZING PATENT OFFICE

Commissioner to Act at Once Under Law Just Passed.

Reorganization of the United States patent office working force will be undertaken immediately under a new law passed by congress and just approved by President Wilson. Commissioner of Patents Ewing said that he expects greatly to increase the efficiency of his staff by encouraging competent examiners to remain longer in the government service.

For years the patent office has been regarded as a government training school for patent lawyers who enter private practice at about the time they become valuable to the government. Under the reorganization the number of examiners in the several grades is to be equalized. This will permit quicker promotion from the lower grades and, according to Mr. Ewing, will reduce the number of resignations.

The new law also removes the limitation against the employment of only two women as second assistant examiners. Any number of women may now be appointed. "Women make excellent assistant examiners," said Commissioner Ewing, "and should be appointed whenever opportunity offers."

Passion Play Christ's Fate.

Persistent rumors from Germany fail to substantiate the one that Anton Lang, the famous Christus of the Passion Play at Oberammergau, has been killed in the fighting in Champagne. Lang, who is a potter by trade, was reported several months ago as having yet failed to join the German army, but as preparing for Red Cross work.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

"There now run along we have done all we can for you," said the Legislature of Illinois to the women of the state when it passed the bill which gave them unicipal and presidential suffrage.

But the State Supreme Court on February 16 decided that the Legislature, if it had thought about it, might have given women the right to vote for delegates to national nominating conventions, also for state central and precinct committeemen, but that it hadn't and therefore that much agitated question in Illinois must now be considered settled. Women in Illinois can vote for Wilson but they can't help nominate him.

The democratic leader, early in the month, introduced a bill into the New Jersey Senate which would give women the right to vote for President. There is no question in regard to its being constitutional as the constitution of the United States vests in the state legislatures the power to determine how presidential electors shall be chosen.

* * *

The report of the investigation of the health departments of the 227 cities in this country with a population of 25,000 or more made by the Russel Sage Foundation places Seattle in equal suffrage Washington at the head of the list and Clinton, Iowa at the bottom. Seattle spends 98 cents per capita for the health of its citizens and Clinton less than one cent.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs which holds its biennial in New York City in May will consider at that time definite plans for reform in the matter of women's dress. This is a subject on which women as a class have no more voice than they do in politics. It is an intricate part of our commercial system controlled by men and against which the individual woman is helpless.

Little Smike, trembling and hungry and ill clad who gurgled soup without a spoon in a Yorkshire boarding school fifty years ago, is not extinct as the modern readers of Dickens have supposed. He has been rediscovered in large numbers by Commissioner Strong appointed by Governor Whitman to investigate the orphan asylums to which New York city sends its dependent children.

Commissioner Strong reports that a score of these institutions vouched for by the State Board of Charities are "dirty, shocking and little less than a scandal." The report has been duly noted and filed by the suffrage propagandists and will be used to prove that, in the interest of the thousands of dependent children, New York State sadly needs the mother element in its government.

BUY OLD TIES FOR TRENCHES

British Would Buy Half Million From American Railroad.

An offer of 5 cents apiece for 100,000 castoff railroad ties was received by the Boston and Maine railroad from the British government. Formerly the railroad burned all its old ties, but orders were sent throughout the system directing that they be saved.

It is understood that the British government is negotiating with other railroads with the hope of obtaining a half million ties for use in constructing trenches in France.

Caves as Cold Storage Plants.

The numerous caves in Kentucky, of which the Mammoth cave is the most famous, may yet be turned to use for storing perishable foods. The air in the caves is dry and the temperature even. Lemons and oranges left there two years ago and taken out recently are apparently as good as when they were harvested.

GREECE TRANSFERRING MONEY FROM LONDON TO AMERICA

Millions Have Been Removed From Banks In British Empire.

The government of Greece is quietly but steadily transferring its funds from London to New York. According to estimates by bankers whose institutions are depositories for Greek funds, an excess of $75,000,000 has found its way to this country from London for Greek account since Greece failed to aid Servia when that country was attacked by Germany, Austria and Bulgaria. While bankers state that this movement on the part of Greece does not necessarily mean that she intends going to war with Great Britain or severing diplomatic relations with any of the entente allies, it is taken as a precautionary move by King Constantine's government in case a break should come.

London always had been a favorite depository for Greek funds, owing to the fact that Greece did a large part of her borrowing in Great Britain. London, too, was the center of the international money market, and having funds on deposit there made it easier to make payments in other parts of the world. When the concerted attack of the three Teutonic allies began on Servia bankers in New York noticed an increase in the amount of Greek funds being transferred to this market. When British and French troops seized Saloniki the transfers of Greek government funds to the United States were augmented largely.

The transfers of Greek funds to New York do not mean that Greece is shipping gold. She is disposing of sterling credits which she has in London by selling them in New York. The proceeds received from the sale of these credits are then turned into dollars and deposited in banks. Greece has recently been increasing the number of her depositing banks in this country in order to distribute the funds she is storing.

It is not improbable that the Greek government is receiving large sums from both Great Britain and France for the occupation of Saloniki and for supplies. Such funds would naturally be placed to Greece's credit in London and are at once sold in this market for dollars.

Should any open break come between Greece and Great Britain the latter country would probably seize as enemy property all of the Greek government funds deposited in London. Greece seems to have taken time by the forelock in getting a large amount of her London cash balance out of that country and into New York almost before it was realized in Great Britain.

TO PLANT 7,000,000 TREES.

Extended Reforestation Program In Pennsylvania This Year.

Officials of the Pennsylvania state forestry department estimate that more than 7,000,000 young trees, about half of the number in the state's twenty-four tree nurseries, would be used for reforestation this year, forming the most extended program of the kind ever undertaken by the commonwealth.

The bulk of these trees will be planted on state forestry reservations, on new auxiliary reserves and similar public work, and a large portion will be given free to persons desiring to use them for reforesting. The free distribution will not be for ornamental or shade planting, but only for development of wooded areas.

DOCTOR'S FAMILY HELD REUNION

Mainly In Honor of Brother's Return From West—All Went Merry With Everybody.

Storms are not respecters of persons, time or place, hence the inability of members of the Terpening family to hold one grand big reunion, planned for St. Valentine's Day, but which had to be postponed on account of unfavorable atmosphereic conditions until Monday of this week.

Sometimes disappointments prove to be beneficial, which seems to have been the case with this reunion, for aside from everything else, the members of the family who attended upon the hospitality of Dr. and Mrs. H. J. Terpening, of West Broadway, upon this occasion, had ample time to fill themselves with the determination to enjoy themselves to their "heart's content," whatever that may mean in descriptions of events other than a family reunion.

The Terpening reunion was in reality more than is implied in the name. It was to celebrate the return of Dr. and Mrs. Terpening's brother whose present home is in Bennett, Kansas. Mr. Homer Terpening is engaged in farming in the "Sunflower State" and very soon he will return there. This reunion gave him an opportunity of looking at his kinsmen in groups, serving to bring back to his mind in accentuated form the early days spent among them in this grand old state.

A late noon dinner was served in the way that old fashioned New Yorkers know how to prepare and serve, leaving nothing more to be desired by the inner man. It was a pleasing sight to see that dinner table, surrounded by so many bright youthful faces and given a proper toning by the presence of the elders of different ages, and then, added to this feature of the picture were the elaborate table decorations—colors, red and white—just for remembrance of the day when the reunion was to have been held.

In addition to the hostand hostess and their children, Norwood, Ellory, Orin and Jesse, there were the doctor's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Terpening, of Ira Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Silas Carter and son Myron of Lysander; Mr. and Mrs. Arvid Goodrich and daughter Marion, of Ira Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Dickinson and son Lester and daughter Laura, of South Granby; Mr. and Mrs. Myron Terpening of Syracuse.

"THE PRINCESS PAT"

"The Princess Pat," John Cort's oroduction of the latest Henry Blossom-Victor Herbert musical success, which comes to the Quirk Theatre Tuesday, February 29th, is one of those charming comic operas, in fact the only one, which carries us back to the days of the Daly Theatre when such delightful offeringe as "Three Little Maids" and "The Country Girl" were presented. It has all the cleverness of those productions, with the sweetness and refinement retained. There is much fun-making throughout the three acts of the opera, while the truly Victor Herbert score is interspersed with pretty songs, duets, dances and concerted numbers, the titles of some of these being, "Allies", "Make Him Guess," "I'd Like to be a Quitter, but I Find it Hard to Quit." "Love is Best of all." "For Better or For Worse," "All For you" "Flirting," "In a Little World for Two" and "Two Laughing Eyes." Gorgeous costumes and elaborate scenic display enhance the presentation.

LOCAL PLAYERS LOST GAME

Maccabee Stars Lost to Y. M. H. A. Team of Syracuse Last Night to the Tune of 35-30.

More than 200 people witnessed an interesting game of basketbal l at Church's Hall last night between the Maccabees of this city and the strong Y. M. H. A. Stars, of Syracuse, in whicvh the salt city team were the victors by a score of 35-30.

Excitement was tense throughout the forty minute session owing to the seesawing of the score. Up until the last five minutes of the game, it appeared as though the local team would win out, but a spurt before the closing whistle by the visitors resulted in their scoring several field baskets, giving them a safe lead which could not be overcome.

Snow was the star performer on the Maccabee outfit, his shooting of fouls in the first half being brilliant. He made good 10 out of 12 attempts during this period. The score at the end of the first half was 21 to 14 in favor of the Y. M. H. A. Stars. An incident of the game was the number of fouls called on both teams; 48 fouls were called on the Syracuse team and 18 on the local team, or a total of 66. This resulted in loss of time, but when the ball was in play the spectators were offered a real treat in basketball. The shooting of O. Rosenberg, especially, was received with much applause from the spectators.

Rosenberg, playing guard, made good every attempt at a basket from the vicinity of the opposite basket. He was taken out of the game, however, after four personal fouls had been called on him, according to Referree Morin. The situation was open to question, however, from the fact that S. Rosenberg also played and the two are twin borthers who cannot be distinguished even by their own teammates. The dispute which resulted from Referee Morin's decision made necessary a halt in the game, but upon the play being resummed with four men in the Syracuse line up, the spectators' interest was once more aroused. At this time the Maccabees made their only field basket in the first period.

In the second period the Maccabee team showed the best form of the season when their passwork was on a par with the visitors. It was fast and snappy and as a result three more field baskets were scored by the local outfit.

Most of the Syracusan's shots were from a distance. Towards the close of the game, with the Maccabee team in the lead, the visitors settled down and by short passes were able to get three baskets which gave them the victory.

The howing made by the Maccabees last night will undoubtedly give the A. C. U. team of Syracuse, who are to be the local team's opponents tonight, reason to believe that they will have to play their hardest, if they intend to score a victory.

The lineup of the teams.

| Y. M. H. A. Stars | | Maccabee |

NEW YORKER PRAISES SCHOOL COMPULSION

Detroit — Compulsory education laws in London, England, were offered as models to improve the American system by Edwin B. Shallow, of New York, associate city superintendent of schools, today. He was addressing the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association, in annual session here.

"Strict enforcement of the compulsory education law has made a marked difference in the attendance in schools in New York in recent years, advancing it to 90 per cent," said Mr. Shallow.

BRITAIN TO ADD 400,000 MEN

London—The government has decided to grant official recognition to all forces affiliated with the volunteer training corps under the volunteer act of 1863.

The importance of this step in the present crisis cannot be overestimated, as the effect will be to bring the volunteer training corps, which contains between 300,000 and 400,000 meu, under control of the War Office for home defence employment, thereby relieving regular troops for more active service overseas.

Lord Derby's acceptance of the chairmanship of a joint naval and military board to control the British House of Commons this afternoon by the Premier. The position is not a salaried one.

All the groups of married men who attested for service in the army under the Lord Derby scheme will be called for service in batches, according to reports today.

Beginning on April 29 with the younger grops, the men of twenty-four to thirty-five years of age will be called out, and subsequently the men will be summoned as follows: May 13, men of thirty-four to thirty-six years; May 27, men thirty-seven to thirty-nine; June 10, men forty to forty-two, and June 24 men aged forty-three to forty-five. The oldest, men forty-six years of age, will be called on July 8. These arrangements are provisional.

CUT AIR HOSE IS THE MYSTERY IN NEW HAVEN WRECK

New Haven, Conn.—Three mysteries confronted the Federal and State investigators into Tuesday's New Haven Railroad wreck at Milford when they met today. They were:

What happened to W. R. Curtis, the dead engineer of the local which caused him to run past two danger signals?

What was Harry Sweeney, former laborer in the New Haven's employ, doing in Engineer Curtis's cab?

How was the air hose connecting the engine and first car of No. 79 cut?

The first question may never be answered, since the engineer and fireman of No. 5, as well as Sweeney, are dead. Yet the impression grows that something out of the day's routine occurred in the cab. Testimony was given today that Engineer Curtis ran past a "caution signal" a mile and a half behind No. 79.

He had, therefore, abundant time to slow down for the "home signal" at a safe distanme behind No. 79. Yet so far as the evidence shows he did not even slacken speed.

While one witness testified that running past "caution signals", which are some distance behind a danger point, is a frequent practice on the New Haven, testimonyof another sort was given. W. M. Spalding, engineer of the freight train involved in the wreck, was asked what he would have done had he been in the cab of No. 5.

The air hose which wasp rimarily responsible for the wreck was brought into the room where the investigation is being held. It shows a clean, cut close to the nipple—a cut which might have been made by an axe of a knife, but in the opinion of experts was not caused by a blowout.

It was testified that the hose was in perfect condition when No. 79 left New Haven. It was only sixteen minutes later that the collision came.

FRENCH WITHDRAW; LINE UNBROKEN

the edge of the Argonne. This was in the nature of a containing engagement and thus far has not developed infantry work of consequence.

The net result of the drive has been an advance due south toward Verdun of approvimately five miles and nthe appearance of German guns within one and a half miles of the northern forts which are part of the great Verdun fortress ring. The German front thus is only six miles from the city of Verdun itself.

The Temps in its military review estimates that the Germans are employing on the average ten infantrymen to every three feet of front where the attack is fierest north of Verdun—that is, over a line of eight miles in length between Brabant and Ornes.

The reviewer maintains that the operations are not necessarily preliminary to an attempt to beseige Verdun, but comprise an attack upon a wide part of the front of which Verdun forms a part of the rear support. The attacks, he declares, are still held within the first line works, while there are three other lines at strategic intervals behind the first. These lines are more solidly constructed and more elaborate in their nature than the first lines, as work on them could be done at leasiure without the workers being within the reach of the German fire.

NEW YORK'S 'BIG FOUR' DIVIDED OVER ROOT

New York—Elihu Root has asked that his name shall not be submitted for the Presidency at the Republican National Convention.

At least two of the New York "Big Four"— Frederick C. Tanner and Charles S. Whitman intend to comply with his wishes.

Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr. and Elon R. Brown await the result of Nicholas Murray Butler's riding of West" before deciding whether they will drop Mr. Root and ultimately swing to Governor McCall of Massachusetts, or Theodore P. Burton of Ohio.

William Barnes, Jr., however, is still trying to regain his party leadership through the use of Mr. Ioot's prestige. He, too, is expected to abandon Mr. Root soon after he reaches Chicago and line up behind Mr. McCall, Mr. Burton or any other man the Crane-Penrose-Cannon combination agrees to support.

The Wadsworth-Brown -Whitman-Tanner conference scheduled for yesterday did not take place. Whether it will take place today or be declared off indefinitely may depend upon what work State Chairman Tanner gets from Senator Wadsworth.

REPUBLICAN MEMBERS FOR REDUCED CITY TAX

New York—The fifteen Republican members of the Legislature from New York City will support nearly all the measures suggested for decreasing city taxes and increasing the city's income. Senator Ogden L. Mills so reported yesterday to Mayor Mitchell.

There are only two measures that are not endorsed. These are that which would given the city a share in the $100,000,000 appropriation for State roads and the one providing the cit yshall get thep roceeds of the stock transfer tax. This amounts to $4,000,000.

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece,
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

MRS. WILSON FIRM IN SHAKING HANDS

Vigorous Manner Expected to Replace Formal Method.

SOCIETY WILL FOLLOW HER

At First White House Reception the First Lady Stood Up and Shook 4,228 Hands In a Little Over Three Hours, or One Every Three Seconds. Was Not Fatigued.

Mrs. Wilson shook hands.

That was the one outstanding feature of the first official White House reception recently. It was not the limp and listless style of handshake which is at present considered good form. It was the old fashioned hearty handshake of our grandfathers' days.

All Washington fashionable society was interested at the news. Has Mrs. Wilson set a new fashion?

It has not been customary for the president's wife to shake hands on the occasion of public receptions. She merely smiles and bows.

In fact, the whole subject of shaking hands is in a more or less indefinite condition in fashionable society. There are many women of good social position who do not shake hands if it can be avoided. They maintain that a bow and a smile are sufficient greeting. If a woman makes no move toward extending her hand it is not good form to force her into action by extending a hand toward her.

A Big Undertaking.

But if a situation arises where a woman finds a hand extended she accepts the advance and perhaps feebly extends three fingers, just enough to save the situation from embarrassment.

Of course President Wilson's bride knows all this and had thought about it. When she took her place at the head of the line of the cabinet ladies the other evening she had decided exactly what she was going to do. Whatever women in fashionable society were doing or whatever had been the habit of other mistresses of the White House, Mrs. Wilson decided to shake every hand that wanted to be shaken. And she did so.

The job Mrs. Wilson undertook was no small one. She was obliged on the occasion mentioned to shake hands with no fewer than 4,226 persons. She began shaking hands at exactly 9:30 p. m., when the first guest was introduced to her. At precisely 12:45 a. m., three-quarters of an hour after midnight, she stopped.

No Fashionable Affectations.

The task occupied Mrs. Wilson continuously for three and one-quarter hours, or 195 minutes. In that length of time there are 11,700 seconds. Thus it seems that the average time consumed per handshake was about two and four-fifths seconds.

Mrs. Wilson is a strong woman physically, else she could hardly have withstood such an ordeal. As a matter of fact, she was so little fatigued that next morning she was up and out by 10 o'clock paying an informal visit to an old friend.

Mrs. Wilson is not and never has been a woman of fashion. Accordingly she has no fashionable frills and affectations. When she shakes hands she does not hold her own at shoulder level and waggle the other person's paw horizontally. Nor does she languidly extend two or three fingers.

On the contrary, she shakes hands in the old fashioned sort of way—not merely offering her own limply to be grasped, but with a warm and hearty clasp. It is a cordial, old fashioned handshake that she gives, meeting the party of the second part halfway, as it were.

Hand Traveled Over a Mile.

Mrs. Wilson's handshake is given at the level of her waist—a simple two up and down movement. It occupies not more than one second of time—the remaining one and four-fifths seconds (according to the time schedule of the other night's reception) being consumed by the guest in advancing and bowing.

Mrs. Wilson's right hand rose about five inches and descended five inches. It rose again five inches and fell five inches. Then the grasping fingers relaxed, and the hand withdrew to her side. The handshake was over.

Mrs. Wilson's hand traveled a distance of twenty inches, up and down, at each handshake. She shook 4,226 hands. Her hand therefore traveled 84,520 inches, or nearly a mile and a quarter, during the evening.

It might seem that Mrs. Wilson's manner of shaking hands was of no imaginable importance. But such a view of the case would be a mistake. For the president's wife is always the leader of fashion at the national capital, and whatever she does, whether she wishes it or not, is widely copied and imitated.

That Mrs. Wilson will continue to shake hands at White House receptions is by no means to be taken for granted. Indeed, the chances are that she will fall back upon the traditional custom and be content with a bow and smile. In the recent instance there was a reason for making an exception.

The reason lay in the fact that the reception was to all intents and purposes a wedding reception. The president's marriage had been so private an affair that even his most intimate personal friend, Colonel House, was not invited.

On Washington's Errand and His Own

By ETHEL HOLMES

One visiting the town of Dobbs Ferry, on the east bank of the Hudson and some twenty miles from New York, will find himself in a place that has been called by its present name for so long that no one, except perhaps some of the present residents, knows the date. Doubtless Mr. Dobbs ran a ferry there to some point across the Hudson. He has passed away long ago, but his name remains.

There is another name connected with Dobbs Ferry of far more importance—that is, George Washington. One mounting the declivity leading up from the railway station and following the road leading southward will pass a frame house before which runs a wall to which is attached a tablet stating that it was the headquarters of General Washington during the Revolutionary war.

One day a country lad named Enoch Weatherby, who was a member of the Revolutionary army and had not seen his best girl in New York city for some time, got leave to go there for the purpose of meeting her. Being a patriotic youth, he went to General Washington and, telling him what he was about to do, asked the general if he could be of any service to him in bringing information of the British army, which was at that time in possession of the city.

The general told Enoch that he very much desired to know how many troops were there, how many cannon and whether any preparations were being made for a movement. Enoch promised to gain what information he could.

That night the youngster put a load of farm produce in his boat on the river and the next morning started with the outgoing tide for New York. On reaching Spuyten Duyvil creek he turned into it and when he arrived at Kingsbridge, leaving his boat under the bridge, proceeded on foot to the city, some nine or ten miles away. There was a British soldier at the bridge, but Enoch, being loaded with produce, was suffered to pass, and whenever he was stopped on the way a few eggs or a pound of butter was sufficient to pass him.

New York was then all at the southern end of the island, and Enoch's girl, Becky Bleecker, lived at the lower end of Greenwich street, near where it joins the Battery. He found Becky, and she was delighted to see him, for there was little communication between the American troops in the region beyond Spuyten Duyvil creek and the city. Enoch while in New York was continually going about, counting the guns he saw and estimating the number of the soldiers.

One day he made bold to sketch a redoubt in the region that is now Central park and was observed doing so by a sentry. The soldier called the corporal of the guard and by him sent a message to the commanding officer that a man had been seen sketching the works. By this time Enoch had left, and a couple of men were sent to bring him back. Enoch soon discovered that he was being pursued, and, though the men most of the time kept him in sight, he succeeded in reaching Becky Bleecker's home without being arrested.

Becky put him into the great hall clock, he handing her the memoranda he had accumulated, giving her a kiss at the same time, and she had no sooner taken them than there was a loud rap at the door. She opened it, and two redcoats entered, inquiring for the young fellow who had just come in. Becky declared that they must be mistaken, but the soldiers, having seen him close the door behind him, searched the house. Not thinking to look in the clock, they did not find him. But one man stationed himself at the front of the house, the other at the rear, and Enoch was pinned in.

After they had gone outside Becky returned to Enoch, and he bemoaned the fact that he would not be permitted to take his notes to General Washington. Becky was in terror lest the information he proposed to take away should be captured on him and cause his conviction as a spy. Something must be done before any one came from General Howe and while there were only green soldiers on guard.

Becky resolved to walk out with Enoch's notes and drawings in face of the sentinel at the front door. She did so, and the man essayed to stop her, but she gave him a scornful look and proceeded. She had scarcely got out of sight before a member of the staff came with a sergeant and eight men and gave orders that no one should be permitted to leave the house. Enoch had heard the door shut after Becky and thought it best to come out of hiding. But, since there was nothing found to indicate that he was a spy, after being held for some time he was suffered to go his way.

Meanwhile Becky, presuming that her lover would not be permitted to go back to General Washington, made her way to Kingsbridge, where she found Enoch's boat and pulled herself up to Dobbs Ferry. Mounting the hill to the house where Washington was quartered, she told him the story of Enoch's and her adventures and handed him the memoranda Enoch had collected.

"When Enoch Weatherby returns, if he does," said the general, "come together to see me."

Enoch returned sooner than was expected, and when the lovers called on the general he directed his chaplain to marry them and bestowed upon them a handsome wedding present.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Birds and the Railroads.

The crow gathers many a meal from the grain that is dropped from passing cars and has been strewn along railroad tracks. Owls in the long, cold nights of winter have been known to seek as favorite feeding places empty grain cars that have been placed on sidings, where there are usually mice to be found. These furnish the birds with their favorite article of food.

Bluejays, pigeons and sparrows all obtain a goodly supply of winter rations from grain elevators that are stationed all along railroads throughout the country, and the doughty English sparrow even enters grain cars whenever opportunity offers.

To the railroad tracks, which are the first places from which the snow disappears, the birds flock and find what a kindly Providence has ordered for them.

Quail and pheasants also obtain the necessaries of life from the roadbeds of railroads.

The water tanks at various points are never allowed to freeze, and many birds make a habit of drinking the water that trickles from such never failing sources of supply.

Homesick Crabs.

Who would suppose that the humble crab had an instinct for home? "Once under the water we might expect one part of the sea to be as homelike as another," says St. Nicholas, "but that shows how little the average human being understands the crab's point of view. Some one, however, suspected them of the homing instinct and, catching a pair on the Yorkshire coast of England, marked them and carried them south fifty miles or more, returning first one and then the other to the water at different points. Then the crabbers carefully watched their traps on the lookout for the possible return of the wanderers. Strange to say, one day not one, but both of the crabs were caught. They had made their way back to their Yorkshire home."

"The Day's Shopping."

"The day's shopping" is a very nice game for a party.

The players sit in a ring. The game is begun by one saying to the next:

"I've just come back from shopping."

"Yes," is the reply. "And what have you bought?"

The first speaker has to name some article which without leaving her seat she can touch, such as a pair of boots, a necktie, a watch chain or a bracelet. Having done so, the next player takes up the character of the shopper, and so on around the ring. No article must, however, be named twice, which means that when the game has gone on for a round or two the answers become very difficult to find.

"The Piercing Eyes."

The following game is called "Piercing Eyes" and is supposed to deal with magic.

A girl is blindfolded and locked in a vacant room, while her secret partner remains with the rest of the girls. The girls choose an article of furniture, and the blindfolded girl is brought back and asked by her partner what article has been chosen. The blindfolded girl answers no to all the questions asked until the one immediately following: "Is it the leg of the table?" or "Is it the leg of the chair?" etc. The right article is always named after a question concerning the leg of some article of furniture.

"Stagecoach."

Every chair in the room is supposed to be occupied. Each player is given as a name the part of something on a coach, as axles, wheels, the lady on the box, the bandbox, etc. Then one player stands in the middle and starts a story about the ride that the lady took in the coach. Whenever the speaker mentions the axle or any one's name they must stand up and turn around three times. When she says, "Stagecoach," they all change their seats, and the one without a seat must continue the story.

Jumping Letters.

Jump the first letter backward to the end of the word and change the meaning completely.

1. Jump scornful laughter and find a wedding necessity.
2. Jump to show contempt and find afflictions of the feet.
3. Jump a store and find little jumps.
4. Jump a Scotchman and find beds.
5. Jump to decrease and find made over again.

Answers.—1, grin-ring; 2, scorn-corns; 3, shop-hops; 4, Scot-cots; 5, wane-anew.

Boy Scout Signs.

A scout can make himself known to a brother scout wherever he may be by a method which only scouts can know. He has brothers in every city in the land and in every country in the world. Wherever he goes he can give his signs and be assured of a friendly welcome. He can talk with a brother scout without making a sound, or he can make known his message by imitating the click of a telegraph key.

Charade.

My first is domestic.
She loves the warm fire.
She's lazy and happy
When comfort is nigh her.

My second's a bite
Jack Frost gives your ear,
A gentle reminder
That winter is here.

My whole is an herb
Which my first loves quite well.
Just give her a mite of it;
Watch her delight of it,
How she will tear it, roll in it and smell!
Answer—Cat, nip—catnip.

Woman's World

An American Poetess Talks About Her Special Art.

JOSEPHINE PRESTON PEABODY.

Mrs. Lionel Marks, or Josephine Preston Peabody, to call her by the name which she has made famous, is a poet whose tendency has always been toward democracy. From "The Singing Leaves," her first book of lyrics, to "The Piper," the dramatic poem which received the Stratford on Avon prize in 1910, and "The Wolf of Gubbio," the poetic representation of events in St. Francis' life in her latest published book, she has chosen for her theme not fantastic and rare aspects of nature nor the new answers of her own emotions, but things that are common to all normal mankind, such as love and religion. Also without seeming to preach she is always expressing her love for liberty, equality and fraternity, and, although she never dwells upon the overworked term she is as devoted an adherent of the brotherhood of man as was William Morris.

"Certainly, poetry is steadily growing more democratic," said Mrs. Marks recently. "More people are writing poetry today than five years ago, and the appreciation of poetry is more general. Most poets of genuine calling are writing now with the world in mind as an audience, not merely for the entertainment of a little literary cult.

"But I do not think that the vers libre fad has any connection with this tendency or with the development of poetry at all. Indeed, I do not think that the cult is growing. We hear more of it in the United States than we did a year or two ago, but that is chiefly because London and Paris have outworn its novelty, so the vers libristes concentrate their energies on Chicago and New York.

"You see," said Mrs. Marks, "the commonest thing there is—I may say the most democratic thing—is the rhythm of the heartbeat. A true poet cannot ignore this. At the greatest times in his life, when he is filled with joy or despair or when he has a sense of portent, man is aware of his heart, of its beat, of its recurrent tick-tick. He is aware of the rhythm of life. When we are dying perhaps the only sense that remains with us is the sense of rhythm—the feeling that the grains of sand are running, running, running out.

"The pulse beat is a tremendous thing. It is the basis of all that men have in common. All life is locked up in its regularly recurrent rhythm. And it is that rhythm that appears in our love songs, our war songs, in all the poetry of the human cycle from lullabies to funeral chants. In the great moments of life men feel that they must be sharing, that they must have something in common with other men, and so their emotions crystallize into the ritual of rhythm, which is the most democratic thing that there is."

Blouse Features.

At this time of year there is not so apt to be any radical change in the lines of the new blouses, but many details of trimming and cut make a blouse a delightful as well as a difficult article of apparel to choose in a shop. There is a dovetail front that is odd, points overlapping on each side of the blouse and buttoning with large pearl buttons. Wide stripes two and three inches wide make another kind of blouse attractive. The cape collar of silk or satin tops blouses of georgette crepe. One white blouse has a very smart strap and buckle arrangement embroidered on the blouse in black silk.

Handkerchiefs Are Gay.

It is a question whether handkerchiefs could be much gayer than they are at present. No color of the spectrum has been neglected. Indeed, one handkerchief combines all the colors of the rainbow in its border and is almost as evanescent as the rainbow itself. Fussy willow taffeta, crepe de chine, chiffon tissue and the sensibly linen, are all used for the fashionable handkerchief. There are no lace edges to speak of, but much hand embroidery, colored bindings and fancy hemstitching.

How to Recharge Your Battery

Did it ever occur to you that rest is an antidote for more things than every day physical weariness? It is one of the weapons with which a man or woman may fight emotional strains of any kind. And the reason is an extremely simple one. Let us resort to the faithful old device of a diagram.

In the center of the chart suppose we put the word "energy." That is the thing that we have to work with in this life. Now on one side let's write a list of our expenditures—all the things which call for an outlay of energy. In this list is brain work, physical or manual work, emotion and diversion. These are the things that we spend our store of energy for. Every day we spend ourselves either physically, or mentally, or emotionally, or in some manner which may be a combination of any of them and which constitutes our diversions.

So much for the expense account. What shall we put in a list on the other side of the column that we might call income? How, in other words, do we accumulate energy?

Here are some of the ways: "Food," of course, and then "rest," "good air" and some of the other lesser ways which are productive of a renewed sense of energy, such as good grooming and inspiring associations.

And it is pretty true that you may add to your bank account and thus offset any sort of an expenditure with any sort of an income. That is, if we are working hard and playing hard we need a little more fuel in the way of food to keep the supply of energy up to the standard. And so, too, a little added rest will offset not only a physical, but an emotional strain.

Sometimes sleep is a better antidote for suffering than diversion, because diversion, after all, calls for an expenditure of energy, while suffering or an emotional strain of any sort has already taken a pretty full toll of the supply on hand.

Study the chart, then, and learn not only to spend wisely of the things that represent our outlay, but learn, too, to collect generously from those common sources of supply which are open to every one—food, fresh air and rest.

FOR TODDLERS.

How Modish the Two-year-old May Be This Spring.

White linen cut with kimono sleeves, the neck and sleeve bottoms being edged with narrow torchon, gives this attractive little frock. A bolero is outlined with hand embroidery, and the crushed girdle run through a crocheted buckle is pale blue taffeta ribbon.

Cake Fillings and Icings.

Filling for Orange Cake.—One medium orange, juice and grated rind; two tablespoonfuls butter, one egg, one cupful sugar; beat sugar, orange juice and rind and butter, add beaten egg, cook until it thickens; use cold.

Butter Frosting.—Two cupfuls powdered sugar, two tablespoonfuls milk, two tablespoonfuls melted butter; two tablespoonfuls vanilla; stir until creamy.

Cake Filler.—A good cake filler, easily made, is a cupful of sugar and one half cupful sweet milk; boil until it "hairs;" beat until cold enough to spread.

Lemon Filler.—One egg, well beaten; one cupful sugar, juice and grated rind of one lemon, piece butter size of egg; cook over hot water until thick.

Pineapple Icing.—One and one-half cupfuls of confectioner's sugar, one tablespoonful of shredded pineapple, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, boiling water to make creamy. Spread at once.

Chocolate Icing.—Two teaspoonfuls of cocoa, two tablespoonfuls of hot water. Cook half a minute, cool, add one tablespoonful of milk; stir in icing sugar to the right consistency.

Meat Scallops.

Materials.—Two cupfuls cold roast beef, stale breadcrumbs, seasoning, a tablespoonful butter, a tablespoonful flour, a cupful stock or gravy.

Directions.—Mince the meat finely, removing any superfluous fat, and season highly with salt, pepper, a little mustard or horseradish or stock sauce. Blend together in a saucepan the butter and flour, add the stock and when boiling cook for two or three minutes; then put in the meat and mix with this foundation sauce. Turn into greased scallop shells or small individual dishes, sprinkle buttered crumbs over the top and bake fifteen minutes.

The Debutante Wears Her Spring Frock

Design by Lane Bryant, New York.

PINK is one of the popular spring shades for youth—pale peachblow and a strange other toning into salmon. This debutante's frock is of peachblow taffeta cut in tiers, with a bouffant overdrape of matching tulle. The neck is charmingly simple, smocked into a "baby waist" effect, while crimson rambler clusters in the corsage and daintily wanders down the front. This makes a delectable dance frock.

One Piece Frock in Men's Wear Serge.

Although fashioned of men's wear serge, this modish one-piece frock has practically no limitations as regards materials. It is trimmed with braid.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6481. Sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 inches bust. Price, 15 cents.

Men's wear serge is used for this design, although one cannot conceive of any limitations for it as far as materials are concerned. The belt is of contrasting material and the revers and collar are trimmed with narrow soutache braid. In medium size the dress requires 4½ yards 54-inch material.

The underfacing of the front edge of the waist is the initial step in the construction of the dress. Next, close shoulder seam as notched and form tuck, creasing on slot perforations in front and back. Place single "T" on double "oo" perforations at lower edge of front and tack. Close under-arm seam as notched.

Now adjust the vest underneath the front, bringing single large "P" and double small "oo" perforations in vest and in front together; stitch the right side edge and finish the left side edge for closing.

Face the collar and sew to neck edge, after stitching on the braid.

Next, plait the sleeve. Close seam as notched, leaving extensions free; turn under extensions on slot perforations. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched.

For the skirt, turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap on side gore to small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch as illustrated, leaving edges to left of center-front free above single large "O" perforation in front gore for placket. Adjust skirt to position.

Adjust the belt to position.

Embroidered medallions may be added to the revers most effectively.

Variety The Spice Of Life

No one problem is daily more vexatious than "What shall we have to eat?" Not only once but three times a day does the same plaint arise. Most families are in a peculiar rut as to their eating and manner of cooking. For instance, in one family there is a too frequent appearance of pot roast, mashed potatoes and brown gravy. Another family will not tolerate anything but broiled meat and runs up expensive bills for chops and steaks. A third family never has soup, and still another has every dessert a pudding.

Is it not possible and easy also to vary more greatly our American menus? Is not this just the time of year to install some new methods of cooking the old familiar dishes? Why must rice always be used as a cereal or as a basis for tasteless rice pudding? Other countries use it with meat, with a spiced gravy, and make it the basis of a meal either as a curry or pilaf.

Is it not possible to take the piece of chuck and cook it in some other way than as the unending pot roast? It could be seasoned with sage or capers stuffed with dressing and served with a tomato instead of a brown sauce. In the matter of soups, many of us go on in the same unvarying way of vegetable bouillon and tomato bisque. How about all the other purees, green dried peas, yellow split peas, onions, carrots? How about the many kinds of soups with balls, with noodles or spaetzle? There is not a foreign nation but excels us in the variety of its soups. So, too, with potatoes. Why always the same mashed, boiled or creamed? Under the hands of a competent cook they become tasteful, varied and really interesting. Cheese, brown stock, lemon juice, all these can be added to potatoes, and there is even a book on 101 different kinds of potatoes.

No one thing will make for greater economy in our cooking than greater variety. Instead of the steak that we think must always be broiled we can use a "skirt steak," or flank, and have a delicious casserole dish at half the price. Instead of the soup that uses expensive vegetables we can have a simple stock or puree for less money. Instead of a dessert needing three eggs or more we can create substitutes which taste and look just as attractive, but in which only a single egg or none is used. Variety in cooking, new dishes, new flavors—these will help the housewife set a better table at less money.

massed in the back. The effect is charming for youth and a grateful variation from the banked, high designs.

Millinery Jottings.

Buttons have entered the realm of millinery and are used on sports hats, and by this are meant real buttons, buttons used for fastening purposes.

Hatpins, too, in either pearl, brass or nickel add an ornamental touch to many a hat for spring.

Ostrich novelties effectively change an ordinary hat into one of unusual effectiveness. Wing shaped are some of these ostrich novelties, which may be bent into any desired shape, for the quill is easily persuaded to assume any shape or position.

Many straw ornaments are used on the Paris creations, and most of them are formed of the modish shiny straw.

Appliques of fruit are most popular, and all the small berries are to be had as well as the larger fruits. Quite as unusual are the flowers that are seen in profusion, and after a period when flowers were not considered smart we find that the designers have turned out more beautiful and original models than have ever been seen before.

Mint Sauce.

Pick all the leaves from a large mint stalk and mince as fine as possible. Place in a large bowl with six tablespoonfuls of sugar, three-fourths of a pint of vinegar, one-half pint of cold water and one tablespoonful of salt.

Mix thoroughly with a wooden spoon; then place in a large bottle, cover tightly; shake the bottle always before using.

Instead of the ordinary plebeian "apple sauce" the addition of mint turns it into a highly tempting dessert.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

There is little to add in the way of description to this new bit of lingerie. Its charm lies in its simplicity and there is a multitude of fabrics from longcloth to washable satin crepe in which it may be developed. In medium size 1-2 yard 36-inch material for the yoke and 3 yards 27-inch flouncing make the design.

Pictorial Review Combination No. 6553. Sizes, 34 to 44 inches bust and 16 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

Chop Suey.

CHOP SUEY.—Wash a chicken. Rub it inside and out with a good deal of salt. Boil in small quantity of water until tender. Mushrooms, 10 cents' worth; bamboo shoots, 15 cent can; roast pork, 5 cents' worth; fresh pork, 5 cents' worth; onions, celery, bean sprouts, 10 cents' worth; use a little Bak Yow sauce for flavoring. Soak the mushrooms until soft (evidently dry mushrooms), then cut in small pieces. Cut bamboo shoots in tiny strips with the grain. Cut roast pork and fresh pork in tiny strips. Cut onions and celery small. Wash the bean sprouts. Boil the mushrooms in a little of the chicken water. Cook the chopped onions with water from the bamboo and a tablespoonful of corn starch and the Bak Yow. Heat a tablespoonful of fat in a pan, put in the fresh pork, stirring all the time; add the celery, bamboo and mushrooms; salt, stir and steam for ten minutes; moisten with bamboo water. In another pan heat a tablespoonful of fat and cook the bean sprouts, adding salt. Add contents of above three, mix well together. Lastly put in two onions. Pull the white meat off the chicken and cut in small strips. Spread this and the roast pork in strips over the top of the other materials after they are piled in a hot platter. This is the recipe, evidently rather heavy with salt, but we can boil chicken in our own way, which for most would not be the above.

PAPER MAKERS TO GET INCREASE

Agreements With Mills Expire May 1---Increase of Two Cents an Hour to Be Granted.

Watertown—The labor agreement with three paper companies in northern New York, will expire May 1, and by Wednesday, of next week ,,they will be notified of the new scale of wages recently adoptd by the union paper makers at Montreal and the action of the pulp workers taken last week at Boston.

Under, the present agreements two months' notice of proposed new agreements must be given the manufacturers and for that reason these notices will be sent out March 1. The companies affected will be the International Paper company, having 4 mills, here and at Glen Park, employing 450 men; the Taggarts Paper company of this city, having two mills, one at Felts Mills and the other at Great Bend, employing 120 men, and the De Grasse Paper company, of Carthage employing about 400 men, at the mill at Pprites. It is expected new agreements for two years will be made.

J. T. Carey, president of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, was in the city today and will spend Friday in the northern part of the state returning here for Sunday. Mr. Carey stated that there was a general movement all over this country and Canada to increase wages in paper mills and that the unions had adopted a new schedule in both countries. This calls for an increase of two cents an hour on the minimum class for machine tenders and back tenders.

The schedule is a complicated affair involving about 30 classes, each class depending upon the width and speed. of the machine, the highest rates being paid for the widest machine running at the greatest speed

Under the new agreement where machin tenders ar now getting 41c an hour, they will in the future receive 43 cents or $3.44 for an eight hour day, while machine tenders in class 30, will receive 83 cents an hour or $6.56 for an eigh hour day. It is argued that more care and skill is required on the fast and wide machines, that the production is much greater and therefore higher rates should be paid.

Back tenders will receive 28 cents an hour of $2.24 for class 1, while for class 30, they will receive 74 cents an hour, or $5.92 a day. Third hands will receive 26 cents an hour or $2.08 a day for the lowest class and $3.56 for the highest class. Beater engineers are paid b ytonnage, speed and width of machines not governing them. They will receive from $3.36 to $4.88 a day.

At the present time tour workers in some of the mills are receiving $1.92 a day, this being at the rate of 24 cents an hour; some day workers are getting 21 cents an hour for nine hours and others are receiving $1.84 a day.

A SPOON FOR THE LEAP YEAR BABY

Will Fulton have a Leap Year Baby—a baby born on the twenty-ninth of February?

Think, this poor child must wait four whole years for a birthday. So to make the waiting more pleasant and as a reminder of the day for which to wait, we have decided to give, absolutely free—without any restrictions—a Handsome Silver Spoon, suitably engraved, to the baby who puts in its appearance next Tuesday. In case more than one arrives, the first to report will receive the spoon.

Who will it be?

OBJECT TO FIXED RETAIL PRICES

New York—The Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers, an auxiliary organization of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Associations, is, through Thomas A. Fernley, it's Secretary-Treasuer, sending out to its members a circular letter calling renewed attention to the fixed retail prices of underwear, with special reference to the 25 and 50 cent priced goods. The letter, after saying that the buyers are deeply interested in remedying the situation growing out of the fixed price custom, and quoting a recent address by Lincoln Cromwell, of William Iselin & Co., says:

"When the market is low, under present conditions of manufacture, it appears that the retail trade can be supplied at such figures as to make the conditions under the fixed price custom tolerable, but with high market conditions, retailer, wholesaler, and manufacturer are compelled to face most disagreeable and perplexing problems. The retailer insists upon buying his merchandise at a price which will yield him a profit at the fixed price. The wholesaler has purchased standard goods from the manufacturer—has been forced to pay a price for such goods which makes it impossible for him to sell them to the retailer at a price which will allaw resale at the 25 and 50 cent price and still give a profit to the retailer.

"The manufacturer has shaved his cost of production in every possible manner and, unfortunately for the consumer, there has been a lowering of the standard of quality of manufacture which has not only given the consumer a poor garment but which has done definite injury to the underwear business. The underwear, trade has struggled with this question for many years, but in these unprecedented times it is felt that action is not only necessary, but is absolutely imperative.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY FOR UNCLE SAM'S SERVANTS

Washington —Thousands of Government employes in the executive de partments here would be required to work eight hours a day instead of the present seven by a provision in the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, favorably reported today by a House committee.

Appropriations carried by the measure total $37,601,539, a slight increase over last year.

CANNERIES RENEW 12-HOUR DAY FIGHT

Albany —Representatives of the canning industry today renewed their fight of last year to allow women and children to work more hours than is permitted under the present labor law. The fight last year was successfully carried through the Legislature by the passage of a bill sponsored by Senator George F. Thompson, but Governor Whitman vetoed the measure.

Today the canners asked the State Labor Commission and Labor Council in joint session to grant exemptions which would permit women and minors to work extra hours during emergency periods. At present such employes are not permitted to work more than sixty-six hours in any week nor more than twelve hours a day. The canners argued it was necessary for extra work during fruit and vegetable bearing seasons in order that the produce might not be wasted.

Representatives of State and municipal consumers' leagues and organized labor organizations, which vigorously opposed the measure last year, voiced no direct opposition to the proposal that discretionary powers be vested with the ndustrial Commission.

FORD'S EXPERIENCE COST HIM $400,000

New York—Four hundred thousand dollars of Henry Ford's money had been spent to get the boys out of the trenches up to the moment of the remnant of his crusaders reached Quarantine yesterday afternoon. This was Gaston Plaintiff's estimate. Inasmuch as Mr. Plaintiff handled expenditures, his return may be taken to mean that the expedition is over.

Mr. Plaintiff issued a statement. The Rev. Dr. Jankin Lloyd Jones also issued a statement. Mr. Ford adhered to his new policy of silence. After issuing his formal appraisal of what the trip had accomplished, Dr. Jones said informally that prudence and business wisdom would have killed the project at birth.

The home-comers were Dr. and Mrs. Jones, Judge and Mrs. Ben Lindsley, Gaston Plaintiff, former Governor L. B. Hanna, of North Dakota; Msr. Frederick Holt, of Detroit; R. S. Neely and R. B. English. Mr. Ford went down to Quarantine on a coast guard cutter to meet them.

100,000,000 FISH TO STOCK ST. LAWRENCE

Watertown—In three weeks the fish hatchery at Cape Vincent it will have about 100,000,000 fish ready to let loose in the St. Lawrence and other places specified by the federal bureau of fisheries. At the present time the eggs are hatching or have hatched and the little ciscoes, whitefish and lake trout are housed in jars, awaiting a more mature development.

It has been suggested that there should be built at the fishery some additional tanks in order that the fish might be kept until they assume the proportions of fingerlings and then to release them. There is plenty of room at the hatchery and all that would be needed is a few tanks and some additional labor on the part of the men employed at the hatchery.

If the additional tanks were built they would keep the young fish safe from the hardships and dangers of waters in which natural enemies live. As it is there is no provision made for this and the young fish are shipped away as soon as they have completed their initial growth, which continues until the food sack, which is a portion of the egg from which they are hatched, is consumed.

The tanks would furnish an exhibit to visitors unequalled by anything else along the river, it is said, and attention is drawn to the fact that in New York city most visitors visit the aquarium while there. At the hatchery there are many points of interest to everybody even under the present circumstances but it is felt that the additional tanks to shelter the growing fish would make an out-of-door exhibit that would attract many visitors.

D., L. & W.'S SURPLUS FOR 1915, $10,968,140

New York—The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad made its report yesterday for the calendar year of 1915. This report shows total revenues in the year of $44,786,730, an increase over 1914 of $2,240,752. The net operating revenue was $17,029,784, an increase of $2,340,829. After meeting all changes, there was available $19,968,140, a decrease of $1,006,499. This surplus was equivalent to 25.93 per cent. on the Lackawanna's $42,277,000 stock, compared with 31.38 per cent. in 1914. The losses were due to a falling off of nearly $2,000,000 in the sources of income other than from operation. A large part of the losses was made up in the last half of the year, when a general improvement in railroad earnings became noticeable.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The spirit of cooperation is the spirit of this day. We all help each other, some help more than their neighbors. This is the time of great philanthrophy, the time of enlightened selfishness. Even in the most cold-blooded business deal some thing is sure to leak out for the benefit of all. We are all dependent upon others, and every act has its effect upon others. The more help that we can give to those who are in a position to help us, the more we are indirectly helping ourselves. Our merchant in Fulton, for instance, is plainly in a better position to help us than a tradesman in New York or Chicago. To buy in Fulton is to strengthen our merchants and to strengthen the City. It is only enlightened selfishness to help our helpers.

We ought to be superstitious about sending a dollar away from Fulton, for it is only going to be the greatest streak of good luck, if it ever gets back here again. This is a big big country and there are many other places for the dollar to go once it leaves our bank. It stands a better chance of getting to New York or Chicago than it does back to Fulton. There are five hundred other cities of about our size that stand just about as good a chance as Fulton of getting that dollar. Even the smallest hamlet or the lone farm house on the plains stands a chance of getting the dollar we let go. Its chances of getting back to Fulton are considerably less than a billion to one. Those are pretty poor betting odds against you. Buy in Fulton of our local merchants and keep the dollars right here in our city.

There is a new wall motto in certain offices. It consists of just one word— "Think." Ho wmuch honest, hard working, eight hours a day thinking is there is this world? Much less than we self-conceited human beings are accustomed to believe. Most of the stuff which passes for thought is merely automatic reaction among the brain cells, involving little more conscious effort than digesting a good dinner.

Every man knows what it means to tackle a new job. He undergoes a thousand mental agonies until he has the job reduced to a routine. The agonies are creakings and complainings among brain cells which haven't been exercised for months, perhaps for years.

Why shouldn't a man's mind be in just as good training as his muscles? Why shouldn't he make it capable of taking up new burdens and meeting emergencies, just as he tries to make his body capable of additional muscular effort when that effort is called for? None at all. The brain should be a well oiled, smooth, running machine. It ought to feel fatigue as little as the legs and arms of the average schoolboy.

"Think", It is good advice. The man who learns how to make the full use of his mind has much advantage over people who use only parts of their minds as a trained pugilist has an advantage over one who has skimped his physical training.

BUY IN FULTON—and you will help the whole city and yourself.

Exchange of Messages Pressages Development of Co-operation Spirit Greater Than City Has Ever Known Says the Secretary

There have been a great many words of praise uttered in behalf of the thought behind the action taken by the Knights of Columbus, last Tuesday evening, when that body, "in banquet assembled," sent messages of good cheer and fellowship to the Masonic and Citizens Club members but it is doubtful whether any man or set of men has listened to stronger eulogy than came from the lips of Secretary Hollenga, last night.

The occasion to bring the matter up was presented when the membership of the Chamber of Commerce met in regular monthly session. The meeting was held in the Library assembly room and might have been attended by twice as many men but a just amount of bashfulness about getting wet feet—the result of wading through slush which was inches in depth on First st. sidewalks.

Mr. Hollenga described the incident of the Knights of Columbus greetings as the greatest thing that has ever happened in this or any other city. Its occurrence, he said, is unequalled, and if written in words no roll of paper ever made in Fulton would be long enough to contain the sentiments that could and should be expressed. "The message," said the Secretary, "means that from Fulton starts victory for the cause of co-operation. It is the greatest item in the campaign to place this city where it rightfully belongs—in the column of progressive cities."

The Standard is Raised

It was very evident from the appearance of the Secretary's face that nothing in history since his advent in Fulton has done as much to win his heart as this particular incident, which, to quote him means, "an example of shaking hands across the town." He added that such a spirit, if practiced by everybody in Fulton will make a larger and better city. "What matters it what church or society we belong to?" he asked; "we must aim for success, and I repeat that the action of the Knights of Columbus is one of Fulton's greatest victories," he concluded.

While the declared purpose of the meeting was to get expressions of views from representatives of lodges, whose abodes have been visited by the Secretary, an opportunity in the proceedings was not neglected to administer a few touches to a spreader of gossip, in effect that the Chamber of Commerce is not to be credited with the work of securing a man to reopen the Erie st. milk station. This talk Mr. Hollenga branded as emanating from a deeply-dyed prevaricator, adding that Mr. W. J. Peach, the Pulaski milk buyer, is ready to coroborate his statements. The practice of talking too much was deprecated by the Secretary, who said: "Whatever we may do, let us stop talking."

Mr. E. P. Cole responded to an invitation to speak in behalf of the Elks. He commended the lodge as the leading organization in the city—always standing up for a greater and progressive Fulton: He reviewed reasons why Fulton should from now on prosper, which would of course ensue were the city to acquire more industries. "By securing more industries," he said, "more working-people would be brought to the city, and wages would increase in proportion."

Mr. W. L. Forsyth expressed the belief that the Chamber of Commerce and the Citizens Club are two good organizations to belong to. He too takes pleasure in the action of the K. of C., hoping to see a rapid growth of the spirit which prompted the messages.

The Exhilerator

Mr. William H. Hornibrook spoke in behalf of the Masonic fraternity, saying that he felt sure that the spirit which prompted the K. of C. to send the message had been lying dormant but the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce was the medium who prompted the action. Mr. Hornibrook would like to see interest develop in the matter of placing fire escapes upon buildings, but is at a loss to know whose duty it is to work to that end. He said that both the fire and police departments deny responsibility in the matter. His queries remain unanswered.

Mr. F. E. Bache represented the Red Men of the city, saying that the Secretary's call at their lodge rooms, recently, was the most enlightening event in history along civic lines. Most of the Red Men, he said, are property owners and desire to join the Chamber, but feel their circumstances will not permit as the dues are beyond their reach.

Mr. F. E. LaPorte said, in behalf of the Knights of Columbus, that he feels sure that order is ready at all times to meet at the half-way mark in the interests of Fulton or any other good cause.

R. L. Crandall, Noble Grand of the Odd Fellows, expressed the hope that very soon the Secretary may find it convenient to appear before the members of that order, assuring Mr. Hollenga a hearty welcome.

At the conclusion of the hearings given to the different representatives, Mr. Hollenga's talk reverted to remarks he made before the O. E. S., last Tuesday evening, saying that "most fathers and mothers in raising families believe they are pursuing the right course, but how often they find themselves mistaken. They fail to guard against the harm that can come through contact with children whose training has been neglected. Continuing he said that "the influence of bad company has spoiled many good children, and it is selfish on our part to not look out for the training and education of the children whose opportunities have been neglected.

IF DREAMERS DREAM ON, THE MILLION MARK MAY BE REACHED—LATER

The February number of "The Oracle" made its appearance yesterday, bearing a number of new features, among which is a list of Fulton High school courses classified as follows: Arts, Science and Engineering, with the number of counts obtained with each study. The requirements of the Regents' diploma are also given.

The head-line story, entitled "Fulton In Ten Years," is deserving of its position, the story being declared a dream by the writer who forsees a population of 25,000 in this city within a few years, with the completed Barge canal filled with a steady stream of great electric barges; the public market filled with tempting products for the shrewd housewives; large office and store buildings in the downtown sections; steel works and other large industries; beautiful residences and lawns; and a large summer resort located on the shores of Lake Neahtawanta.

Included in the number are also the usual number of "grinds" and a list of fifty students standing highest in scholarship in the High school for the fall term. Harvia Wilson heads the list with a standing of 93.66; 2nd, Hester Balch, 93.4 and 3rd Mildred Sharp with an average of 93. Ten students have a mark of 90 or over.

The paper concludes with a copy of the constitution of the Fulton High School Athletic Association.

Opinions

ONE EXPRESSION OF EDITORIAL OPINION

The Assembly Judiciary Committee has voted favorably upon the woman suffrage amendment.

This will insure a vote in the Assembly and the passage of the amendment by that body.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has pigeon-holed the amendment, and the chairman has informed the women that they must show the committee some evidence that the people want the amendment passed.

Upon being asked what evidence of public sentiment was desired, the chairman replied that expressions of editorial opinion and letters from voters would have weight with the committee.

Well, here is one expression of editorial opinion to begin with.

The American heartily advocates woman suffrage, and earnestly requests the Senate Judiciary Committee to put the woman suffrage amendment upon its passage.—N. Y. American.

A GOOD BILL

Senator Whitney and Assemblyman Talmage have introduced a bill which prohibits the sale of liouor to minors. The present law prohibits the sale of liquor to persons under eighteen years of age. The bill introduced by Senator Whitney and Assemblyman Talmage, which is Senate bill No. 350 and Assembly bill No. 331, prohibits the sale of liquor to minors under twenty-one years of age. The theory of the bill is that when a man has become of age, when he has become responsible, when he is under the law competent to transact his own business, make his own contracts and assume responsibility for his own acts, then, and not until then, should he have the privilege of buying liquor and therefore the bill provides that the liquor dealers shall not be permitted to sell to a minor under 21 years of age.

We believe that this is a good measure. We believe that it is a measure in the interest of temperance and morality. We believe that it is a measure against which no legtimate argument can be urged. There is every reason why the measure should be passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor. We can think of no reason why it should not be passed and become a law.

The Lyons Republican cordially endorses this bill and would respectfully urge the Member of Assembly from this county and the Senator from this district to support the measure.—Lyons Republican.

THE REBELLION AGAINST WILSON

The unexpected and alarming rebellion of the Democratic Congressmen against the foreign policy of President Wilson resulted from several causes. There are members who honestly disagree with the theories that govern his negotiations with the Central Empires; there are members who calculate the effect of their opposition on their constituencies; there are members who are influenced by resentment springing from incidents in no way related to our diplomatic proceedings, and all the members chafe under the realization that they, the immediate representatives of the people, have no part in the management of affairs that vitally concern them and those who sent them to Congress. Among the members of the majority the failure of President Wilson's leadership, the lack of confidence in him generally, has been conspicuous for months, and the insubordination that has come from it has been manifested against every legislative proposal he has made.

Under our system of government, with the Executive free from responsibility to the Legislative Department in the management of foreign affairs except in the contingency, of overt misdeeds for which impeachment proceedings may be brought, Senators and Representatives are powerless except so far as their partisan and personal influence may extend. At present these factors are negligible at the White House and the irritation in Congress that has been increasing for months necessarily found an outlet. That outlet was unfortunate and dangerous; the consequences of what has already happened may be serious; but it was inevitable under the circumstances, and a repetition of the incident is not beyond probability.

Congress the Throttle

Were the United States governed by a Ministry whose members were obliged to explain their purposes, their conduct to the law makers, such an outbreak would be portentous. It would mean that after a long period of explanation and defence the representatives of the people had found the course of their Executive intolerable. It would foreshadow the fall of the Government. But with us all the misgivings, all the resentfulness, that would have been dissipated in months of questionings and pin prickings were expressed in one day, and the importance of their expression was accentuated by the undercurrent of apprehension which the despatches so clearly reveal.

The Congress does not want war; it believes, unquestionably correctly, that the nation does not want war; it is excluded from the Executive's counsels; it is puzzled by the apparent contradictions of his course. Beset by rumors, incited by interested agencies, affected by local and passing conditions it gave way to its worst tendencies and virtually sought to seize by force what is denied to it by law. It thought to take out of the President's hands the control of our foreign policy, and apply to the situation remedies it conceives to be better than those he has adopted.

It is useless to speculate at length on what might have been the situation had Congress possessed authority to call Secretary Lansing before it and confer with him. The eruption in Congress will certainly be interpreted abroad in the manner most comforting to each commentator. But it must be recognized that the management of our controversies with foreign Powers, however badly they may be managed by one man and his few advisers, would be worse managed if submitted to the vagaries of 533 Senators and Representatives. What is now unsatisfactory would become intolerable; chaos would succeed to error; internal deadlock would take the place of external correspondence. The most disgruntled critic of President Wilson would not counsel the substitution in his place of the assembled Congress, for with its assumption of authority the end of progress toward settlement of any dispute would be reached.

The Even Balance

Realization of this fact, we conceive, has had much to do with the subsidence of feeling in the Capitol. The acute phase of the insurrection that on Wednesday attained such proportions as to disturb the most optimistic has passed. The rancor and distrust that were at its fountain head still remain, but there has come recognition of the fearful danger that even well intentioned interfence in the delicate matters under consideration would precipitate. These remained in House and Senate throughout a saving portion of sound sense that worked steadily and effectively for the preservation of the balance. This was reenforced yesterday by recruits from those who had been temporarily carried off their feet in the almost panic of the preceeding day. Conservatism and understanding rescued the Congress from the error it seemed about to commit.

No sane man, after the exhibition that was given on Wednesday, can for a moment believe that the conditions of our foreign affairs would be bettered by injecting into them a more powerful Congressional influence than that which obtained yesterday. We say "which obtained yesterday," because the occurrences of the preceding twenty-four hours must have had an illuminating effect in the White House. If within its walls there has hitherto been any misunderstanding of the temper of Congress, of the doubts and questionings that have sprung up in the minds of Representatives, and which correctly reflect the misgivings of all Americans that misunderstanding has now been swept away.

At present we cannot assess the injury that has been done to America abroad by this remarkable, we believe unprecedented, uprising. The duty of all is to repair it as quickly and as thoroughly as may be; and if President Wilson has properly apprized its significance he will turn it to good account in correcting those tendencies of his foreign policy which gave the uprising the excuse for its beginning.—N. Y. Sun.

SOMETHING JUST AS GOOD AS INDUSTRIES

It is a good thing now and then to stop stock still while rushing to catch up with industries flitting around the country, seeking a landing place, to do a little prospecting, lest we overlook something in the way of a bonanza right under our feet. This city has a perfect right to feel proud of its great woolen mill, its chocolate manufacturing plant, its paper making industries, its knife works, and the sixteen added enterprises, yet there exists no reason under the sun why we should not, instead of chasing projects that too often turn out to be phantoms, do a little digging at home—right under our feet, so to speak.

As an instance of what is to be found under the very ground upon which we may at times stand, there comes from the neighboring state, Pennsylvania, a tale of old John Miller whose worldly possessions comprised—according to the description furnished— "a rock pile, called a farm, which his father had left him. One day an individual, given to digging into things discovered that the old farm covered one of the finest coal veins in the state." Old John was wise in his way. Most of his life had been spent in "grubbing" over the rock pile, chasing phantom crops, as it were, so when the diggerman offered a good price for the "scene of his childhood," the old man hung up his hoe, sold out to a firm of coal "barons" and retired, wealthy.

Not every rock pile of a farm covers a vein of coal, but there are many towns in the country where the people occupy too much time in chasing the mirage—seeking everlastingly for industries and expecting every wind storm to bring down upon the ground a surplus of the desirables. Now there is a town in Kansas, Salina by name, whose population have not minded in the least to spend two dollars in exchange for something worth one dollar. The following taken from a newspaper, tells of Salina's experiment —and later, the small city's success:

> "Salina, Wichita and Kansas City have just had grand op-a. Salina is in Emporia's class. And yet Salina had the same company that the others had.
>
> "How did she do it, you ask?
> "A convention hall did the work. Grand opera brought thousands of people to Salina during the season. It filled the hotels, it filled the stores. It filled the wholesale houses. It brought tens of thousands of dollars to Salina. It created the feeling all over the Solomon Valley that Salina was an up-to-date town, that its merchants—who helped to guarantee the expenses of the grand opera company—have a feeling of neighborliness and good will for the people of the Solomon Valley. And so Salina within the year will have hundreds of thousands of dollars of out-side money in her banks and stores and wholesale houses that otherwise would go to Kansas City."

Salina's experience proves conclusively that, while industries are to be desired, it pays to dig into the rock pile of originality. Salina found the sort of trade extension that helps. Its experience furnishes food for town boomers everywhere. While Fulton may not need a big municipal hall, it needs the spirit which made Salina's success. Fulton's opportunities for becoming the best home town are immeasurable, but when we reach the apex of development, then what? Are we not going to invite our neighbors who live in the same community to see the town—and, to look around?

W. C. T. U. NOTES

A determined fight is being made to drive the saloons from Canada. Sir George Foster, acting premier, has given the assurance that if the people express themselves strongly in favor of prohibition, parliament will enact such legislation.

* * *

Both branches of the Virginia legislature have passed the Anti-Gambling bill, prohobiting gambling for money.

The lower house of the Virginia legislature, with only two dissenting votes, passed the redlight bill, designed to abate, by injunction, houses of prostitution, declaring them to be nuisances.

New Jersey temperance men, 6000 strong, under the leadership of Billy Sunday, visited the state house in Trenton on February 2, in the interval between the morning and afternoon evangelistic meetings at the tabernacle, and took part in the greatest temperance demonstration which has ever occurred in New Jersey's capital city. Special trains on the Pennsylvania brought dry delegations from Atlantic City, Camden, Newark, Jersey City, Long Branch and intermediate points, while special cars brought local optionists from the other parts of the state.

Police circles in Portland, Oregon, have been astonished at the reduction in the number of arrests since prohibition went into effect. The Oregonian reports that during the first week of January the municipal court was quiet and deserted, while ten days previously it was working steadily on charges of drunkenness, vagrancy, and disorderly conduct all day long! "Since the first of the year the business of the police court has been cut in two," remarked Judge Stevenson, of the municipal court. "Right along in the regular course of a day we used to have from forty to sixty-five cases, with frequently more than 100, and some times 170 and 180."

The chairman of the public safety commission reported that during the first week of prohibition there were recorded almost no motor vehicle accidents, except one or two due to the snow, and the number of arrests due to reckless driving was greatly decreased.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

"The principal part of everything is the beginning," says the Roman Law. The principal part of our savings accounts, then, is the beginning, and the beginning does not have to be large. We must, however, get beyond the beginning. In the matter of saving money, the difficulty is often not a lack of willingness on the part of people to save, but a lack of initiative in making a resolution to save, or a leak of enterprise in carrying the resolution into effect by taking the trouble to go to the place of deposit. In many instances this obstacle has been overcome by organizing savings clubs in places of business and appointing a collector who goes around at a certain time each week or two weeks and collects a definite sum from each club member.

In this way the member is relieved of the temptation to spend extra money wastefully and at the same time of all responsibility connected with the saving of his money, except the actual handing of it over to someone else. Another good feature of employees' clubs is the incentive they are to reckless spenders, or indifferent workers, to rival their fellow workers in their punctuality in meeting the collector's demand. It is a strange thing that ways and means must be devised to induce a person to do something for his own benefit and the benefit of those dependent on him.

In Switzerland, the people have more forethought, for five hundred and fifty-four out of every thousand inhabitants have savings accounts, while in the United States only ninety-nine out of every thousand, or less than ten per cent, have thus provided for the future. The average savings per capita in Switzerland are $47.03; in the United States, $4.84.

A little girl in Brooklyn, the great- granddaughter of Robert Gibson Davisson of New York, is being taught thrift. Mr. Davisson's will provides that a large part of his estate shall go to his granddaughter, provided she saves $500 in five years. Every little boy and girl in the country should be likewise taught that to save a penny is to earn a penny, and then they would know the real value of money and of its spending power.

THE SENATE'S ARMY BILL

While the Senate's military bill, according to the published outlines, provides for a somewhat larger standing army than many American citizens favor, the regular military establishment, if the Senate committee's view prevails, will still not be large enough to justify the cry of "militarism." It will not be nearly so large as most army officers think it should be. There will be 175,000 men in all branches, including the noncombatants of the Quartermaster and Medical Corps, instead of the 147,000 provided for by the House committee's bill. There is no indication in the news dispatches that either the Senate committee or the House committee has hit upon any plan to facilitate the recruiting of from 30,000 to 50,000 more men. We may still hope that this important branch of military extension will be duly considered.

While the Senate, like the House, favors the seven-year enlistment term, with three years with the colors, there is a wise provision in its bill, that the enlisted man, if found efficient, can be released to the reserve in one year, or can, if he chooses, obtain his discharge from service with the colors, to enter the reserve, in two. This plan, which is favored by Major General Wood, will tend to give the nation a fairly large reserve of well-trained troops in a few years. With the rejection of the Continental Army plan, and the insistence on the dubious measure of militia "federalization," the Senate's provision for a larger regular army is the best we can hope for. Many weeks must elapse, however, before the two bills can be debated in the two houses, amended to suit prejudices which cannot be overcome, and finally submitted to the uncertain moods of the conference committee; so that there is no guessing as to what the answer of the Sixty-fourth Congress may be to the nation's demand for preparedness.—N. Y. Times.

STATE IS AGAIN SHORT ON ITS SCHOOL MONEYS

Teachers in the rural sections are uneasy lest the apportionment of state school money may not be forthcoming at the proper time. The uneasiness begins with the superintendents. It means that if the money does not come into the offices of the county treasurers teachers' salaries must wait for payment.

The state money is due to reach the county treasurers this month, but it has not yet appeared, and it is feared that there may be a repetition of the delay caused by the state last year when the teachers received only one-half of their pay at the close of sessions and were forced to wait until June for the balance.

The law provides that school money must be used for that purpose and no other and for this reason the superintendents or supervisors are unable to use other money to pay the teachers and to replace it with state money. The situation could be nicely bridged but for the law and unless the state makes good with the apportionments, the teachers may have to wait again this year.

TEAMS STRUCK VERY FAST PACE

Stars of This City Got Away With Two Games, But Oswego Men Were High.

The best match game of the season, in which both teams participated, rolled a total of over 2800 in the three stanzas, considered of State League standard, took place last night on the Onyx alleys in the first match of a home and home series between the All-Oswego and All-Fulton outfits. The local team took two of the three games. The Oswego team bowled the highest score attaining a total of 2853 pins while the Fulton team rolled 2829.

Powell, Stauring, Feeley and Brandt took all individual honors. Feeley, with 643 pins to his credit led in the total for the three games, while honors for high game were divided between Stauring of Fulton and Brandt of Oswego, both of whom bowled 233. Powell was the highest scorer of the Fulton quintet in the three sets.

The games were closely contested, especially the second one, in which the local team squeezed out a victory by the narrow margin of three pins. The Fulton team started out in championship style and bowled a total of 961 pins, which insured the lead by a wide margin. In the second stanza, as well as the first, there were two men on each team who bowled more than 200.

The second match in the series will be bowled next Thursday night, instead of Tuesday night, as was at first announced, on the new alleys constructed this week at the Crystal Pavilion in Oswego.

The results:

PARKER TO GO SIX ROUNDS

Members of the Independent A. C. will have their first opportunity in over a year to see some of the local pugilists in encounters with out-of-town fighters, when the club will conduct its first smokeer Monday night at the Foster theatre with a program comprising six bouts in addition.

The main go will be between "Kid" Parker, of this city, who on Thursday disposed of his opponent at the Bastable by the knockout route, and "Al" Fisher, one of the best productions of the Syracuse fistic circle. It will be a six round affair, as will also the semi-final bout between "Skinney" McMahon, of Oswego vs. Eddie Coughlin, of Syracuse. The preliminary events will be four-round affairs in which the following will participate: "Kid" Thorpe vs. "Young" O'Connor, "Young" Wallace, vs. Tony Ryan, "Kid" Sweeney, of Oswego, vs. "Young" Buck, and "Slim" Reed vs. Kayo Twiman.

MACCABEES LOST BY HEAVY SCORE

Their Captain's Absence Had Something to Do With the Defeat.

The crippled Maccabee team was defeated last night at Syracuse by the fast A. C. U. team, score, 66 to 29. On account of the injury to Captain Ives, which was sustained in the Y. M. H. A. game played the night before, it was necessary to make a shift in the lineup, which did not prove to be very successful. On five different occasions in last night's game, Manager Snow, who acted as captain in the absence of Ives, shifted the men into different positions but the Syracuse team could not be prevented from rolling up the high score attained.

In the first half of the game, the Assumption church boys ran away with the Maccabees, the score at the end of this period being 34 to 8 in favor of the Syracusans. At the commencement of the second half with the lineup of the Maccabees entirely changed, the local boys took a spurt and not only scored a number of baskets themselves but prevented the hosts from scoring. The hard game the night before evidently had its effect on the condition of the local boys and the Syracusans scored almost at will throughout the remainder of the game.

The lineup of the teams:

| Maccabee | | A. C. U. |
|---|---|---|
| Snow | | Waidele |
| Friedman | | Ganor, Hooker |
| | Forwards | |
| Crockett | | Walser |
| | Center | |
| Merrill | | Knittel |
| | Guards | |
| Robrbaugh, Yeandoh | | Wolfe |

Baskets, Waidele, 14; Gainor, 5; Walser, 6; Hooker, 5; Knittel, Wolfe, Snow, 2; Crockett, 5; Merrill, 2; Rohrbaugh, 4; Fouls, Walser, 2; Crockett, Snow. Referee, Jin Torney. Timer, Frank Fell.

STEVENS BILL UNDER GLASS

New York—About 110 delegates from the Chamber of Commerce of the leading cities of New Jersey, who attended a one-day convention of the State Chamber yesterday in Paterson, heard Edmund A. Whittier, Secretary of the American Fair Trade League, and Percy S. Straus of R. H. Macy & Co. of New York speak for and against th e Stevens-Ayres bill now before Congress, which bill aims to establish a standard price for nationally advertised articles.

In his address Mr. Whittier declared that those merchants who oppose the regulatory measure do so because they misinterp et its purpose. It is not, as some evidently think, a measure which will compel dealers to buy goods of big advertisers whether the dealers care to or not. Its aim, he continued, is to stamp out the practice of some merchants who advertise standard goods at absurd prices merely as a bait to lure customers to their stores and there to sell them other articles at profitable prices.

Mr. Straus, after referring to the probable results that would come from such a law, said that it was designed for the benefit of a few and that while it would stimulate the advertising of large concerns, it would make the small dealer stock up with goods that he would otherwise not buy in quantity. The Stevens-Ayres bill, he said, was contrary to the public interest.

HIGH HITS TRAIL OF AGRICULTURISTS

The High School basketball squad left this afternoon for Morrisville, where they are to meet the "Aggies" in a game tonight. The two teams met earlier in the season on the court in the City Hall and the agricultural boys had no difficulty in scoring victory. From the fact, however, that the high school quintet is an entirely different one from that which started the season, Coach Merrill is confident that his team will keep up its string of victories and finish out the season with its record unmarred since the string of victories started with the first Phoenix game.

EXCHANGE OF MESSAGES PRESSAGES DEVELOPMENT

Vocational education is looked upon by the Secretary as one of the most desirable of advantages. Without education the young must expect scant wages, was one of his observations. He pleads for the Americanization of the foreigners who live in this city, by the establishment of schools, and by co-operation between them and their employers. In this connection the Secretary said that it is ihs opinion that employers of foreign-born labor in this city are ignorant of the things which make for the welfare of their help, and are therefore guilty of a crime against humanity—that of showing the poor fellows the glorious opportunities awaiting them under the Stars and Stripes. He denounced the practice of persons who misname Italians and Polanders as disgraceful, pleading at the same time for securing the interest of men of those nationalities in the conduct of industries. In defending his theories in this respect he said that no one knows the thoughts that may be coursing through the poor downtrodden foreigner's head—thoughts that might mean increasing the efficiency of big industries. No grander work could be undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce than the Americanization of the foreigners of our city, declared the Secretary.

Neglecting Duties

The Secretary's interest in hospital affairs is pronounced. As an evidence he told of plans to be launched whereby the working people of the city may pay into a fund the small sum of one cent a week, for which, in the event of illness or accident requiring confinement in the hospital they shall receive treatment worth many times the sum received in the fund from them. Such a fund will remove the necessity of persons who would otherwise become charity patients from being so classed.

President Whitaker, in calling for criticism of the Chamber, asked that it be constructive rather than obstructive; that now is the time to get together for the second year that will make of Fulon a center of civic activities. In response to the request Mr. R. L. McCully spoke of the good roads work accomplished by the Fulton Auto Club and what is in prospect during 1916, calling special attention to a joint meeting of the club with the Chamber of Commerce at the latter's office next Friday night, to which invitations will be issued through the public press. Mr. H. S. Van Sanford appreciates the work accomplished by the Chamber, but fears that too mary people fail to remember conditions as they once existed and therefore overlook many things.

Autoists to Meet Friday

Mr. H. H. Bristol would like to have the Chamber get busy in the interest of good paving in East 1st st., and Dr. Fox advocated the early acquisition of better school buildings, especially a new high school building.

President Whitaker approves of the established jitney line between here and Hannibal. He appointed Messrs. McCully, M. A. Stranahan and W. P. Morin as a committee to confer with the police authorities regarding better traffic regulations during the summer months. Attention was called to this matter by Vice-President Morin and Mr. Van Sanford who observed that all too frequently sidewalks are lined with autos, whereas the police will not premit visiting farmers to tie their horses to posts in the streets. Mr. Whittaker finds a belief prevalent among the farmers that they are antagonized; that instead of this feeling there should exist a spirit of hearty cooperation.

Mr. J. J. Jordan had the floor for a brief period to explain the methods employed in Scranton, Pa., where a fund was established by the Board of Trade as an aid to securing industries and to bolster up weak ones. His suggestion aroused the intereset of the President and Secretary, who propose to secure additional information on the subject.

A light luncheon and social hour followed this, one of the most interesting meetings of the reorganized Chamber of Commerce.

SUFFRAGISTS PROTECT ALIENS

New York—Women delegates from all the Congressional districts of the State met at the Harris Theatre yesterday for an all-day conference under the auspices of the National American Woman Suffrage Association and Woman Suffrage Party of New York State to consider the methods for advancing the Federal measure known as the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment. Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, Chairman of the party, presided, and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, President of the National Association, was the chief speaker.

The climax of the meeting cam late in the afternoon when a memorial to Congress was read. This was apparently a straight and simple document, supposed to express the general opinion of the delegates. To give it a special send-off Miss Janet Beecher, now playing in "Fair and Warmer," was asked to read it, and then, as the plans for the day ran, it was to bepassed unanimously and go on to its destination. That was where the plan of thew omen went astray, and the aparently peaceful memorial caused more discussion than any other feaeture of the day.

The memorial began with reference to the nation's staanding as the greatest exponent of democracy in the world, referred to the declaration of independence and its pronouncement that "all men are created equal," and then went on to say that "127 years after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States nearly one-half of our nation are still held as subjects, barred from the rights of enfranchised citizens."

BRONZE MEDAL FOR CO. APPLES

The Oswego Palladium is authority for thef ollowing item concerning the excellence of Oswego county apples:

News was received today by Michael Anderson, orchardist on the J. S Beckwith farms at Demster, town of New Haven, that Mr. Beckwith has been awarded the bronze medal judges of the Panama- Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, Cal.

The apples were picked in the fall of 1914( five barrels of greenings, in all, and were sent as a part of the New York State exhibit. They were nearly a year old when judged and were awarded third prize out of all the fruit from all the apple-growing States that was sent there.

Mr. Beckwith, Mr. Anderson and the fruit growers of Oswego county have much to feel proud of in the official announcement received. There is no question as to the high class of Oswego-raised apples and it is the firm belief that had the fruit been judged within three months after it had been taken from the trees that it would easily have taken first prize. The shipment of the fruit 3,000 miles by rail, keeping it until it was nearly a year old and then putting it out to compete with the best from every section of the country is a testimonial to be proud of.

The Beckwith orchards consist of eighty-five acres and are in charge of Mr. Anderson. They were taken over only a few years ago and by intelligent direction have come to be recognized as one of the finest orchards in the Empire State apple belt.

WALT MASON ON "HOME-MADE GOODS"

Why send afar, to Cork or Rome,
For Sunday hats or bales of hay?
Let's buy the goods we make at home
And show we're patriots that way!
The giant vessels sail the deep,
And bring us doodads made abroad.
We buy such traps and fail to keep
Our money on our native sod.
Those ships take back our hard earned cash
To pay the freight for Europe's kings;
To pay for battle succotash
And stuff we grow at home, by jings!
My wife's new lid was made in France,
And 'tis a phony thing indeed;
The broadcloth in my Sunday pants
Was manufactured by Tweed.
The sauce the grocer sent today
Was brought from London in a crate;
It costs like blitzen—I must pay
The duty added to the freight.
We sing our patriotic songs
And boost the flag and seldom cease;
But when we want gargoyles or gongs
We ship them in from Southern Greece.
And as I write a hundred barks
Bring curlycues across the foam;
Oh, profit by these sage remarks
And learn to buy your junk at home!

Bowser Killed It

Why Woman Suffrage Was Defeated In His Town

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

From the very first Mrs. Bowser had been champion of woman suffrage. She has attended very few public meetings in behalf of the cause; she has not shouted on the street corners; she has not allowed her name to appear in the public prints; she has conducted what may be called a solemn campaign, but one that left no doubt that she was on the right side of the fence.

Mr. Bowser, on the contrary, until very recently has conducted no campaign at all. He has been almost indifferent to the great question. On occasions he would be a champion of the suffragettes; on others he would remark that women had been several thousand years without the right to vote and it wouldn't hurt them any to wait several thousand years longer.

Last fall, when the women of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New York began their vigorous campaigns and were riding about in automobiles bedecked with flags or making eloquent appeals on street cars, Mr. Bowser became excited. He decided within an hour's time that the women of America should vote. He called man a tyrant for keeping his foot on her neck so long. He would be one to give that tyrant something to sit up and think over. He found more than fifty reasons why every woman in the land should wash the breakfast dishes, put on her hat and walk down to the polls and cast a vote for a mighty change in man's way of running things.

With Mr. Bowser, as we all know, to think is to act. Mr. Bowser thought and he acted. In going home he came across a corner meeting of suffragettes. A woman who was a fair speaker was making an appeal to a score or more of Eskimos, Laplanders and Turks who had just landed and hadn't yet time to learn the English language. They stood around gazing at her blankly and were wondering if she was telling them to go back home and resume their fishing or advising them to pitch in and get their fair share of the political graft that was to be divided up on every corner, when one of the leaders of the movement approached Mr. Bowser and said:

"You are an intelligent man, sir, and I believe you have our cause at heart."

"You are right, ma'am," he replied as he raised his hat.

"I felt that I was, and perhaps you would do us a great favor. When the lady is through with her remarks will you take her place and make a stirring appeal to this audience? Let them see that you are with us. Let them understand that a part of the men favor us and are willing to do all they can. Providence will bless you if you do."

Mr. Bowser was taken off his feet by the request, but we know him to be a man who will call a bluff every time. Some Persians, Egyptians and Chinese came up just then, and he hesitated for a moment, and then the speakeress got out of breath and cut her speech short, and he took her place. What he said to the crowd in the next ten minutes may have convinced them that every woman in America, including maids and cooks, should have the right to vote twice on election day and maybe it did not. He was cheered when he came to the end of his remarks. Most of the audience had been in America for two hours and had learned that one of our customs was to cheer a man who shot off his mouth in public.

Mr. Bowser reached home a new man, and as soon as dinner was over he said to Mrs. Bowser:

"I have won your cause for you. Woman suffrage will win at the polls in November by a majority of millions."

"What do you mean?" she asked.

And he told her about the meeting on the corner—the Eskimos, the Laplanders, the Turks, the Egyptians and the Chinese.

He told of his fervid speech and the way they absorbed it. He told her of how the welkin rang with cheers as he stepped off the soap box, and he thought he saw a shade of disappointment come to her face instead of one of eagerness and delight as she got ready to ask:

"Mr. Bowser, you know I am deeply interested in this thing. I should have liked to have heard your remarks. But, as I was not there, will you please repeat them as far as you can remember?"

"They were impromptu, Mrs. Bowser, as all my best speeches are," he answered as he drew himself up with great dignity. "However, I think I can give you a pretty good idea of that thrilling little speech. I began with my eyes fastened upon a Laplander and let them wander to an Eskimo and then to a Turk as I said:

"'Fellow countrymen, we all have wives and daughters and mothers and sisters. The man who disputes this fact is a liar and a scoundrel. They are women. They belong to the sex which Herod, Cicero, Plato and numerous other old back numbers regarded as no more account than the tails of their oxen. They cuffed them; they beat them; they made slaves of them. In their days a wife dared not sit in the presence of her husband unless she had a special invitation and a card of admission to pass her in. Her place was in the woodshed.'

"Here I paused to get my breath," said Mr. Bowser to Mrs. Bowser, "and I realized that I had made a good start, so I flourished my arms and went on:

"'What is a woman? Who is a woman? Is she a slave or an angel? Was she born brainless, as some vile scoundrels contend, or was she born with forty times the good sense of any man among us? Because we men have got the power in our hands shall we drag her around by the hair of the head, slap her face and larrup her with the rawhide because she forgets to feed the pigs? No, never! The man who wants to keep woman down deserves to be run over by a saw log and flattened out. She must not be driven out of the house to take her meals in the hencoop; she must not be tossed an old coffee sack to make a Sunday dress out of; she must not be driven with blows and curses out to milk the calves amid a howling blizzard. The man who says she must has got to face me after this meeting is over!'

"Here," explained Mr. Bowser, "I flung up my right arm and then my left, and, working up a fierce look, I bestowed it on about twenty men and they cringed and backed away, and most of the women cheered—that is, I think they cheered. They made some kind of a noise, anyhow. Don't you like it, Mrs. Bowser, as far as I have told you?"

"Go on," she replied.

"Then I said that every man who would not vote to give the women the ballot was a pirate of the deepest dye and should be hung to a limb with a log chain. I advised your sex if they could not get their rights otherwise to poison their husbands, sons and brothers off and to burn every town, village and city in the land. I told them to arm themselves with butcher knives and revolvers and parade the streets. I told them to upset every court in the land. I told them to bayonet every politician on sight. I told them to march through every legislature in session and to spill barrels of blood if it became necessary. You can bet your last dollar, Mrs. Bowser, that what I said will echo from Maine to Texas, and you can consider your cause as won. Aren't you proud of your champion?"

It was half a minute before Mrs. Bowser answered. Then she said:

"Mr. Bowser, your intentions were good, but I wish you hadn't spoken on this occasion."

"What! What! You are a suffragette, and yet you do not want me to help your cause along!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser.

"But do you think you helped it?"

"Do I think? Why, woman, if that speech don't win your victory you will never win one! You ought to have seen the faces of those Eskimos and Laplanders while I was talking. They had their eyes open! They began to see their wives in a new light; they began to recognize them as human beings instead of worms of the dust. By John, but in this election in four states your victory will be one to shake the whole country, and it will be because of my speech more than for any other reason! Do not doubt it!"

Mrs. Bowser had no more to say, but she did doubt it. After a few days had passed Mr. Bowser began to doubt it himself. The damage or benefit had been done, however, and he must wait until the night of the election to find out which it was. He would have recalled the matter again and again, but Mrs. Bowser fought shy of it.

The election day came, and neither mentioned its arrival. Mr. Bowser quietly went out and cast his vote, and Mrs. Bowser pursued her usual duties. Night came, and nothing had been said. Every hour or two after the polls had closed and fate hung trembling in the balance Mr. Bowser slipped out of the house and bought a daily paper, but he said nothing to Mrs. Bowser about the returns from the different states. It was near midnight when he slipped out for the last time, and then he came back with the paper in his hand and a smile on his face, and he almost shouted out:

"I forgot my glasses and can't see very well, but as near as I can make out we have won, as I said we would win, by millions. Let us give three cheers, Mrs. Bowser."

She took the paper and read the scare heads. She didn't cheer. She quietly announced that woman suffrage had been defeated wherever it was voted on.

"And I did it," wailed Mr. Bowser as he sank down in his chair.

"You always do things," was the calm reply. And then the incident was closed for the next five years.

A Doll's House

By ELINOR MARSH

Train robberies, which had quieted down during the early part of 19—, broke out with renewed vigor in the autumn of that year. One of these attacks was not only well planned, so far as getting treasure was concerned, but in getting away with it.

Jim Charnley was the leader of the band that made the attack and chose the field of enterprise by personally investigating different points on the railroad he proposed to operate on. He discovered a cave concealed by thick undergrowth where a party of men might hide. So far as he could learn, no one knew of it. He proposed to rob a train as it passed within a few hundred yards of this cave. A part of the force would make off on horseback while another part with the plunder hid in the cave. A posse would follow those who had ridden away while the men in the cave waited till the excitement had died out and then make off.

The robbery was eminently successful. The train was stopped and the plunder taken from the express car. The robbers made off through a wood, dropping the treasure into the hands of four men who made their way to the cave unseen. Those who had ridden away were followed but not captured.

A surprise awaited those who had gone to the cave, among whom was Jim Charnley, the leader of the gang. He had not been to the cave since he had discovered it several weeks before. On entering it he saw a doll in a little bed and several articles of doll furniture beside it.

The presence of this inanimate combination of china and sawdust caused a commotion on the part of the robbers. Some of them, fearing that their presence there might be discovered, were for moving at once. But Charnley argued that the region of the robbery would be filled with persons moved by curiosity, if nothing more, and that any move for the present would be dangerous. If the child came to play in the cave she could be taken in and held from giving information of their presence.

Little Margy Bickford, who lived on the other side of the rise from the mouth of the cave, was the child who had made the place a playhouse. On the afternoon of the robbery she started to go there to get her doll and bring it home. Coming to the rise, she passed over the roof of the cave, where there was a break in the rock that formed it, not sufficient to let in light, but through which sound might pass. The robbers had closed up the mouth of the cave and supposed that they might talk with freedom. At the time Margy was passing over the break in the roof they were discussing whether they should get out or remain where they were. The question was a matter of life or death with them, and their arguments were by no means subdued. Margy, hearing voices in the bowels of the earth beneath her, turned and ran back home as fast as her little legs would carry her. Her mother, seeing that the child had been frightened, questioned her and was told that some men were in her playhouse and would take her dolly away with them.

Mrs. Bickford had heard of the train robbery, and it was not long before she began to suspect the truth concerning the voices her daughter had heard in the cave. She went at once to a neighbor and reported the case. Unfortunately most of the men thereabout had gone off after the robbers, who had ridden away, and not enough men could be got together to warrant attacking an unknown number of desperadoes ensconced in a cave, so nothing was done except to station a boy of sixteen to watch the hiding place.

Charnley decided to remain where the robbers were only till midnight, then to walk to the nearest station two miles distant and board a train that would stop there at a few minutes after 1 o'clock.

Billy Simpson, who was on watch, saw them leave the cave. He followed them to the station, near which they waited till they heard the train coming, and then went up on to the platform. Billy went to the rear car unseen by them and got aboard at the same time they did. There were four men in the gang, but they took separate seats. They paid the conductor their fare, and he passed on to the rear car, where Billy informed him as to the nature of the passengers who had just got on the train.

The conductor wrote a telegram, which he gave to Billy, instructing him to get off at the next station, five miles distant, and send it, believing that his own motions would be watched by the robbers. On reaching the station Billy stepped off on the dark side of the car unseen, and the train went on. The agent was in bed, but Billy routed him out, and the telegram was sent to a sizable town ten miles distant.

Meanwhile the conductor directed the engineer to slack speed that sufficient time might be given for preparation for a capture.

But few men could be got together in so short a time, and they were disguised, having boarded the train and went on with it. The robbers began to leave it one by one, thinking they were unsuspected. This rendered their capture easy, and they were all seized without a fight.

Little Margy, who had saved $40,000, was adopted by the express company. Billy was given a handsome reward and later a position on the railroad.

ON MOVING.

Common Sense Hints to Make a Bore Somewhat Easier.

Few people move right, and it is a good plan to know how to pack things for moving, even though you are not threatened this year. When you know you are going to move begin at once to save newspapers and boxes. Several small boxes are more practical than the huge packing cases sometimes used. They are not so hard to handle and consequently receive better treatment. For the same reason barrels are more advisable than boxes for dishes or fragile articles. If boxes are used for this purpose they should be conspicuously marked. When preparing pictures or mirrors for shipment it is considered a good plan to wrap and crate them instead of boxing, so people handling them can see what they are. In the same way a strip lid adds to the security of the box of glass fruit jars or similar articles. Books should be packed in small, strong boxes. Of course the way things are packed depends largely upon their destination. When hauled in a van they require comparatively no packing, the movers assuming all responsibility for scratches and breakage. When preparing for shipment the packing can not be too carefully done. This work should also be guaranteed. In case your effects comprise more than one load it is essential that the first one should contain the carpets, the dining room and kitchen equipment, for, while they are the last things needed in the old house, they will be demanded first in the new. The importance of carefully made plans cannot be too highly emphasized, nor can the advantages to be derived from securing the expert and competent services of a reliable moving concern.

How to Make Javelle Water.

Javelle water can be bought ready made, but it is absurd for a woman who has much washing to do not to make it for herself. The following are the ingredients: One pound of washing soda, one-half pound of chloride of lime, one quart of boiling water and two quarts of cold water. Add the boiling water to soda and let it dissolve. Dissolve the chloride of lime in cold water and when it has settled strain off the clear solution into the soda solution. Let it stand until all the sediment has gone to the bottom and then strain off the clear liquid into bottles, cork tightly and store in a cool place. When needed for removing stains do not use plain, but dilute with at least an equal quantity of water, and do not leave the goods more than twenty minutes in the solution. Rinse thoroughly in several waters, adding a little ammonia to the last.

Panned Baked Sweet Potatoes.

Boil sweet potatoes until done, drain, peel and slice. Butter a baking dish, put in layer of the sliced potatoes, sprinkle rather thickly with light brown sugar and dot with bits of butter. Add another layer of potatoes, with sugar and butter, and so on. When dish is full put in oven and bake, covered for half an hour and uncovered for half an hour.

About Wedded Bliss

The old fashioned diagnosis of rheumatism is coming into disfavor. Too many distinctly different types of ailments have been classed under rheumatism.

The old fashioned verdict of incompatibility is bound too in time to come into disfavor. Too much of marital infelicity that is caused by selfishness or unrest or unpreparedness for marriage or unpropitious circumstances in marriage is laid at the door of incompatibility.

Of course incompatibility exists. It is present in every marriage in a greater or lesser degree. It is an inevitable concomitant of every marriage. But unless it is pronounced as in some cases where a man and woman marry in haste, without any community of thought and interest, it does not cause serious trouble.

The average couple are attracted before marriage not only by the call of sex, but by many attributes of mental and spiritual affinity. After marriage it is apparent that they are not as completely in unison as they were before marriage. Traits that were hidden by the glamour of courtship come into the foreground. For husband and wife are each the product of dissimilar environment and heredity, and, being so, many of their ideas, tastes and habits are bound to clash. Then, too, as they are man and woman their inclinations and emotional natures are fundamentally different. Thus it is to be expected that at times the unlike natures of man and wife should cause discord.

The couple who are idlers or one of whom is an idler find incompatibility a bugbear in their lives. With real work—with something serious to think about and something worth while to do—they would find little time to worry about their discrepancies in opinion and taste.

To those who are unready for marriage, who are bad tempered, eccentric and shiftless in habit and management—to this type of people incompatibility is a scapegoat for all their misdemeanors.

Conventionality.

Woman is much less conventional than man. She does all the conventional things and attacks other women savagely for breaches of convention. But you will generally find that where a man may with impunity break a convention he will not do so, while if secrecy is guaranteed a woman will please herself first and repent only if necessary. It follows that a man is conventional because he respects convention. Women conventional because she is afraid of what may happen if she does not obey convention. © Ira L. Hill, New York.

DESIGNED by Lady Duff-Gordon for Edna Mayo in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," this charming frock upholds the prophecies of spring, 1916. The bodice and top of the skirt are fashioned of pale blue taffeta, the lower part being a deeper shade and the silver lace petticoat edged in pale blue. The fichu is banded with pale yellow and green like the bow on the front of the bodice, and the two lace aprons are worn on the sides of the skirt.

Misses' Costume of Chic Design.

Beige worsted voile trimmed with soutache braid and taffeta. The blouse is stitched with braid.

Delicate beige worsted voile combined with silk of the same color and embellished with narrow soutache braid expresses the elegance of this costume most effectively. The waist has a high neck and drooping shoulders, and the skirt is a three-piece design, gathered at the top. In medium size the design requires 4¼ yards 44-inch material.

The home dressmaker will find that by studying the construction guide she has a task easily within her ability. To make the waist first slash down the fold at center-front from neck edge to large "O" perforation; underface and finish with loops and buttons, as illustrated on reverse side of envelope; adjust a straight strip of material about 2 inches wide underneath. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in right back at notches. Gather lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above. Adjust stay under gathers, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Join the two collar sections as notched and sew to neck edge as notched.

Close the sleeve seams as notched. Gather between double "T" perforations. Sew cuff to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation at seam of sleeve and bring seam of cuff to large "O" perforation in sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

Now, slash the front gore of the skirt between the two indicating small "o" perforations and insert a pocket. Join gores as notched; close back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above perforation for a placket. Gather upper edge of skirt between double "TT" perforations. Adjust to position.

Braid may be stitched about the hem also if desired.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6618. Sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

The Candy Corner.

PEPPERMINT.—One and one half cupfuls sugar, one half cupful boiling water, six drops oil of peppermint. Put sugar and water into granite saucepan and stir until dissolved. Boil ten minutes; be sure it really boils; remove from fire, add peppermint, and beat till smooth enough to drop from tip of spoon on wax paper. Get some of the vegetable colors sold in grocery stores and color some of these a light green; flavor some others with rose and color pink.

The small jars of coloring are harmless and will make your candies look quite professional.

Molasses Candy.—Two cupfuls Porto Rico molasses, two-thirds cupful sugar, three tablespoonfuls butter, one tablespoonful vinegar.

Put butter in kettle, place over fire, and when melted add molasses and sugar; boil and stir until, when tried in cold water, mixture becomes brittle; add vinegar just before taking from the fire. Pour into well buttered pans. Pull when cool enough to handle; cut into pieces with large shears and place on buttered plates till cool; then wrap each piece in paraffin paper.

Puffed Rice Brittle.—This is another wholesome candy relished by every one—crisp the rice in the oven before using: One cupful of granulated sugar, one half cupful of water. Boil together five minutes; add two tablespoonfuls of molasses, butter size of walnut, half a teaspoonful of salt. Boil until it hardens in cold water. Take from fire and stir in one half package puffed rice. Pour into buttered pans.

Another advantage of making these candies at home is the inexpensiveness of them as compared with the rich candies one buys, often made of inferior materials. The pleasure you will find in making the candy for your family, or in having some members of the family help you make it, will add to the satisfaction.

Malted Milk Fudge.—One-half can condensed milk, two-thirds cupful of water, one tablespoonful of butter, three heaping tablespoonfuls of malted milk, two cupfuls of granulated sugar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, two ounces of unsweetened chocolate.

Boil ten minutes, stirring continually while cooking. After removing from the fire stir until mixture begins to thicken. Pour in a shallow dish, previously buttered, to harden. Omit chocolate if you wish a plain vanilla fudge.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

The Mustard Bath.

This is an excellent treatment for a beginning cold. It brings the blood to the surface in sudden congestion of the lungs, in collapse, shock or heart failure from any cause. The bath may be prepared by mixing four or five tablespoonfuls of powdered mustard for a minute with one gallon of tepid or warm water. To this should be added four or five gallons of plain water at a temperature of 100 degrees F. Place the patient in the bath and let him remain about eight minutes. The bath should never be continued over ten minutes. A bath of this kind is excellent for children and adults to break up a beginning cold. After the bath one should go to bed immediately and cover up with blankets and remain in bed for twenty-four hours.

Taste a Guide to Health.

Modern investigation has shown that no article of food is good for a person if he dislikes it. If a child has practically a fixed notion that he does not like eggs they will do him no good and may do him harm. Only serious results can follow from coercing a child into eating food which he dislikes.—Professor M. V. O'Shea in Mother's Magazine.

OPEN AIR SCHOOLS--AN ORIGINAL ESSAY

Written by Miss Maizie Gorman and Read by Her at the High School Public Rhetoricals, Yesterday

The open air school which is fast becoming an important educational factor in all countries is of comparatively recent origin.

In the year 1904, in a vast wood on the outskirts of the town of Charlottenburg, Germany, the first open air school was established. The children were chosen from among those in the public schools whose mental retardation seemed due to physical debility. The object of the school was primarily to build up the health of the children, while affording them at the same time an opportunity to learn if possible.

An Imported Idea

France opened its first open air school at Lyons in the year 1907. This school was established for the protection of children against tuberculosis and proposed two classes for different forms of treatment, first those not yet infected who could be safely sent to the country homes where they might attend the regular village schools, and, second, children in the first or second stages of infection. Children of the second class were placed in schools where they could have continuous supervision at night as well as in the day time.

At present, there are six schools of this type in operation at Rome, Italy, while in many other schools of Italy provision is made for giving outdoor instruction to the pupils during a part of the school session.

The success of these schools in other countries led to the establishment om many similar institutions in the United States.

The first fresh air school in our own country was opened in June 1908, in Providence, Rhode Island, where a school room was remodelled, leaving one entire side open to the air. In this school, pre-tubercular cases were given precedence.

Six months later, Boston followed the lead of Privìdence and in December 1908, on the petitionof children who were convalescing in a hospital, New York opened its first fresh air school on an old ferryboat.

The first school of this kind for Philadelphia children suffering from incipient tuberculosis was opened in May 1911. This class room which accommodates twenty children is located on the large roof garden of the Cottage Settlement building. Children of tubercular parents applying for treatment in the institute if found to be in danger of the plague are placed in the open-air school; are given three wholesome meals daily, medical attention, instruction in cleanliness together with several hours of school work and plenty of rest.

On the whole, the results of these schools have been very satisfactory. Most of the children have gained preceptibly in health and strength.

Our own city has followed the lead of many others and an open air school is being conducted in the Academy street building. Though the work has necessarily been on a small scale much good has already been accomplished.

Before entering this school, each pupil must undergo a thorough examination in order that his exact physical condition may be ascertained. Then from time to time, other examinations are made in order that progress may be noted.

The open air school is conducted in three rooms, the study room dining room and rest room. In each room, there are four or five windows which contain screens so that the atmosphere is kept at an average temperature of 45 degrees. In order to keep their bodies sufficiently warm, the children are provided with suits, caps and mittens. The suits are made of dark brown material and have no armholes but each has a padding in the feet. The hands which protrude through a small aperature in the front are encased in woolen mittens.

Abreast of Progress

The hours for study are comparatively short. School opens at nine o'clock and lessons continue until 10:30. Then comes physical drill which is made up of a series of various exercises for the benefit of all parts of the body. Lunch is next served. Each child brings his own lunch but the teacher in charge serves each day some hot dish or hot milk, hot cocoa or soup. After lunch, the children march to the rest room. Each child has a cot, well equipped with warm blankets, and here, with wide open windows the pupils are allowed to relax for one-half hour. Thus no valuable time is lost end every means is taken to improve the child's health.

Thus the work done by our open air school is similar in nature to that of other institutions of the same kind. The increasing number of open air schools is sufficient proof of the good which they are accomplishing. Correct habits of living have been inculcated, weak bodies have been strengthened, disease has been averted and above all many lives have been saved.

MANY PATHS OPEN FOR THE RUSSIANS

Fall of Erzerum Important Victory For Entente Allies.

MARCH ON TURK CAPITAL?

Great Distances a Big Handicap to Both Armies Operating In That Territory—Captured City Was Important Base In the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78.

Several possibilities are opened up by Grand Duke Nicholas' capture of Erzerum and other Turkish positions Will his victorious army, which thus has forced its way through the back door of Turkey, attempt to reach Constantinople through the mountain passes of Armenia? Will it send an expedition north to Trebizond, on the Black sea, through an equally forbidding country? Will it descend the Euphrates with the idea of relieving the British position on the Tigris? Or, and this seems the most probable solution, will it descend the Euphrates to the point where it is crossed by the Bagdad railway? The latter achieved and this alternative could be indulged in—a march on Constantinople or one across the desert to Aleppo, where is said to be gathering the Turko-German army for a second attempt to capture Egypt and the Suez canal.

Some military experts believe that the recent activity shown by the Anglo-Indian force on the Tigris and the Russian armies in Armenia and Persia was begun and developed with the idea of serving as deterrents to a second attack on Egypt, just as it is expected that an offensive of the allies on the Saloniki littoral will shortly be developed with the same end in view.

Distances Greatest Handicap.

The distances, however, are so vast that at no point can military operations at present be made to illustrate this theory. From Constantinople to Erzerum is 740 miles; from Erzerum to Kut-el-Amara, the immediate objective of the Anglo-Indian force on the Tigris, is 640, and from the Russian advance in Persia to Kut-el-Amara, is 250 miles, while Erzerum, the Russian position in Persia, and the Anglo-Indian position on the Tigris form a broken line whose nearest point to the Suez canal is 725 miles.

On Jan. 6 the Russian general staff issued a long report on the army of the Caucasus from the time the grand duke had taken command, on Sept. 5, to the end of 1915. According to this report, the Turks had begun to prepare for the Russian offensive in Armenia as early as November, when the Third Turkish army, anticipating the German-Austrian drive in the Balkans and the re-placement of the Franco-British forces from Gallipoli, had been ordered to the region between the Russian lines and Erzerum.

The plan of the Third army was as follows: The Ninth and Tenth corps were to advance to Olti and form an offensive wing, whereas the Eleventh corps was ordered to hold its powerfully organized position and to attack, through a strategic demonstration, the weight of the Russian troops. In case the latter took an energetic offensive the Eleventh corps was ordered to fall back on the fortress of Erzerum, carrying along with it the Russian troops.

At the proper time the latter would be attacked by the Ninth and Tenth corps, together with such re-enforcements as could be sent from Constantinople. It was the intention of the Turks to use the great fortress of Erzerum on the left flank or in the center as circumstances might demand, feeling sure the Russians could not muster a sufficient force to envelop the city.

The grand duke knew all this by Dec. 1. Without displaying any activity or signs of re-enforcements on this line in Armenia he sent a column south into Persia in the direction of Hamadan, where it defeated a large force of Persian insurgents, Turks and 1,200 Germans. At the same time, with the main army not deployed, but divided into ten columns, each flanked by large forces of Cossacks, he began his advance on Erzerum.

He was lured on, as Enver Pasha had intended, by the Eleventh Turkish corps, but before he could be attacked by the Ninth and Tenth these corps had been isolated by the superior Russian forces to the south of Erzerum, and the Eleventh corps was driven into the city.

Germans Are Re-enforced.

This was on Jan. 25 last. On the same day re-enforcements with many German officers were started from Constantinople, and it was announced that Field Marshal Baron Kolmar von der Goltz, formerly military adviser to Enver Pasha, had been placed at the head of the Turkish forces in Armenia. Von der Goltz arrived at Erzerum on Feb. 1 and at once assumed command.

Between ten and fifteen miles south of the city the Ninth and Tenth corps, re-enforced by Field Marshal Liman von Sanders with most of the Turkish First corps and 10,000 Germans, who up to Dec. 15 had been engaged at Gallipoli, attempted to prevent the Russian columns from enveloping the city on the south, but before the relief corps could effect a junction with the other two it had been attacked and compelled to retire.

MAILS BY THE AIR PLEASE AVIATORS

Expert Describes Machines Government Would Need.

TO CONQUER WINTER'S ICE.

Routes In Alaska and Massachusetts Could Be Covered In All Kinds of Weather With Aviation Service—Officials Think a Tremendous Amount of Money Would Be Saved.

Aviators of the country are looking with pleasure toward the scheme that the United States proposes to conquer the rigors of Massachusetts bay and ice imprisoned Alaska in order to get the mails through to sections that are usually isolated during the winter. The postoffice department has asked bids for contracts and machines to carry the mails in these sections.

If this plan proves successful it will go far to determine the practical use of aeroplanes in wartime, and the United States is said to be utilizing this scheme to determine the best kind of air craft for use during conflicts.

Charles A. Wright of Riverton, N. J., is the president of the Aviation league, which trains young men to fly. He is an enthusiast in aviation and regards the proposed federal mail scheme as a sane way to carry the mails, but he takes issue with the federal bids in calling for aeroplanes of the description included in the proposals.

Heavier Machines Needed.

"This plan is workable," said Mr. Wright, "but the government should at least be prepared to spend $5 a mile on the experiment. However, to carry such mails as Uncle Sam wishes the government must construct heavier machines than any that are in use in this country.

"Only one machine was ever built in this country that would fulfill the requirements—the America, built by Rodman Wanamaker to cross the Atlantic. This machine has a carrying capacity of 4,500 pounds, which is 1,500 in excess of that demanded by the government. The America cost $90,000 to build. This makes the cost of a suitable machine alone three times as great as the United States wishes to pay.

"The practical use of the aeroplane as a commercial factor is in the air, so to speak. It costs too much to use them in this way just now, though in the European war they are demonstrating their value in every possible manner, especially in being the men-of-war of the air."

R. W. Knight, vice president of the Aviation league, coincided with President Wright's remarks, but added that it would be an easy matter to get plenty of machines that could transport 500 pounds of mail easily.

Routes and Service.

The routes and character of service now advertised and the cost of the present service follow:

MASSACHUSETTS.

From New Bedford by Wood's Hole and Oak Bluffs to Nantucket, fifty-six miles and return, thirteen times a week from June 15 to Sept. 14 and six times a week during the remaining nine months of the year; weight limit, 3,000 pounds per trip; cost of present service, $23,000 a year.

ALASKA.

From Valdez to Fairbanks, 368 miles, three times a week all the year for transportation of 1,600 (or 3,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $127,580 a year.

From Fairbanks to Tanana, 162 miles, three times a week all the year, for transportation of 1,000 (or 2,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, twenty-four hours; cost of present service, $23,153.84 a year.

From Tanana to Kaltag, 331 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 800 (or 1,600) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $37,723.49 a year.

From Kaltag to Nome, 225 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 600 (or 1,200) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $15,950 a year.

From Seward to Iditarod, 380 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 1,000 (or 2,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $22,865 a year.

From Iditarod to Nome, 220 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 500 (or 1,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, twenty-four hours; cost of present service, $24,862.12 a year.

From Seward to Anchorage, 110 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 500 (or 1,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, ten hours; cost of present service, $4,320 a year.

If the exacting weather conditions and weight requirements of the Massachusetts route can be met by aerial carriers it presents an excellent opportunity for improvement of mail service by this means.

Need of improvement of the Alaskan mail service is clear, and it is believed the aeroplane offers a practical means of providing better facilities there.

SEAPLANES FOR PHILIPPINES

Four Army Machines Added to Second Aero Squadron.

Four of the United States army's new hydroaeroplanes, which have been given tests in San Diego, Cal., by Floyd Smith, a civilian aviator, are to be shipped to Manila for duty in the Second aero squadron. Three of the machines have established altitude and passenger carrying records.

The new hydroaeroplanes are the largest in the service of the United States. They can be operated for approximately 500 miles without alighting for fuel.

MAY CHANGE STYLE OF THERMOMETERS

Scientists Interested In Plan to Adopt Centigrade Instrument.

BASED ON DECIMAL SYSTEM

Freezing Point of Water, Which Is 32 Under the Fahrenheit Scale, To Zero Under the Centigrade Standard—Bill Already Introduced In Congress and Campaign For Adoption Is On.

Shall the use of the Fahrenheit thermometer be discontinued in all government scientific departments throughout the United States? That is a question being seriously considered by leading scientific men in all sections of the nation, according to the Boston Herald, their opinions and advice having been asked by Congressman Albert Johnson of Washington, the author of a bill that would banish the thermometer now in use for government work and practically universally by the average citizen.

Though Congressman Johnson's literature does not state what thermometer he would substitute for the Fahrenheit, the centigrade is referred to by him as being widely in use already among scientific men in some government departments other than the weather bureau.

The centigrade, being based on the decimal system, is regarded as having the same advantage over the Fahrenheit that the American system of coinage, involving cents, dimes and dollars, has over the more ancient English system of pounds, shillings and pence.

The Fahrenheit thermometer, which has been in common use in this country for generations, was invented about 1714 by Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit of Amsterdam. Previous to that date thermometers had been very crude affairs.

The Principal Differences.

The centigrade thermometer, invented later and still widely used in Europe, differs from the Fahrenheit in having the zero at the point marked 32, or freezing, on the Fahrenheit. The centigrade is divided into 100 degrees between its zero and the water boiling point, which, according to Fahrenheit, is 212 degrees. In other words, the 180 degrees intervening between freezing and boiling on the Fahrenheit are reduced to 100 degrees on the centigrade.

The American Association For the Advancement of Science, having a membership of 9,000, is credited with being in favor of the change. Nevertheless the father of the bill has appealed to many other scientific societies in order to avoid the charge that the measure was rushed through congress. Dr. S. W. Stratton, director of the national bureau of standards, is at the head of a committee of scientists furthering the bill.

The bill providing for the change was introduced in congress Dec. 6 last, but no definite action has yet been taken by congress on it. Mr. Johnson's appeal to scientific men for support in his undertaking was made last month. He claims that the Fahrenheit thermometric scale is irrational and inconvenient and a nuisance and that the only question is as to how soon it should be abolished.

He thinks that perhaps his bill should be amended to postpone the abolition ten or fifteen years, but that "we should ill deserve our reputation as a progressive nation if some date is not set before long."

Would Lead to Inconveniences.

He says that, while the change to some other thermometer will be attended by considerable inconvenience, delay will increase rather than lessen the disadvantage and will "add to the ridicule that we have already earned by clinging so long to the worst thermometric scale and one that is bound to be abandoned in the near future." Referring to the repeated recommendations by the pan-American scientific congress to "the establishment of the pan-American meteorological service," he declares that the first requisite will be the abandonment of the Fahrenheit scale.

As proof that the government departments already have power to make the change, he cites the fact that in publications intended for scientists many bureaus already use the centigrade thermometric scale exclusively. He fears, however, that serious criticism would arise if publications for the general public were to use any but the Fahrenheit scale without any express mandate from congress, and he thinks that congress will not act except in response to an unmistakable demand by the scientific world.

Mr. Johnson urges that no person interested in the question excuse himself from advocating the change on the plea that "others will push the bill." Steps have been taken to form local committees in various sections of the country, to be merged in a national organization, the object of which shall be to enlist the co-operation of every organization and individual calculated to appreciate the advantage of the change and to exert influence on individual congressmen.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Did you ever think that you owe your existence, your happiness to the willingness of others to have social and commercial intercourse with you. If you have any doubt on this point imagine yourself without a commnnity, without neighbors, and consequently without schools, churches, stores and other facilities. You cannot provide yourself with even the necessities—not to say the luxuries of life—without the aid of others. No man becomes prosperous in isolation; he must deal with his fellows. He must get the spirit of sympathy and mutual helpfulness, the modern spirit of cooperation.

A story told by a citizen in the City of Fulton:

"We hear among citizens and merchants once in a while, the suggestion that we ought to buy all our goods in Fulton. That is a good idea. We thoroughly approve the sentiment, but we approve the implication that goes with it. We approve the idea that must be back of any such campaign, and that is that the retailers of the city—

"First—Have advertised in such an attractive and human way that everybody in the city knows what goods they have for sale.

"Second—That they have dressed their windows so attractively, kept them so clean, and had such suggestive arrangement that everybody who saw them, noticed them and wanted to go inside to see the goods.

"Third—That they have such well lighted stores and goods so well displayed that it was interesting to go inside then turn and look at the goods there;

"Fourth—That they have such well trained, courteous and attentive clerks behind the counters, that the man or woman entering the store was given such attentive and kindly treatment that it was a pleasure to do business in that store;

"Fifth—That the proprietor of the store went so often to the main markets, and so carefully selected the goods and priced them, that when he came back here everybody who saw them admitted that they were the best goods for the money that they could get anywhere;

"Sixth—That the proprietor himself had such a command of all the details of his business, that he got his bills out when they ought to be sent, that they were accurate, and that he had plain, straight-forward dealings with his customers, so that they knew exactly what they were expecting to get and got what they expected.

"We tellyou gentleman, when you have a retail community dominated with such principles, you don't have any trouble about keeping the people at home. It is only when you have a community that doesn't know what you have for sale, that enters the store and sees "seconds" and "thirds" displayed on the counter; that has to look through dirty and grimy windows at displayed goods, then you have people who go to more attractive centers to do business."

Don't be a leaner, be a leader.

Let's quit thinking that we can do better away from home and start giving our business men the patronage so that they, in turn, can help build us up.

1,400,000 Men Grapple at Verdun; French Troops Hold at Bay Kaiser's 800,000 Soldiers; British Rush Into France and Belgium

Ottawa—Britist lines in Belgium and France are being extended to replace French troops who are being rushed to the Verdun region to take part in thefi ghting, "which has settled down to a terrific slaughter,' 'according to advices received here from the battle front.

Approximately twenty army divisions, 800,000 men, have been thrown into the battle by the Germans, while the French troops number fifteen divisions, 600,000, cable messages said.

This makes atotal of 1,400,000 men engaged in theg reat battle of erdun.

The fighting and slaughter around Fort Douaumont, for four miles northeast of Verdun, continues without the slightest abatement.

"Five times" 'says the noon German official, "the French, reinforced with fresh troops, attempted to reconquer the armored fortress of Douaumont, and five times they were beaten back with sanguinary losses."

The slopes up which these five attacks were made "are covered with German dead," says the French midnight official.

The French official reports, day and night, still refrain from acknowledgedgingthat Fort Douaumont has fallen. The closest to such an admission is found in ap hase in the midnight official. It says the French troops "are strongly pressing the German detachments which were able to gain a footing east and west of the (Douaumont) position and maintain themselves there only with difficulty."

But while the main battle rages round this position, the Germans have been pushing flanking operations, which hold a perhaps still greater menace for Verdun and the French army. It is another tremendous effort of the "pinchers" or vise strategy, between whose closing jaws the Crown Prince hopes to clutch Joffre's men.

In the eastern flanking movement the Germans have pushed their way five miles down the Woevre valley, until today they are as far as Moranville, five miles from Verdun.

MINERS' STRIKE AVERTED RESULT OF CONFERENCE

New York—Representatives of the United Mine Workers and the coal operators in the anthracite fields met in joint conference at the Hotel McAlpin at 10 o'clock this morning. The sub-committees appointed to discuss the ten demands formulated and presented by the miners unofficially assert that there is little lik 'ihood of a strike being called. So far unusual harmony has existed between the conferees, and at today's session, a final agreement was reached.

Capital was represented at the conference by W. L. Connell, president of the Green Ridge Coal company; W. J. Richards, presi-dentof the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company; S. D. Warriner, president of the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company, and Morris Williams, presidentof the Susquehanna Coal Company. Labor's representatives include John P. White, president of the United Mine Works; Thomas Kennedy, president of District No. 7; James Matthews, president of District No. 8, and John Dempsey, president of District No. 1.

Abran Markle, president of the G. B. Markle Company was chosen chairman and will preside at the meetings, but he has no vote.

Of the ten demands made by the miners those having to do with the wage scale, the eight-hour day and ther ecognition of the union are the most vital. From many of the operators most vitally affected it has been learned that they are inclined to grant the 20 per cent wage increase, limit the working da yto eight hours and pay time and a hal ffor over time.

But the point that is to be most bitterly contested is that of full recognition of the union. This, the operators maintain, would be a complete surrender, and that at some points such a step would be suicidal to the interests.

The miners conten dthat recognition of the union is the one big feature of the conference in which they are the most vitally interested.

COUNTIES MAY GET OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS

Albany—The sixty-two counties in the state will receive about a million dollars if the bill to divide the automobile tax with the counties becomes al law.

This is one of the bills prepared by the joint committee appointed by the Legislature to investigate the financial condition of the city of New York and introduced by Senator Brown and Assemblyman Maier. By its provisions half of the money collected under the automobile tax will be returned to the counties with the restriction that it be expended on roads.

The total amount received from the automobile tax last year was about two million dollars and will undoubtedly be somwhat larger this year. The Secretary of State's records show that in 1915 there were 234,032 cars in the state and that they paid a total tax of $1,913,175.

GENERAL DIAZ LANDS SECRETLY IN MEXICO

New York—Brigadier General Felix Diaz, nephew of Por,rio Diaz, for more than a quarter of ac entury "The Iron Man of Mexico," has landed a military expedition in Mexico, according to a statement made yesterday by a close personal friendof General Diaz. General Diaz is now at the head ofa force of Oaxaca mountaineers and is in the field against General Carranza and the bandits who for four years have infested the rich agricultural and mining region of Southern Mexico.

The landing was made at Vera Cruz under the guns of San Juan de Ulua when General Diaz and five generals who were famous as guerrilla fighters in theold federal army went ashore from a steamshipf rom New Orleans in disguise. They had no difficulty in getting out of the city and to meeting with more than a score of old military leaders of Mexico at the Tierra Calorada ranch, where the platform of the Diaz party and the principles under which the national reorganizating army, of which General Diaz was made the head, will fight.

General Diaz took the field last Wednesday, as soon after his landing at Vera Cruz as it was possible for him to join the main group of his South Mexico adherents.

With General Diaz are some of the most noted of the fighters of the old Porfirio Diaz regime. Among them are General Davila, General Andres Almazan, General Higenio Aguilar, General Laniel Garza, General Martin Gutierrez and General Gandencio de la Llave.

Uprisings against Carranza are expected by the Felicists to take place in all parts of Mexico this week. They asserted yesterday that to General Diaz had been pledged the support of every federal general of importance; that the entire State of Oaxaca, General Diaz's native State, was with him and had already armed and equiped an army which was placed under his command the day he entered Oaxaca from the State of Vera Cruz.

The escape of General Diaz from New Orleans, it was declared, was almost as sensational as his successful efforts to elude the secret agent, and, finally, the soldiers who were sent after him at Vera Cruz on October 27, 1913, when he, with Bonales Sandoval and Cecilio Ocon, succeeded in getting away from Vera Cruz and was taken on board the United States battle ship Louisiana by Admiral Fltch,er, Agents of the Department of Justice took up his trial in

DOUBTFULLY WISE OR RIGHT

Almost everybody who voices a first impression, the product of instinctive feeling or unanalyzed judgment, will say that it was a fine thing for a man, as described in one of our news articles this week, to use earnings accumulated by many years of hard work in order to make up a deficit that was found in the accounts as a public official of his long dead father. The more one considers this rather unusual proceeding, however, the more difficult does it become to put in plain words just why it should have been done and just what of good it accomplished.

To free a father's name from undeserved obloquy would be, indeed, a pious task, and any sacrigces involved in performing it, provided they were within reasonable limits, and pretty closely limited to the son himself, would be of course commendable. But in this case, as the story was told, not only did the return with interest of the money missing from a county treasury leave the father's reputation, in the minds og the few who remembered him, exactly what it was before. It also revived the old scandal and gave to it far greater publicity than it had in the beginning. That there was a shortage when the father died now becomes the knowledge of thousands all over the country instead of a faintly surviving memory in the minds of a few Oldest Inhabitants in a little New Brunswick city.

And, by returning the money, the son almost, though not quite, admits that in his opinion the shortage was a real one, though the law and its representatives have been content to leave that issue open!

So a strict logician is justified at least in asking whether the father's reputation has not been injured rather than benefited by the son's action.

LABOR'S BEST FRIEND

The United States Bureau of Census has issued a preliminary report showing that in 1914 there were 338 establishments manufacturing complete automobiles, and that they turned out 573,114 machines, valued at $465,042,474.

The output five years before was only 127,287 machines, valued at $165,099,000, so that there was an increase of 350 per cent. in number and 181 per cent. in value.

The automobile industry is an excellent illustration of what invention does for labor. If it were not for invention and the manufacture of increasing numbers of implements and articles labor would be engaged in a highly competitive form of agriculture, such as may be observed in peasant life.

The automobile industry has absorbed the employment of hundreds of thousands of persons, not only in the manufacturing of the machines, but in running them and keeping them in repair, But for this work these men would be competiting for jobs with men in other industries and wages would be depressedby the competition.

A tariff puts up prices and brings inefficient factories and shops into action, and thus makes more work for labor. But the wages in such cases are always low, and labor in other shops have to contribute to the support of the inefficient factory and its help which can't stand on its own feet.

There isn't any such evil effect of an industry brought into being by inventions. The invention that finds a market, serves the public and does not have to be granted a subsidy. The wages are usually high, and there is a benefit to working generally.

Inventions and expansion have been the things which have enabled this country to absorb the enormous amount of immigration. True, the immigration has come too fast and has centered itself in cities, with bad effects. But how much worse conditions would be without the growing demand for labor! Unemployment would be general and permanent.

Much immigration into Austria or Italy, or into certain other countries, where progress is not rapid would mean extensive starvation. These countries are already filled with people. There isn't enough invention and building to absorb the natural increase in population. As a result there are sections in these countries where both the death rate and the birth rate are very high. These things go together where there is an oversupply of population which finds it difficult to support itself. There have been signs of these conditions in the United States in various industrial sections where immigrants have concentrated. But new industry has granted much relief.

In the early days of the country free lands were at hand for an excess of population. Now invention is serving somewhat in the same way that the free lands did. Instead of going West, the young man becomes an employe of an automobile industry, a milking machine factory, or of some one of the other numerous concerns, which are founded on the inventive genius of America, or the world.

The inventor is labor's best friend.

REWARD COMES SLOWLY

Times have changed and popular feeling has changed since this newspaper enlisted its services, freely, and without hope of immediate financial or commercial benefit, to the propaganda which for three months has been carried on by the Chamber of Commerce of Fulton.

When three months ago the Chamber of Commerce set about its task of correcting one of the worst evils confronting this or any small city or town—how to persuade members of the community to buy at home, instead of spending their money outside—in the nearest large city and in patronizing the far-away mail order houses, no other support was given the work of the Chamber than the columns of this, Fulton's only daily newspaper. From the very first this support has been unabridged and as free in so far as financial reward is concerned as the air we breathe. No reward was asked and none expected, but it is coming nevertheless, in the measure that shall be known to all men. It is indicated in spots and the spots are increasing in number. Some day the spots shall cover the entire community. When that day arrives this newspaper shall have its reward. It will know that it has done its level best to co-operate with the Chamber of Commerce in breaking up the evil which is bred by the importation of competitive advertising—through and by various mediums of publicity—in the city newspaper and the mail order catalog. There is every indication that this deduction of the signs of the times, when people are saying: "Before I began reading the articles in The Evening Times," my first thought was to buy away from home, but now I buy nearly everything here in Fulton," is proof enough of the claim that this newspaper reaches the hearts of the people. In and by such statements this newspaper is receiving its reward.

Line after line and column after column could be written in support of this one factor in community building, but not a word would convey the idea in clearer tones than the concise statement made by Mr. James J. Hill, who said in part as follows:

"Long distance buying creates the same condition commercially that is found where absentee landlordism prevails." Mr. Hill belongs to that class of rugged Westerners who know what absentee landlordism means. He knows all about its disastrous results and anything he says about long distance buying is conclusive.

ENTHUSIASM

Enthusiasm is the outside evidence of inside belief. Enthusiasm is the full interpretation of individual energy. It proves that the backbone of business is right where it ought to be—in the individual.

Enthusiasm creates a current in every contact. It makes a crusader of a man.

The heart, mind, soul and body are all working overtime in the man with enthusiasm.

Enthusiasm is the evidence that a man produces when he tries to justify his position as a "live one."

It is faith in yourself, in your firm, and in most men.

It is the polar star that attracts the mariner's needle on the old ocean of mercantile life.

Without it, purpose is but a pale, anemic try.

The enthusiast can never exhaust his possibilities, because his enthusiasm constantly generates new power. It is the maximum of manhood.

Enthusiasm is the rich, red blood of powerful purpose that courses through the commercial organization that wins.

It is absolute fidelity to little things—a firm grip on the cross of some high ideal.

It is the salesman's silent partner.—The Silent Partner.

In an editorial leader under the caption "What Is to Be Defended?" the Indianapolis News sounds a timely warning against "compulsory universal military service in times of peace." After briefly reviewing some propositions looking to this end the News concludes: "We believe that the people are pretty generally convinced that it is their duty to strengthen their defenses—to strengthen them, indeed, considerably. But behind those defenses they will insist that the old America, the America of their love, shall continue to exist. For that is what they are going to prepare to defend. Among the things to be guarded are Magna Charta, the bill of rights, habeas corpus, the Declaration of Independence and the constitution. Without these and the spirit that breathes in them there would in truth be little to defend. We should never forget that institutions are of slight value unless they are enshrined in the affections of the people and supported by public opinion. If every man in the country were a trained soldier we should be absolutely safe from attack. But the nation would no longer be the America of the constitution and Declaration of Independence."

China bids fair to be a political wonder. Her troubles in the last 100 years have been enough to destroy the integrity of any nation lacking solid foundations. The Taiping rebellion, which was raging about the time of the civil war in this country, ravaged the whole length and breadth of the land, destroying lives, wealth and institutions of civilization. Since then there has been the war with England, war with Japan, the war against opium and against the Boxer rebels. To crown all the corrupt dynasty of the Manchus was overthrown by a tremendous political upheaval. The wonder is that there remain sufficient virility of conscience and patriotism to do the work of reconstructing an ancient civilization on modern lines. Whether the government shall be republican or monarchical is of small interest to the outside world so long as it is a government of progress.

The "greenback" currency which the Bankers' association ask to have retired from circulation and canceled dates from the civil war. The bills are demand notes payable in gold (or silver). There are now in use $346,681,016, the sum left when congress finally stopped their cancellation in 1878. Besides the "greenbacks," there are now five forms of paper money in circulation—gold certificates, silver certificates, treasury notes, national bank notes, federal reserve notes, besides miscellaneous notes in small amounts.

The United States proposes to pay Nicaragua $3,000,000 for the definite, permanent and exclusive right to construct a transoceanic canal across Nicaraguan territory. The route is believed to be practical, and the United States wishes to shut off foreign competition with its Panama waterway.

It is conceded that reprisals must not hurt neutrals, but those air raids on open and defenseless towns and cities slaughter women and children for no reason but reprisal.

Many people are puzzled to know just what preparedness is. If war comes they may speedily know what it isn't.

"Pacificist" is the softer and therefore the more suitable word, perhaps, because it takes the "fist" out of "pacifist."

Any party that lacks a college professor sized up to the White House job should start recruiting.

If Alaska has no winter her resort keepers can sympathise with ours when we have no summer.

Peace seems to be waiting on a motion from some party not too proud to stop fighting.

Knocking the United States navy will never make up its shortages in officers and men.

The mere possibility of war justifies taking a stitch in time to save nine others.

But doing preparedness early is not enough unless it is done thoroughly.

IF WE MUST HAVE WAR LET US ELECT A WAR PRESIDENT

If we are forced into war the amazing thing will be that we shall have gone to war not as a result of any foreign nation's desire to attack us, but solely as a result of the ambitions and of Presidential candidates.

For many months Mr. Roosevelt has been skillfully baiting a trap for Mr. Wilson and Mr. Wilson has finally walked into it.

In order to show everybody that he can be just as bold as Colonel Rosevelt, Mr. Wilson has suddenly resolved to crowd the nation to the verge of war, possibly to crowd the nation over the verge into actual war.

Since Germany has yielded to every one of our demands in the Lusitania matter, and since there is no pretense that either American lives or American property have been injured by Germany for a long time, or that Germany shows any disposition to injure American lives or property, there certainly must be some ulterior motive for hunting a pretext for war now, when possibly real causes of war have been negotiated out of existence.

It is painful to have to say that the only probable cause of President Wilson's sudden truculence is President Wilson's desire to be re-elected and his belief that he must outdo Colonel Roosevelt in shouting defiance and breathing fire and fury.

This is precisely what Colonel Roosevelt—the most astute of politicians—planned to bait and taunt Mr. Wilson into doing. And Mr. Wilson, as we have said, has walked in a blind rage right into the trap.

Of course, Colonel Roosevelt knows that if Mr. Wilson is taunted and angered into bringing war as an aid to his re-election Colonel Roosevelt himself, and not Mr. Wilson, would inevitiably be the next President.

Between Roosevelt and Wilson, in case of war or the apparent inevitableness of war, nine-tenths of the American people would vote for Colonel Roosevelt.

For the truth is that Mr. Wilson has so frequently reversed his policies and so often shifted his position that even his own party would be fearful of having him at the head of affairs in the grave emergency of war.

In time of war everything else goes overboard and a nation cries only for a leader, for a dictorial commander, who gets victory by energy and by any means at hand.

That is exactly the kind of character Colonel Roosevelt is, and the very qualities which make many citizens averse to seeing him President in time of peace are the very qualities which would make all citizens clamor to have him President in time of war.

So that Mr. Wilson can be absolutely certain that if he wishes to defeat himself and to make Colonel Roosevelt the next President, he need only perserve in his apparent purpose of thrusting this country into war.

Now, if nothing else but the political fortunes of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Roosevelt were at stake wise men might look upon this game with amused interest.

But the deplorable fact is that the fortunes of the nation, the fate of millions of lives and of billions of property are dangerously involved in this ambition of Mr. Wilson to outdo Colonel Roosevelt and to win the votes of those foolish, and, indeed, we might truly say crazy persons who are eager to see this peaceful nation embroiled in a huge and dreadful war in which it has no business to be involved and from which it could not possibly gain anything but the loss of its citizens' lives, the waste of its citizens' property and an inglorious and barren victory.

But even to make sure of such a poor victory, the people would have to displace Mr. Wilson with a man of more foresight, more practical judgment and more decision in action.

The American has never been hostile to Mr. Wilson, as some seem to think. But The American has always been fearful of Mr. Wilson. This paper predicted, when Mr. Wilson's nomination was under consideration, that the Democratic party might survive his nomination, but that it would never survive his election, for his visionary policies would prove disastrous to the country and therefore destructive to the party.

We have sorrowfully seen our prophecies fulfilled.

Mistake has followed upon mistake. Failure has followed upon failure. And now, as a crowning disaster, the country is apparently to be forced into war in the hope that the President will ride into a second term on a flood of patriotic fervor.

Should that happen, The American will venture another prophecy.

We prophecy that while Mr. Wilson has made a poor peace President, he will make a much worse war President—that if a man so undecided, so vacillating and so unpractical is chosen to lead our nation in war, he will lead it to some humiliating and disastrous finish.

If we must have a war, then let us elect a real war President, a man of power and of definite purpose, a man of decision, a man capable of leading the nation through such a conflict to triumph.

The American does not yet despair of peace. We still hope that the Congress of the United States will truly represent the people of the United States and will maintain peace in spite of Mr. Wilson's apparent purpose to compel war.—N. Y. American.

NEW IDEA OFFERED IN AERIAL PATROL

Scouts Along Coast to Be Used In Peace and In War.

PART OF DEFENSE SCHEME.

Seaplanes Would Protect Human Life and Remove Menaces to Shipping In Days of Peace—In War They Would Discover Approaching Enemy and Report.

The aerial coast patrol proposed by the Aero Club of America, a plan intrusted to Rear Admiral R. E. Peary, as its originator, to develop and carry to accomplishment, proposes a new departure in preparedness for war never attempted by any nation and utilization in time of peace of the scheme for humanitarian purposes of saving the lives of those who go down to the sea in ships. The co-operation of the army and navy and of the coast and geodetic survey has been invited. Other government activities, especially the coast guard, which is expected to benefit most by the peace utilization of the aerial patrol, are also included in the scope of desired government co-operation.

Rear Admiral Peary has named a number of members of a committee to formulate working plans to carry out the scheme. Among them is Assistant Secretary Byron R. Newton of the treasury department, in charge of the coast guard. Mr. Newton is also a theoretical aeronaut. As a newspaper man he made a specialty of aeronautical news and was often in a flier. He is also a member of the aeronautical board of the government, named to advise the army and navy.

While the "preparedness" part of the program is insisted upon by those who conceived it, the humanity aspects of it are regarded as of even more vital importance. For there are those that predict that the navy some day—when there cease to be wars and rumors of war—will be only an adjunct of the coast guard, developed to its highest capacity as an economizer of life and property, and that the navy in peace times will have peace work cut out for it that is not entirely making ready for war, but will have a commercial and utilitarian purpose.

To Divide Coast Into Sections.

The idea, as set forth by the Aero Club of America, is to divide the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the shores of the great lakes and the coast of the gulf of Mexico into sections "of convenient length, say about 100 miles each." In each of these sections would be established a coast defense station, where would be erected a hangar for housing a seaplane and equipment to make all minor repairs. Several larger stations would be established at suitable intervals, where all more complicated repairs could be made or a complete overhauling given at regular periods.

Elaborating the plan, as set forth by the Aero Club of America, each hangar would be the home of a seaplane. A driver and an observer would be attached to it. The seaplane would be equipped with light wireless apparatus, powerful binocular glasses and a sensitive microphone.

"The partly submerged derelict," says the Aero Club of America, "too light to sink and a constant menace to traffic, would be spotted by the aerial scout and its presence reported. Wrecks, vessels in distress and all other marine accidents would be reported and aid quickly summoned when necessary."

But if ever war should arise, in the opinion of Rear Admiral Peary, the first value of this coast patrol service would be the prompt report. "Early and equipped for service," from a hundred or more trained fliers and observers from mechanicians and helpers organized into a state of "military preparedness."

Duty In Time of War.

As war duty each of the seaplanes, according to the outline of the plan, would take position about fifty miles off shore and patrol its respective beat, the shore line of the prescribed section, continuously back and forth. In clear weather, at a height of 2,000 feet above sea level, the observer would have a vision of fifty miles to the horizon. At night or in fog the seaplanes would be compelled to sweep lower or find a landing. At all times they would be expected to be invisible to a distant enemy.

By means of the wireless information as to character, number and apparent destination of approaching ships would be transmitted to shore stations and thence to Washington or a government center, whence if the ships were hostile orders would be issued directing the movements of defending warships and the submarine squadrons for the preparation of coast defenses and for the concentration of troops. If necessary reserve seaplanes, hurrying out, would keep the approaching craft under continuous observation while themselves invisible and in communication with shore.

"Such a system is a new departure," declares Rear Admiral Peary. "The like of it exists nowhere at present. Yet it involves no new principle, but is simply the utilization and multiplication of the known capacities of a single seaplane."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Guard the Heart.

That heart disease kills more people in the United States than tuberculosis, pneumonia or any other disease is the statement given out by Director Sam L. Rogers of the bureau of the census, Washington. But the greatest significance attached to the fact that heart disease is now causing more deaths than any other disease is the necessity for regulating daily living habits. Overeating, overdrinking, overplaying and overworking are pointed out as the chief causes of this disease. In other words, heart disease is the result of improper living and is, after all, very largely a matter of personal hygiene. Health experts declare heart disease to be merely the effects of fast and improper living and the inconsiderate treatment given the human body.

WHAT WAR COSTS ALLIES.

England, France and Canada Spend Over $40,000,000 a Day.

Following are some of the facts about war costs revealed at the sessions of the British, French and Canadian parliaments:

Daily Expenditures.—Great Britain, $25,000,000; France, $15,000,000; Canada, $083,000.

Total Expenditures Since War Began.—France, $8,882,000,000; Canada, $408,000,000.

Interest on French debt is $840,000,000.

Pension and soldiers' family allowances by France amount to over $1,000,000,000.

French estimate of artillery and munition costs for second quarter of 1916 is $400,000,000, an increase of $90,000,000 over first quarter.

Canada's appropriation for maintenance of 400,000 men during 1916 is $250,000,000.

The Joy of a Dog

Ma says no, it's too much care,
An' it will scatter germs an' hair,
An' it's a nuisance through and through
An' barks when you don't want it to,
An' carries dirt from off the street
An' tracks the carpets with its feet,
But it's a sign he's growin' up
When he is longin' for a pup.

Most every night he comes to me
An' climbs astraddle of my knee
An' starts to fondle me an' pet,
Then asks me if I've found one yet.
An' ma says: "Now, don't tell him yes.
You know they make an awful mess,"
An' starts their faults to catalog,
But every boy should have a dog.

An' some night when he comes to me,
Deep in my pocket there will be
The pup he's hungry to possess
Or else I sadly miss my guess.
For I remember all the joy
A dog meant to a little boy
Who loved it in the long ago,
The joy that's now his right to know.

TO USE BATTLESHIPS AS SUMMER TRAINING CAMPS

Men Who Make Cruise Expected to Enlist in Navy if War Comes.

Secretary Daniels and his advisers have decided to inaugurate a system of civilian naval training similar in general outline to that on which military training camps have been established at Plattsburg and elsewhere. It is planned to use six battleships to take those who present themselves for training for a month's cruise, beginning about Aug. 15.

The vessels to be utilized as training ships will take on their student personnel along the Atlantic coast, probably at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Portland and Charleston. It is estimated that the six battleships will make possible the training of 2,500 men. A similar program, it is expected, will be prepared for next year for development of the plan on the Pacific coast.

The only compulsory requirement is that each volunteer declare his intention of giving his service to the navy in case of war.

Some rudimentary knowledge of seamanship, machinery, radio, electricity or navigation will be required of each applicant. Each man will receive at the end of the cruise a certificate showing exactly what he has done during his service.

The expense per man is not expected to exceed $50, which would pay for his food and provide the necessary clothing, making it possible for the navy to carry out the plan virtually without expense.

CIGAR SHAPED SHIPS NEXT.

Type of Vessel Designed In England to Carry Oil Across the Atlantic.

Cigar shaped ships, carrying each 20,000 tons of oil, will probably be used to transport oil to England from America in the near future.

They will travel under water, or, at least, in an almost submerged position, and be towed across the ocean by steamers. It has been found that a submerged vessel can be towed much more easily than an ordinary vessel of the same size, this being due to the fact that the vessel is, even in its surface position, almost entirely submerged, and the discovery has been made use of in the design of the new gigantic oil carriers.

Another novelty will be the permanent storage of large quantities of oil under water. Ordinary oil storage tanks are splendid marks for big guns and are also vulnerable to attack from the air. The new method consists in sinking large steel cylinders filled with oil in an artificial lake, the oil being pumped in or out as required. An air chamber in each cylinder provides means for raising it to the surface of the water.

NEW GUN FOR GERMANS.

Revolver Cannon Designed For Use Against Allies In France.

The neutral correspondent who worked for a time in the Krupp factory at Essen and who is describing his observations in a series of articles in the London Daily Express gives in his second article details of the new Krupp revolver gun obtained from a fellow workman employed in the shop where these new and powerful weapons are being made.

The caliber of the new gun is 3.5 centimeters, and it far outranges the English machine guns. It has no wheels, but is mounted on a tripod which can be carried by two men. Fifty of these guns already have been completed, and 200 more are to follow. They are designed, he says, to break the defense on the Yser.

The writer admits that he was speedily discharged from the Krupp works for lack of skill.

Some Queer English Names.

We may puzzle our brains over the tongue twisting names which France and Russia have given to some of their towns, but England furnishes a few quite as dazzling as that of Przemysl. Hurstmonceaux, for instance, is pronounced Her-so; Kirkcudbright, Kir-coo-bree; Daventry, Dantry; Leominster, Lemster, and Evesham is called E-sham.

Mrs. Louise Barron and Henry Brinker of Easton, Pa., though twins, were born in different years, months and days. Mr. Brinker was born a few minutes before midnight Dec. 31, 1840, and Mrs. Barron was born shortly after 12 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 1, 1841.

A CLASSICAL POSER.

It Made a Deep Dent In One Juvenile Brain Box.

Children and classic poetry should be kept apart if one has much respect for the classics.

I remember that when I was a relatively speaking innocent child I used to hear the older pupils in McGuffey's justly celebrated Fourth Reader singsong the first lines of Bryant's beautiful "To a Waterfowl."

Those who remember the lines will recall the stately "Whither, mid falling dew."

But they will also remember how the average school pupil read it—in a manner calculated to keep the late Mr. W. C. B. revolving, swiftly as a whirling dervish, in his family vault.

I used to listen to it and wonder what on earth a "whithermid" was and why it was always falling due.

I wondered if it was anything like a mortgage, a promissory note or an insurance premium. I also wondered why in the world the person involved in the matter didn't pay his whithermids when they fell due instead of letting them run on and maybe get him into trouble at the bank.

I sat there in my little jackknife engraved seat and nobly resolved that when I grew up I should meet my whithermids promptly and take them up the very moment they fell due. I was going to have no whithermid falling due without my being right there to attend to it and foil the villain who was anxious to foreclose!—Strickland Gillilan in Judge.

CITY MANAGEMENT WORKS WONDERS.

What New Methods Have Accomplished In Certain Municipalities.

The misrule of American cities is notorious at home and abroad, writes Charles B. Strayer in Leslie's Weekly. Graft is rampant. Political spoilsmen mulct our cities and the taxpayers foot the bills. German municipalities, on the other hand, are famous throughout the world for the absence of graft and the efficiency of their administration. There the administration of cities is a distinct profession to which men devote their lives. The administrator who has made a good record in one city is called from a small municipality to a larger one.

"Great industrial corporations, such as the Standard Oil company and the United States Steel corporation, are conducted with an efficiency nowhere excelled. The taxpayers can have the same results in municipal administration whenever they get thoroughly tired of being robbed by the politicians and grafters and demand municipal reform.

"An increasing number of American cities are reaping the benefits of administration by managers chosen because of proved ability to conduct great enterprises. Gaylord C. Cummin, as manager of Jackson, Mich., worked wonders in that city of 35,000 people in one year. Municipal employees were taken out of politics. Property to the value of $383,000, formerly exempted from taxation without legal reason, was restored to the tax rolls. The poor department was consolidated with the organized charities, with a trained social worker at the head. Rigid milk inspection was inaugurated and sanitary inspection made efficient for the first time. Without raising the tax rate these and numerous other reforms were inaugurated, a floating deficit of $20,000 wiped out, the city's net indebtedness reduced $50,000 and a cash balance left of $10,000, exclusive of the sinking fund."

Church Steeples.

The church steeple was originally designed as a means of advertising the situation of the church. Among the low buildings which originally prevailed the steeple was an impressive beacon, but under modern conditions it is a failure, as even the most towering steeple is lost among the higher industrial structures reared around it. The steeple is really being replaced by electricity, which answers the purpose much more satisfactorily. Electrically illuminated signs are being introduced quite extensively for this purpose.

FINANCING BEAUTY.

How a Small Michigan Town Has Made Improvements.

For years a rapid little stream wasted its energy in the heart of Paw Paw. The flats along the river were unsightly; the banks were not beautiful. At last civic pride and business instinct correlated. The uplift clubs agitated; the business men thought. At a cost of $50,000 they improved the river and formed a beautiful lake in the heart of the city, and that without condemning any valuable land. The city is more sanitary, there are hundreds of homes that now have a lake front, and all this beauty is more than self supporting. The power furnishes light for the homes, and all the city lights, used with freedom for advertising signs and illumination, come from its own power house. The light sold to private consumers more than pays for the city light.

The Woman's club in Paw Paw has a neat clubhouse and is now using it for social purposes. It is a part of the civic life. It is not selfishly locked for members only. The club has realized the financial side of community life. On reception night of the woman's week carnival the club members wore gowns purchased in Paw Paw. They published the papers for the week. It was Paw Paw week and woman's week combined—uplift, financial prosperity, health, beauty, social happiness, all to the front.

Paw Paw has gone sane on its uplift plans. The business club adopted a suggestion to control the concession and amusement features about the lake, the boating and bathing facilities, with the double purpose of saving any income from them and keeping them on the moral plane.

In this way they follow the plan adopted by a Canada club which controls all the pool halls and other places of amusement. The money gained finances the club; the moral gain helps the home. Correlation is coming at last. Ethics, art and business sense make for the better city when doing team work.—American City.

LIBERTY LONG CUT TOBACCO

LIBERTY comes only in long, silky shreds, because only long, unbroken leaf is used in making it.

That means LIBERTY is a real long cut.

And LIBERTY is absolutely free from loose, hard stems—they're picked out by hand.

That means LIBERTY is real tobacco.

LIBERTY packs right down into your pipe for a cool, slow-burning smoke. Or rolls into a wad of juicy sweetness for a husky, lasting, man-size chew.

LIBERTY is made of full-bodied, full-flavored Kentucky tobacco. And the ageing we give this rich leaf—up to five years—puts a satisfying relish into LIBERTY that just suits hearty chewers and smokers from the ground up.

FULTON'S SCHOOLS IN ART CRAFT WORK WON HIGH PRAISE

Fulton was advertised abroad on Saturday thru the excellency of the work done in the art craft department in our local schools.

Miss Nancy Cook, instructor in handwork, attended the Syracuse Art Conference in Syracuse Saturday and gave a talk on the plan of this department of work in our city's schools. Samples of work executed by the students were exhibited.

Dr. Royal F. Farnum of the New York State Department of Education was a speaker at the meeting and gave high praise to the methods followed in the Fulton schools where design is applied by the student rather than merely produced on paper. Dr. Farnum highly commended our local Board of Education, Prof. Fairgrieve and Miss Cook's superior training in bringing out the value of right effort in this particular training. The local exhibit has been asked by Dr. Farnum to be taken to the American Art Conference to be held in Cleveland in April. This exhibit Dr. Farnum stated he would use as an example of "The trend of the times in artwork in the New York State schools."

Miss Cook is the secretary and treasurer of the Conference.

A COW THAT DIDN'T GET IT

ONE THAT DID

I tried your Medicated Brick on my cow, which had gotten thin and snaggy and had no appetite. After using the Brick two weeks her hair began to shed and in a short time her milk doubled. The cow has been in perfect health since, and I am naturally a great believer in your remedy. I have sold a great deal of it to customers who have seen my cow both before and after treatment, that being all the argument needed. J. V. MYRICK.

87 OBSERVED MEMORY DAY

White Ribboners Paid Glowing Tribute to Life Work of Union's Founder, Last Frday.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met at the Baptist church Friday afternoon. Notwithstanding the severe storm, there was an attendance of eighty-seven members. The meeting was of unusual interest, it being Frances Willard Memorial Day. A large picture of the founder of the organization, draped in white ribbon, occupied a conspicuous place. Mrs. Sylvester conducted devotional exercises as well as the business meeting, Mrs. Bogardus being in charge of the program.

Miss Ruth Jennings rendered a violin solo and Miss Thelma Bogardus sang, pleasingly, the "Ribbon White."

A Matrons' reading contest had been arranged for and the remainder of the evening was given up to this. The six contestants did so admirably that it must have been difficult to decide which one was most deserving. Miss Ada Thayer and Miss Marion Dickerman kindly acted as judges, and all felt their decision was a just one in awarding to Mrs. Charles Olmstead the silver medal. Her selection being the "Fourth of July at Forrest Home", which is an account of a pleasing incident in the childhood of Miss Willard. After Miss Dickerman presented the medal Mrs. L. P. Smith sang, feelingly words of which were her own composition.

Refreshments were served, with Mrs. Glenn Streeter in charge of this part of the program.

Several new members were received, and we were glad to have Mrs. Stevens of Phoenix, the county president, with us. The local organization now numbers about 175. A cordial invitation is always extended to the women of Fulton to come with us and help in bringing to pass Nation-wide Prohibition.— (Contributed).

CHARITIES AID O. K.'S INQUIRY

New York—A hope that no effort will succeed in discrediting the charities investigation which is being conducted by Charles H. Strong, appointed by Governor Whitman under the Moreland Act, is implied in a resolution adopted by the Board of Managers of the State Charities Aid Association which has been sent to Governor Whitman by Professer G. F. Canfield, Acting President of the Association.

The preamble of the resolution points out that "it has been the policy of the State Charities Aid Association during the forty-three years of its existence to support any effort to improve the condition of dependent children and other wards of the public."

The resolution expresses the Association's "hearty approval of the action of the Governor in instituting the present investigation, pursuant to the provisions of the Moreland Act."

The resolution ends with the following paragraph:

"Be it Further Resolved, That we consider it highly desirable and greatly for the public intereats that an impartial, thorough and complete investigation be made to the end that it may be determined upon the basis of full knowledge what chonges may be necessary in legislation and administration,

"First,—In order to provide a simple, efficient and constructive management of the State Institutions, and

"Second,—In order to secure an adequate supervision and control of the private Charitable Institutions caring for dependent children who are publiccharg es."

In his letter to the Governor Mr. Canfield says:

"I believe that everyone interested in bringing about improvements in the administration of public charities will join with you in pour desire that an impartial, complete and thorough investigation, such as you have provided for, shall bem ade, and that the judgment of the public be suspended until all the facts are known."

ENTERTAINMENTS IN HONOR OF MISS INGAMELLS

COMM'R SOMERS NEEDS AID

Many Persons Applying to Charity Department for Food and Fuel; Need Clothing, Also.

Commissioner of Charities J. R. Somers assigned Fred Pruyne an aged mill worker, to the County Home at Mexico on Saturday.

Pruyne, who stated that he has no friends or relatives here who could take care of him in his present condition, requested Mr. Somers to send him to the institution, if only for temporary relief. The man is in a pitiable condition.

Mr. Somers stated donation of clothing and shoes, particularly for children, would aid in his department. Last week, a newsboy, attired in scanty clothes of light texture was fitted out with an overcoat, which he had lacked until this time. The overcoat was one contributed to Mr. Somers' department by one of the City Hall employees.

"While I realize tha tthe Salvation Army and other institutions," said the ommissioner, "the receiving and liberally disposing of clothing, at the same time, many of the children who accompanytheir parents here who apply for food and fuel are far from being fully and properly dressed. One boy, in particular, came in here last week clothed entirely in summer apparel, and it would have been a good thing if we had a heavier lot of clothing to give him. This department would appreciate it if people would bring cast-off clothing here."

PARKER MEETS FISHER TONIGHT

Most of the interest in tonight's fistic bouts at the Foster Theater, given in connection with the first smoker of the newly organized Independent A. C., centers on the main evend of six rounds between "Kid" Parker of this city and "Al" Fisher, of Syracuse. Parker has everything to lose if defeated by the Syracusan, as it will mean squelching what appears to be a promising outlook tor championship honors in this section of the State. If he wins against Fisher, it will mean that he will be pitted against the rest of the Syracusans who excel at the weight. Crozier and Unryan, the two bestofferings of the salt city in this division will without doubt, have an opportunity of meeting the local boy if tonight's battle results in his favor.

The fans in Syracuse were favorably impressed with thel ocal bay (whose real name by the way is not Parker) and his easy victory Thursday night paved the way for future ap pearances in the Syracuse arenas. Supporters of the local boy expect much from him. Before his retirement about a year ago, he was coming along at a fast clip. Once he gets back into his old time shape, he is expected to put this city on the map again as far as pugilism is concerned.

$11,662.50 FEES FROM COUNTY

1552 Motor Vehicle Licenses Issued in Oswego County H... Swell State Total of $1,940,527.

Albany—One of the 1,552 motor vehicles wh ch were registered in Oswego county last year with Secretary of State Francis H. Hugo, 1,480 were pleasure and 41 commercial cars. Of the total number of the former, 697 were first registered in 1915, while of the latter 19 had not previously been registered. No less than 234,032 motor vehicles, ranging all the way from the flivver to the magnificently appointed limousine and the ponderous truck, were registered with the Secretary of State last year, an increase of 64,066, or a trifle bette rthan 5,000 a month, over 1914 when 169,966 were registered as compared with 134,405 in 1913.

According to the records in Secretary Hugo's office, Oswego county had 29 automobile dealers last year, 20 of the number registering for the first time. Two of the county's cars were exempt last year from registration.

The receipts of the office from the 1915 licenses, chauffeurs' and miscellaneous fees amounted to $1,913,175, although the total receipts for last year footed to $1,940,527, this amount including moneys received in December from early aplicants for 1916 plates which were not required, however, until February 1st. Oswego county contributed $11,662.50 of which the owners' and dealers' fees came to $10,310.50.

There were 339 chauffeurs registered in Oswego county last year, 159 of the number entering the business for the first time. Chauffeurs contributed $1,115 in fees, while such fees as came from vendees' affidavits, lost plates, badges, etc., amounted to $197.

While the receipts from the registration of motor vehicles in New York State increased from $1,275,727 in 1913 to $1,929,852 in 1914 and to almost two millions last year, the expenses of running the Automobile Bureau under the direction of the Secretary of State has decreased from 24.5 per cent of the receipts in 1911 to 12.6 per cent during the last year.

It is estimated that there are now more than 4,000,000 automobiles in operation in this country as compared with 44,000 eight years ago. Last year 892,618 cars were manufactured in the United States with a retail value of $691,000,000, of which the passenger cars were valued at $565,000,000.

In the last eight years the average price has fallen fro $2,125 to $814. Nearly one-half the total number of cars are owned by persons whose incomes are $1,000 to $2,000 a year. During 1914 there were 339 establishments in this country making complete automobiles. There has been an increase of 350 per cent in the last five years in the numbers of automobiles manufactured.

With a population of 75,978 according to the 1915 State Census, there is now an automobile to every 66 persons in Oswego county.

TWO SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES ON SLEIGHRIDE

The third annual sleighride of the Tec class of the Congregational Sunday school was held Friday evening under the competent management of Mr. William C. Barry. The one held last season was also managed by Mr. Barry and was considered a great success, but the one this season was a still greater success. The load of happy persons left the Sunday school rooms at 8 o'clock, returning at 10:30. Games were played and a most enjoyable time was followed by a light luncheon. Those present were the members of Mrs. Norton's class and the boys of Mrs. Franklin's class. Mr. Barry certainly deserves credit for his untiring efforts to make a success of every thing he undertakes in the Sunday school social affairs.—(Contributed).

A Forgotten Existence

By ELEANOR MARSH

I was traveling on a railway train. Suddenly I felt a sharp pain in my head. Then I lost consciousness. When I came to myself I saw several persons standing about me, one, a woman, with a bottle of smelling salts in her hand. I tried to recall where I was going. I could not. Then I tried to recall from where I had come. I failed in this too. Doubtless I appeared dazed to those about me, for a woman said:

"She'll come all right presently. Give her a chance to collect her faculties."

After I had been asked a few questions I gave those about me to understand that I wished to be left alone, and one after the other they went to their seats. Then to my horror I found that I didn't know my own name. I didn't know my parents' name nor who they were. Everything beyond the present was lost in oblivion.

Would it all come back? I believed it would. But it did not. I looked in my purse and found tickets to a city and bank bills to the amount of $24, besides some silver. I searched among a few slips of paper hoping to see my name. There was not a word to suggest who I was.

Not caring to go into a large city in such a condition I got off at a suburban station. It was springtime. I passed a snug cottage, in the grounds of which were two little girls playing. I craved some one to speak to and preferred these innocents to any one else. The gate was open, and I entered the yard, calling to them to come to me. They did so, and I put an arm about each of them. I talked to them and they to me. I cared not what was said, I felt comfort in their company.

"Papa!"

One of the children looked up at some one entering the gateway. I followed the direction of her glance and saw a man about to enter. There was something so kindly in his face that I felt impelled to tell him my trouble and ask his advice as to what I should do. He listened to me, asked me a few questions, then said:

"Come into the house and we will see what can be done for you."

His household was run by an elderly woman. There was also a nurse for the children. He told the former to give me a room for the night, and he and I and the children dined together. After dinner he informed me of steps he proposed to take on the morrow to discover my identity, suggesting that I examine my clothing to discover if there was a mark that would help us. After dinner I went to my room and made the examination. There was nothing to give any clew.

Mr. Seagrave, the gentleman, telephoned an advertisement to a newspaper in the city describing me and the incident connected with me. He said he thought my relatives would be on the lookout for such a notice and I would hear from them very soon. He also gave me permission to remain in his house till I was claimed or my memory returned. I had enough money to pay my board for two or three weeks, but after that I would be penniless.

Time passed and no one claimed me. I wondered if I had any relatives. I judged that I was about twenty-one years old. Had I been married? If so my husband would doubtless move heaven and earth to find me.

When three weeks had gone by I tendered Mr. Seagrave my $24 for my keep and told him that it was all I had. He offered to discharge the nurse and make me the governess of his children. I gladly accepted.

A doctor who was called in to see me said that he was of the opinion my loss of memory had been occasioned either by a former sickness or trouble. I showed no sign of having been ill, and there was no evidence of a past trouble.

What I had been I knew not. I knew that I was very happy in Mr. Seagrave's home. I loved the two little girls, and I grew to love him. A widower, he naturally pined for a woman's companionship. I had not been in his house a year before he asked me to marry him.

Alas! I knew not whether or no I was free to marry any one. There was a long struggle between my desire to be his wife and to mother his two dear little girls. He seemed to have made up his mind to take the chances himself, and at last I consented. We were married. He, I and the children were happy.

About two years after my marriage I awoke one morning after a long sleep my former self. It was a horrible awakening. I had married a man who had treated me brutally, and after a terrible scene I had caught up what money there was in the house and left him. He had married me in opposition to his parents' will and had thus given up a fortune.

I told Mr. Seagrave that my memory had returned, that our marriage was not legal. He bade me be comforted, that all would come out right. I gave him information to guide him, and he proceeded to look up the case.

One day soon after this he came home and took me in his arms, evidently very happy. He told me that my former husband had died and that his father had advertised for me. I went to see him, and he said he had sought me that he might make amends for his son's cruelty. He was very rich and at once settled a part of his fortune on me. When he died I received the rest.

MANY PATHS OPEN FOR THE RUSSIANS

Fall of Erzerum Important Victory For Entente Allies.

MARCH ON TURK CAPITAL?

Great Distances a Big Handicap to Both Armies Operating In That Territory—Captured City Was Important Base in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78.

Several possibilities are opened up by Grand Duke Nicholas' capture of Erzerum and other Turkish positions. Will his victorious army, which thus has forced its way through the back door of Turkey, attempt to reach Constantinople through the mountain passes of Armenia? Will it send an expedition north to Trebizond, on the Black sea, through an equally forbidding country? Will it descend the Euphrates with the idea of relieving the British position on the Tigris? Or, and this seems the most probable solution, will it descend the Euphrates to the point where it is crossed by the Bagdad railway? The latter achieved and this alternative could be indulged in—a march on Constantinople or one across the desert to Aleppo, where is said to be gathering the Turko-German army for a second attempt to capture Egypt and the Suez canal.

Some military experts believe that the recent activity shown by the Anglo-Indian force on the Tigris and the Russian armies in Armenia and Persia was begun and developed with the idea of serving as deterrents to a second attack on Egypt, just as it is expected that an offensive of the allies on the Saloniki littoral will shortly be developed with the same end in view.

Distances Greatest Handicap.

The distances, however, are so vast that at no point can military operations at present be made to illustrate this theory. From Constantinople to Erzerum is 740 miles; from Erzerum to Kut-el-Amara, the immediate objective of the Anglo-Indian force on the Tigris, is 640, and from the Russian advance in Persia to Kut-el-Amara is 250 miles, while Erzerum, the Russian position in Persia, and the Anglo-Indian position on the Tigris form a broken line whose nearest point to the Suez canal is 725 miles.

On Jan. 6 the Russian general staff issued a long report on the army of the Caucasus from the time the grand duke had taken command, on Sept. 5, to the end of 1915. According to this report, the Turks had begun to prepare for the Russian offensive in Armenia as early as November, when the Third Turkish army, anticipating the German-Austrian drive in the Balkans and the retirement of the Franco-British forces from Gallipoli, had been ordered to the region between the Russian lines and Erzerum.

The plan of the Third army was as follows: The Ninth and Tenth corps were to advance to Olti and form an offensive wing, whereas the Eleventh corps was ordered to hold its powerfully organized position and to attack, through a strategic demonstration, the weight of the Russian troops. In case the latter took an energetic offensive the Eleventh corps was ordered to fall back on the fortress of Erzerum, carrying along with it the Russian troops. At the proper time the latter would be attacked by the Ninth and Tenth corps, together with such re-enforcements as could be sent from Constantinople. It was the intention of the Turks to use the great fortress of Erzerum on the left flank or in the center as circumstances might demand, feeling sure the Russians could not muster a sufficient force to envelop the city.

The grand duke knew all this by Dec. 1. Without displaying any activity or signs of re-enforcements on this line in Armenia he sent a column south into Persia in the direction of Hamadan, where it defeated a large force of Persian insurgents, Turks and 1,200 Germans. At the same time, with the main army not deployed, but divided into ten columns, each flanked by large forces of Cossacks, he began his advance on Erzerum.

He was lured on, as Enver Pasha had intended, by the Eleventh Turkish corps, but before he could be attacked by the Ninth and Tenth these corps had been isolated by the superior Russian forces to the south of Erzerum, and the Eleventh corps was driven into the city.

Germans Are Re-enforced.

This was on Jan. 25 last. On the same day re-enforcements with many German officers were started from Constantinople, and it was announced that Field Marshal Baron Kolmar von der Goltz, formerly military adviser to Enver Pasha, had been placed at the head of the Turkish forces in Armenia. Von der Goltz arrived at Erzerum on Feb. 1 and at once assumed command.

Between ten and fifteen miles south of the city the Ninth and Tenth corps, re-enforced by Field Marshal Liman von Sanders with most of the Turkish First corps and 10,000 Germans, who up to Dec. 15 had been engaged at Gallipoli, attempted to prevent the Russian columns from enveloping the city on the south, but before the relief corps could effect a junction with the other two it had been attacked and compelled to retire.

THE TALE OF A BOBCAT

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Friends and naybuurs," began old Joe Grimm as he took a seat on a cracker barrel at the crossroads store, "you all know that up to five y'ars ago I lived over in Joe Davis county. I had a squat over thar by the big Blue Gum swamp. Thar was forty acres of land in the squat, and it was mighty pore land. It was all I could do to raise nuff co'n and taters fur me and the ole woman. If it hadn't been that the Blue Gum was full of varmints that I could trap in the winter and sell their furs I reckon we should have starved out.

"One winter, for some reason or other, most of the varmints left the swamp, and it was mighty poor trappin'. I got just enough fur to keep us goin', and as a consequence when spring and summer cum along we was powerful hard up and like to go hungry in another month.

"One night arter the ole woman had given me three or four hints about laziness we went to bed feelin' that Providence was to blame for it all. Along about midnight she nodged me awake and said:

"'Joe, I have got a bright idea. It's fur you to go in the swamp tomorrer and set a deadfall to catch a bobcat. If you kin ketch a big bobcat mebbe you kin sell him at Mud Flats or the Bend to some one fur a pet. He orter bring at least $3.'

"It was worth thinkin' about," said Joe, "and next day I reckoned it might pay to try it. I went out and set a deadfall, and while I was doin' it a bouncin' big bobcat ran up a tree clus beside me and gin a screech that riz my ha'r up.

"That night about 12 o'clock we was awoke by the durndest screamin' and screechin' that a man ever heard of. It come from a bobcat who had meddled with that deadfall.

"We got her caged, and next mawnin' I set out for the town of Mud Flats. I went thar kase thar was two or three rich men in the place who might buy the cat and kase thar was to be lecshun thar that day.

"Eight miles below Mud Flats was Walnut Bend, a town of about 1,500 people, without any mud in front of it. The Benders wanted the county seat moved over thar, and after a lot of hard feelin's about it it was agreed to hold a lecshun. It was to be held in Mud Flats, and that is what brung about 250 Benders over thar the day I drove in with the cat. I hadn't driv inter the town yit when I met old Jim Darby in the road. Arter he had nodded to me and took a look at the cage he says:

"'What ye got thar, Joe?'

"'A big bobcat,' I says.

"'What ye goin' to do with him?'

"'Sell him if I kin.'

"Ole Jim steps aroun' to the back of the wagon and peeks in and the cat gives a scream and spits in his face. With that, old Jim backs up and walks the road a few feet. When he cums back to me he says:

"'Joe, these Mud Flatters are a tricky lot. They have formed in line in front of the polls and are goin' to vote so slow that us Benders won't stand no show to git the county seat. I wonders'—

"'What ye wonderin' about, Jim?' says I.

"'I think we might make use o' that cat—I think so. If he was turned loose down by the votin' place what would he do?'

"'Why, he would bite and claw until you could smell sulphur.'

"'I reckon he would, Joe. What I want of him is to drive these Flatters away from the poles and gin my men a chance to hold the land. If you think he kin do this there is $10 in it fur you.'

"'I want jest four times that, Jim,' says I, seein' my advantage.

"Jim sticks fur awhile, strokin' his red chin whiskers, and he finally cums to my terms. He tells me what to do as he passes up the money and starts back to the town and gives his men the wink, and they all draws off to an old barn farther down the street. Then I drives in and stand up in my wagon and shouts out that I have a big bobcat for sale. The street was full of men, but no one minds me. I shouts out that I will take $5 fur the varmint. Then I lowers the price to $4—and $3—and $2, and arter about ten minutes of this hollerin' I gits the signal from Jim, and I pretends to git mighty mad, and I yells out:

"'If nobody will buy this bob of me then I am goin' to turn him loose and let him find his way back to his lovin' home in Blue Gum!'

"What I did took the crowd by surprise. I turned to the cage and tore off a couple of slats, and the cat cum out like a bullet. He clawed my cap off as he cum and then bit the ole mule on his way to the ground, and a fiend was let loose in Mud Flats.

"He broke up that votin' line in thirty seconds, and he drove men inter stores and shops and houses. Lawd, but he was a fury! He was as mad as six b'ars rolled inter one.

"It was when the cat started fur home that Old Jim appeared with his men and formed a solid line befo' the polls. They kept that line all day, in spite of many fouts, and when the closin' hour came they had the county seat by 150 majority. And when I got home and showed the ole woman the money and told her we could live a life of luxury fur the rest of our lives she jest up and fainted away."

For the Children

Some Little Folks Who Go to School Out of Doors.

Every morning at 9 o'clock, winter or summer, a band of little children make their appearance in Morningside park, New York city. They are all suitably clothed and in age range from two to eight years. Weather does not bother these little scholars, for only a driving rain or a hard snow storm keeps them indoors. When an ordinary rainstorm makes its appearance they are not bothered, for the children are provided with raincoats. School sessions are opened with song, the selection usually being "So Very, Very Early in the Morning." The picture shows a couple of these healthy, happy little youngsters raising their voices in melody. The idea of the outdoor school is primarily the benefits of fresh air. These little folks are taught, besides the three "R's," modeling, mat weaving and all about plants and trees. All of them are pictures of health and think it is great fun to go to school in the park. When the weather is so very bad that even they cannot remain in the open they go to the home of their teacher, Mrs. Calvert, who has provided sand piles, toys and games for their amusement and instruction. More than half a hundred of these little tots are under Mrs. Calvert's care. She and her assistants call each day for their pupils and marshal them to the park, which is near Columbia university.

The Brown Thrasher.

The brown thrasher is one of our most useful birds. He measures eleven and one-half inches in length. Perched upon the very top of a tree, which usually is not a very tall one, with head up and tail down, he pours out a flood of music—high notes and low notes, smooth notes and rough notes all jumbled together as if the singer were really beside himself.

Following are a few marks by which he can be distinguished from all the other thrushlike birds: The two white wing bars, the extraordinarily long tail, which is a bright reddish brown, and the long continued, bright and cheerful carol which is heard in the morning (this favorite time for singing), consisting of all sorts of musical sounds. While the farmer is planting the seed he cries, "Drop it, drop it—cover it up, cover it up—pull it up, pull it up, pull it up." His call is a clear whistled "wheeu."

Game of Cities.

In this game the players sit in a circle around a table, and each one is provided with a piece of paper and a pencil. The leader asks them to write at the head of the paper the name of a city, each being different. They are allowed five minutes to make up a sentence, each word of which must begin with the letters composing the name of the city. For example:

City—Chicago.

Sentence—Came home in carriage after going out.

If any one fails to have a correct sentence at the end of five minutes he must pay a forfeit.

Jumping Letters.

1. Jump a piece of marsh land and find part of Great Britain.
2. Jump able to endure hardship and find yourself held in moral obligation.
3. Jump to clean with a brush and find yourself in tears.
4. Jump articles of household furniture and find the most competent of men.
5. Jump a marsh plant and find borders.

Answers.—1, Swale—Wales; 2, tough—ought; 3, sweep—weeps; 4, tables—ablest; 5, sedge—edges.

Ideas About the Sun.

In ancient times the philosophers held very erroneous notions concerning the size of the sun. Anaximander thought that it might be nearly as large as the then known earth, including southern Europe, northern Africa and western Asia. Anaxagoras declared it could be no larger than Greece and her islands. Heraclitus convinced his hearers that it was about the size of a man's head.

Naughty Nettie.

Naughty Nettie took a penny
From her mother's purse,
And she also spent the penny,
Which was even worse.
But she bought a stick of candy,
And it made her sick;
Then she up and told her mother
Very, very quick.

TASTY LUNCHEONS.

SHEPHERD'S PIE.—One and a half pounds of lean stewing lamb, a quart of potatoes, a cupful of cut onions, half a cupful of cut carrot, two tablespoonfuls of cut parsley, two teaspoonfuls of salt and a dash of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of flour. Wipe and wash the meat, put on to boil in two quarts of boiling water, boil an hour, then add onions and carrots and seasoning and boil until tender. Remove four cupfuls of the stock for the soup, to the remainder add the flour, which has been mixed with a little cold water, boil five minutes. The potatoes are boiled and mashed and put around the edge of agate platter, the meat is put in the center, all is dusted with paprika, put in oven until potatoes are brown; sprinkle with parsley.

Beef Patties.—Take thick slices of bread—a week old if it can be obtained—make them the desired form and size with a tin cutter, scoop out the middle to receive the mince, dip each piece of bread into cream, and when drained brush them with the white of egg. Sift breadcrumbs or bread raspings over them, fry in good fresh butter, then fill them with the following mince made hot: Shred one pound of undercooked beef, a little fat and lean together, season with pepper or cayenne, salt and a little onion.

Mock Venison Steak.—Buy a good sized leg and loin of lamb. Use chops for one meal, make this recipe from the leg and a stew from the remainder. Materials: Leg of lamb, glass of currant jelly, one-half cupful butter, one scant teaspoonful mustard, one-eighth teaspoonful salt and pepper, a wineglassful of sherry if possible. Utensils: Enameled pan for sauce, tablespoon, cup, large frying pan. Directions: Make a sauce by softening the jelly in a pan over the fire, add the butter, mustard, salt and pepper. Bring to a scald and keep hot until the steaks are ready. Thick steaks are cut from the best part of the leg. Heat the frying pan hot, drop in a little butter, then put in steaks, sear quickly, turn and sear on the other side. Cook quickly, but do not burn. Pour over the sauce, let boil up, add sherry and put on a hot platter.

vest, a pointed tunic, snug cuffs and a banded skirt are all good points. This model will be beautiful in any of the novelty taffetas.

Flemish Sausages.

These sausages are different from other kinds, and they are made in the following way: Take a pound of beef, a pound of pork, a pound of back fat (pork), half an ounce of brown sugar, a pinch of saltpeter, an ounce of salt, an eighth of an ounce of ground pimento and a quarter of an ounce of pepper. Mince the meat up finely, also the fat, add the seasoning, let it stand for a few hours, then add a pint of water in which a quarter of an ounce of strong tea has been infused, mix up well and fill into skins, or it can be made into little balls as large as walnuts. They are cooked on the stove and served for tea.

Asparagus Salad.

Roquefort dressing. Drain the liquid from a can of asparagus tips and put them on ice for half an hour. Then arrange on tender white leaves of a head of lettuce and pour over the salad dressing. Make the latter by using the recipe for French dressing, using lemon juice instead of vinegar, and adding two tablespoonfuls of Roquefort cheese mashed to a paste to the usual amount of salad dressing.

For Little Mister Man.

Checked serge suit trimmed with plain cloth. It consists of a blouse and side-closing knee trousers, the blouse to be slipped on over the head.

For the active little fellow comfort must be considered as well as good lines in selecting a new suit. Here is a model well adapted to development in checked serge, trimmed with plain cloth or very heavy corded silk. The suit consists of a blouse and side-closing knee trousers, the blouse to be slipped on over the head. For the sleeves there is a choice between straight and turn-back cuffs, while the removable shield may or may not have a standing collar. In medium size the suit requires 2½ yards 36-inch material, with ⅝ yard 40-inch silk for the trimming.

Study the cutting guide carefully and see how the five sections to be placed on the lengthwise fold are arranged. Note that the sailor collar comes first, followed by the shield, blouse front, back and facing. These pieces almost cover the lower half of the material. Now, in the upper row there are placed the back, front, lap and sleeve, all on a lengthwise thread. The trouser sections are J, K and L, the cuff and standing collar being omitted on the guide. These, however, are simply straight bands and can be made without any trouble whatever.

Where the laundry question does not have to be considered this is an excellent costume. In white serge, however, there need be no fear of washing, while the list of tub fabrics is too long for specialization.

Checks will be good throughout the spring and summer.

Model For Chiffon Blouse.

Chiffon blouse is a characteristic shade of brick dust. It is ideal for the woman who likes colors that are striking without being bizarre.

Any of the soft, transparent materials that are now so fashionable may be used for the development of this waist, but there is nothing more acceptable than chiffon. Burgundy red, blue or brick dust would be a tone of the required character with the necessary lack of "loudness." The waist is built upon a lining and the high neck is finished with a funnel collar. The front and back are cut in one, the drop shoulders being gathered to short foundation sleeves forming a slight puff.

In medium size the waist requires 1⅞ yards 36-inch material, with 1⅞ yards lining 36 inches wide for underbody, front, back, foundation sleeve and peplum. A waist that does not necessitate much sewing is always desired, so that the seamless outer front and back and lining back will be appreciated. These sections of the pattern are laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods, as are the two collar sections.

To the right of the outer front and back (F) the sleeve (G) is placed, but on a lengthwise thread of the material. The lining is folded exactly as the waist material is folded so that the front, stay, peplum and sleeve may be arranged on a lengthwise thread, the back being the only section of the pattern that is laid on a lengthwise fold.

There is another charming version of this blouse, supplied for women who will not capitulate to the high closed collar.

It has a V-shaped neck finished with a pleated ruche gathered to a narrow velvet band. While the effect is high the ruche permits of absolute freedom of movement. If used for an evening model the sleeves can be shortened and formed into double puffs.

Many Kinds of Monkeys.

The ordinary reader hardly realizes how many varieties of monkeys exist. We hear of monkeys in the Indies with reddish brown bodies, black heads and faces of a sky blue. There are monkeys with white eyelids and green monkeys to be found on the African continent and Cape de Verde islands. The howlers, which inhabit South America, are large and fierce, and travelers describe their yells as absolutely appalling. So dreadful is the sound of their roarings that one would imagine that all the beasts of the forest had gathered together for a battle. These creatures are so fierce that even the most skillful and adventurous trainer is unwilling to teach them tricks.

Cream of Peanut Soup.

Materials: One quart of roasted peanuts, one pint each of milk and water, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one quart of thin cream, one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of flour, pepper and salt.

Utensils: Saucepan, spoon, cup, knife, chopping tray and puree sieve.

Directions: Remove the skins from the peanuts and chop fine; add the milk and water and simmer until the nuts can be rubbed through the sieve. Put through the sieve and return the mixture to the fire; add the cream, butter and flour, rubbed together; season with salt and pepper and simmer one-half hour.

Proportions to Remember.

Four eggs to one quart of milk for custards.

Four heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch to one quart of milk.

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk.

The oven for baking bread should be hot enough to brown a teaspoonful of flour in five minutes.

For biscuits it should brown in one minute.

Made Over Frocks

It is not the fashion to make over our frocks nowadays.

We used to buy expensive materials and then have the frocks into which they were made remodeled and sometimes made over a second time. We don't do that nowadays usually. We buy poorer materials than we used to buy, and styles change more quickly than they used to change. Moreover, most people have fewer frocks than they used to have. They wear each frock continuously until it is worn out.

However, making over frocks often pays, and some dressmakers have lately been advertising their desire to make over frocks. These are expensive dressmakers, with high priced trades, and the frocks they make over are often imported models. They are real artists in the fashioning of fabrics into charming frocks, and they have the faculty of visualizing a remodeled frock after they have looked at and thought about the old frock for a little while.

This kind of remodeling surely pays. A practically new frock results, up to the last minute in its details. Nowadays a woman of fashion wears her frocks for such a short time that nobody remembers their colors and fabrics, and anyway, in remodeling fabrics and colors are fashioned in different combinations from their original ones.

There are, for instance, the various jumper styles. The old material can be fashioned either into the jumper or into the blouse under it. Suppose there is an old black net frock. After it has been ripped and pressed and, if necessary, cleaned, the good separated from that which is torn, the net can be made into a blouse, with the best part in the sleeves and front. Then you can buy enough silk to make the jumper and the foundation of the skirt. There can be no flaring overskirt of the net, long or short, pointed or straight at the bottom, according to the amount of material.

There is also possibility for making over in the skirt with a very wide hem of contrasting material. Sleeves, or at least cuffs and collars, can be made of the same material as the hem, and new material may be bought either for this combination or for the rest of the frock.

BUY OLD TIES FOR TRENCHES.

British Would Buy Half Million From American Railroad.

An offer of 5 cents apiece for 100,000 castoff railroad ties was received by the Boston and Maine railroad from the British government. Formerly the railroad burned all its old ties, but orders were sent throughout the system directing that they be saved.

It is understood that the British government is negotiating with other railroads with the hope of obtaining a half million ties for use in constructing trenches in France.

TO STOP HASTE, WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE

Senator Brown Proposes an Amendment to the Constitution to Require the Consideration of State Appropriations on Three Separate Days in Open Session of the Legislature—All Appropriations in Two Bills—Says Disposition to Economize Must Precede Any Real Economy.

Albany, Feb. 27.—Senator Elon R. Brown will introduce in the Senate Monday night a concurrent resolution to amend the constitution so as to provide for a legislative budget and to secure for the consideration of such a budget plenty of time in open sessions of the Legislature.

The resolution proposes an amendment to section 15 of article three of the constitution by adding the following:

"Except as provided by section twenty of article three an appropriation at a regular session of the Legislature must be in the annual appropriation or supply bill unless passed by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, or requested in a message from the Governor. Neither the annual appropriation or supply bill shall be passed under a certificate of necessity or passed by either house, or become a law unless it shall have been under consideration at least three separate legislative days in printed form as finally reported by a standing committee or as amended on one of such days."

By providing for the inclusion of all appropriation bills in the appropriation and supply bills, or a legislative budget, this proposed amendment to the constitution, if passed by two Legislatures and approved by the voters in 1917, would put a stop to the practice of making appropriations in a number of separate bills.

It would also prevent the practice of rushing through the two great appropriation bills, the annual appropriation bill and the annual supply bill, in the closing hours of the session under a certificate of necessity from the Governor. Complaint has been made that by continuing the consideration of these bills in committee up to the very close of the session, making amendments up to a time too late to have them appear in printed form and then passing them on an emergency message from the Governor as now required by section 15 of article three of the constitution, prevented careful consideration of the bills and resulted in extravagance. The proposed amendment effectually puts a stop to any such hasty methods.

By providing that neither the annual appropriation or supply bill shall be passed by either house until it shall have been under consideration on at least three separate days in printed form as finally reported by a standing committee or in open session of the Legislature, members of both houses are given full opportunity to familiarize themselves with every detail in the bills because it would mean that the bills in printed form would be in the possession of the Legislature at least ten days before finally acted upon.

To provide for any possible emergency that might arise the amendment permits an appropriation to be made outside of the budget provided two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature shall so vote.

The claims for the proposed amendments are:

1. That it tends to stop the passage of numerous separate appropriation bills.
2. That it stops eleventh hour amendments to appropriation bills in committee.
3. That it stops the passage of appropriation bills with amendments that were made too late to be included in the printed bill.
4. That it insures deliberate consideration of such bill in open session with full opportunity for discussion, criticism and amendment.
5. That in preventing hasty consideration it tends to check extravagance and promote economy.
6. That it brings the whole system of budget making out into the open by constitutional requirement.

Senator Brown has been a member of the upper house of the Legislature for eleven years and the Republican leader for the last four years. He is recognized as an authority on the subject of the state's finances. He has steadfastly maintained that a disposition to economize must precede any real economy in state expenditures.

His views on this point were stated with fluency and force on the floor of the Senate in answer to remarks by Senate Bennett on the subject of appropriations dealing particularly with the form of budget most to be desired, when he said:

"I am in favor of a budget system, but of all the humbug talks, there is nothing quite equal to the attempt to supplant econ my and retrenchment by a system called a budget system. I am in favor of a budget system, and there never was a good administration of New York except a budget system was introduced and I am in favor of extending it in every direction that it may be practically extended.

"This segregating that Senator Bennett talks about is a mistake. He is at the wrong end of the argument. It should be termed aggregation and dissipation. That is what he means, that you should aggregate as large an appropriation as possible, get the money the best way you can and distribute it in all directions to please everybody that asks for it, and the budget system so far as it has been developed in the city of New York, or thus far in the state has not varied very much from that principle. I will admit that it has eliminated some corrupt expenditure, but in the main point of reducing expenditure it has thus far utterly failed for the reason that everybody that approaches it from above or below and from either side wants more money and usually gets it.

"Until the people of the state understand that their representatives in the Legislature must occasionally practice economy and retrenchment, and until the people of the city of New York understand and their administrative officers understand that they must expend less money and bring their expenses within the reasonable ability of the taxpayers to respond to the burden imposed upon them, you will have no relief. You may build structure upon structure; you may impose and superimpose commission upon commission; you may have new departments after new departments and you may employ all of the budget experts and mathematicians and computers that there are in the United States and set them to work, but unless the spirit of sacrificing personal interests, prejudices and fads is developed, the multiplication of expenditure and the subjecting of the state and city to expenditure and waste will not subside."

SMALL THINGS.

We are too fond of our own will. We want to be doing what we fancy mighty things, but the great point is to do small things when called to them in a right spirit.—R. Cecil.

New York city a year ago and they followed him into New Orleans when he left here for that city last month. His home was watched at night, itw as declared yesterday, but General Diaz succeeded in getting away in the night and the following day went on board a steamship bound for Mexican ports. Five of his friends joined him on board this ship before she steamed from New Orleans.

THE COST OF WAR.

National Debts in Europe That Are Mortgaging the Future.

"The national debts of England, France and Germany are now equal to from one-tenth to one-sixth of the total wealth of these nations, and the interest charges on the debts are appreciable portions of the entire income of the nations," declared President C. R. Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin in a recent address.

The national debts of the three countries at the end of 1915, according to his figures, are: United Kingdom, $10,419,000,000; Germany, $7,275,000,000; France, $10,514,000,000. The annual interest charge upon these debts is about as follows: United Kingdom, $521,000,000; Germany, $364,000,000; France, $526,000,000. The total wealth and incomes of the nations are about as follows: United Kingdom, wealth $90,000,000,000, income $12,250,000,000; Germany, wealth $80,000,000,000, income $10,500,000,000; France, wealth $65,000,000,000, income $7,500,000,000.

The magnitude of these debts will be appreciated when it is recalled that the debt of the United States after the civil war, at that time the most colossal debt of any nation, was $2,758,000,000.

These unexampled debts and the industrial and regulatory measures which have accompanied the war will result, Dr. Van Hise declared, in a social transformation in Europe following the war at a speed never before approached.

Forests Left in the United States.

Before the coming of the white man the forests of the United States covered an area of 800,000,000 acres and contained about 5,200,000,000,000 board feet of lumber, according to Leonard Lundgren, writing in the Engineering Magazine. The forests today cover 550,000,000,000 acres and contain about 2,000,000,000,000 board feet of lumber. The annual cut is about 43,000,000,000,000 board feet. Seventy-six per cent of the forest land is privately owned, 21 per cent is held by the United States in the national forests, and 3 per cent is on other public land.

Money to Burn.

Millions of dollars in Confederate currency have been put to a use never dreamed of when printed. A canny individual bought this money up for years and in turn sold it to a big electric company for a good price. For certain small incandescent lamps which the electrical people were manufacturing a certain kind of carbon was needed which could best be obtained from paper made out of sea grass. The Confederate money was all made out of sea grass paper. From this the carbons for the lamps could be manufactured.

Coal Under the Peat.

At one time iron ore was found in considerable quantities in the northeasterly provinces of the Netherlands. In late years apparently less has been found. Recently, however, further deposits of iron ore have been found in the province of Drenthe, where it was discovered previously. These deposits were revealed by the digging of peat in the bogs of that section. The ore is found in layers just under the peat and also in collections or heaps six or ten feet high and thirty to fifty feet in circumference.

War Will Produce Smaller Men.

The present war is likely to produce many and new racial conditions. The killing off of so many of the strongest and best physical type of men will produce in the next generation a race of men calculated at an inch shorter in stature. The same effect was observed after the Napoleonic wars. Also the length of life will be materially affected.—New York Herald.

Gets Them Both Ways.

A Cleveland restaurant has provided a novel luncheon menu. On one page is the caption, "If You Wish to Reduce, Select Your Order From This Page." On the other pages is a list of dishes that will add to one's weight. The menus are based on United States government tables.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sound Waves.

A sound wave consists of an alternate compression and refraction of the air. A singular result of this was noted after a great powder explosion at Erith, England, in 1864. The leaded glass windows of a church several miles away were all strongly bent inward on all sides of the church. The explanation was given in these words: "The sound wave on reaching the church separated right and left, and for a moment the edifice was clasped by a girdle of intensely compressed air, which forced all its windows inward." The subsequent dilation of the air was insufficient to force the bent panes back into shape.

Spring Love

By ETHEL HOLMES

Poets have sung of love in the spring for centuries. No one ever read a poem of young love in autumn; certainly not in winter. It comes with the budding leaves, and it also comes with propinquity. Place a young girl near a young man on a warm, sunshiny day in April or May, or the young man near the girl, and love is just as sure to bud in their hearts as leaves on the trees.

It is singular how many different ways this spring disease manifests itself in these youngsters. In many cases one would suppose that they had been seized with an aversion for each other. Sometimes contempt, but never indifference, though there is nothing they attempt to show more than this.

A case in point.

Benny Apherson had reached the age when a boy is especially particular as to his cravats. He was admiring himself in a pier glass upon donning his new spring suit and his first silk hat. Olivia Treadwell had just passed the age when her mother studied the advertisements for bargains in misses' apparel. On the very day that Benny put on his "tile" and Ollie donned her first woman's frock they saw each other for the first time. Behind the Treadwell home was a garden, and against the farther end of the garden was the rear of a house into which had recently moved the Apherson family.

On this beautifully bright spring morning Miss Ollie, from the rear drawing room of her home, espied Benny in the rear drawing room of his home admiring before the pier glass his new plug hat. He bowed to his image, taking off his hat to an imaginary lady, walked past the glass, first showing one side then the other, smirked at himself—or, rather, at the imaginary girl—showed a dignified superiority, indeed, practiced all manner of ways of attracting, even of crushing her. While so engaged he evidently heard some one approaching, for he hurriedly placed the hat on the window sill and passed out of Ollie's sight.

All this Miss Ollie observed, unobserved herself. As soon as the young Apollo disappeared she was seized with a terrible temptation. The gardener was engaged in removing the flowers from the conservatory and placing them in the garden without. Having planted a large number, he watered them with the garden hose and had gone somewhere else, leaving the hose on the ground. There was the shining hat balanced on the window sill, there was the hose and there was the girl. The result was what was to have been expected. The girl went down and out into the garden and began to put more water on the already well watered plants, casting from time to time furtive glances at the rear window in which Apollo had placed his hat. Having satisfied herself that no one was looking, with [illegible] she diverted the stream from one flower bed to another, and in doing so the stream struck the hat. It disappeared from view. Unconscious apparently of what she had done, Miss Ollie continued to water the flowers for a few minutes, then dropped the hose and went into the house.

The young lady deceived herself if she thought she was unobserved. Benny from an upper window had caught sight of her in the garden watering the flowers. Now, a girl watering flowers on a bright spring morning, even with a garden hose, is a delectable sight. Benny stood back from the window, far enough to be out of sight, took up a pair of opera glasses and flashed his eyes on Miss Treadwell, seeing every intent in her features as well as if he had been close beside her. When she diverted the stream from the flower beds he saw a look of malicious mischief on her face and wondered. Later, when he went downstairs for his hat and saw it on the floor, its beautiful sheen ruined by a drenching, that look was explained.

If any one had told Benny that his feelings toward his neighbor were not a concentrated desire for revenge, that they were instead the opening of the love bud in his heart, he would have laughed sardonically. While he was gazing on the ruin before him he was trying to think of some method of crushing the perpetrator. No appropriate method occurred to him at the time, and when next he saw Miss Treadwe'l she was in the garden nipping the flowers to make a bouquet, looking so attractive that he wished he were with her instead of separated from her by a wall and the absence of an acquaintance. He hoped she would look up at him, but since she did not he coughed to attract her attention.

Now, if Miss Ollie had not been already conscious of Mr. Apherson's presence his ruse would have succeeded. Since she was conscious of the fact that he was admiring her, she went on plucking the flowers without manifesting the slightest curiosity in the premises.

This is not a love story, it is simply an exposition of certain apparent inconsistencies pertaining to spring love in spring age. Mr. Apherson made Miss Treadwell's acquaintance, and there was an affair between them, but of the kind usually denominated "puppy love." It was nipped by the young lady's mamma, who packed her off to boarding school. Before she married she experienced several more such affairs, most of them hatched in the spring.

Napoleon's Power.

General Foy, the French military critic of the time of Napoleon, speaking of Napoleon's strength and his weakness, said: "Only the founders of religion have exercised upon their followers an authority comparable to that which made him the absolute master of his armies. This moral power became to him a fatal gift. He came to believe that he could prevail even against the most powerful material force, and this led him to scorn certain rules, the long continued violation of which could not remain unpunished."

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

'Tis the coward who quits to misfortune.
'Tis the knave that changes each day.
'Tis the fool who wins half the battle,
To throw all his chances away.

There is little in life but labor,
Tomorrow may prove but a dream;
Success is the bride of endeavor,
And luck but a meteor's gleam.

The time to succeed is when others,
Discouraged, show traces of tire—
The battle is fought in the home-stretch,
And won 'twixt the flag and the wire."

On Tuesday evening, March 7th, 1916, at 8:15 p. m., the First Concert of OUR ORCHESTRA will be given in the Quirk Theatre. Thirty musicians have given their time and money for more than two months to make the orchestra a success. If you are a good citizen you should back this enormous spirit up by buying your ticket NOW.

Remember that the proceeds will go towards charity and that you will not only back up a HOME ENTERPRISE but that part of your money may be used to help the more unfortunate ones in our city.

We have made the price of the tickets so that everybody will have a chance to go. For the lower floor we charge 50 cents and for the balcony 25 cents. Now please all aboard and sell tickets.

Let's see if FULTONIANS will and can BACK UP A FULTON Orchestra. And also please bear in mind, that if the first concert is a success, you will have a chance to hear some big star in the near future; we are contemplating engaging the services of a nation-wide-known soloist, if you will do your share this [illegible].

* * *

Mrs. Addie J. Newton, well known to the music loving people in our city, will [illegible] soloist at the first concert.

We had shown at the time of the Christmas tree a marvelous spirit; now let's see if you have forgotten this spirit or not.

* * *

Other cities have to engage the services of OUTSIDE ORCHESTRAS to have musical entertainment. FULTON has its OWN orchestra to entertain the people. Take notice of this.

* * *

Music is not only entertaining but educational as well. When you see the program for the first concert you will be surprised of the quality of the music and that all rendered by FULTONIANS.

* * *

For over two months 30 people have worked to do YOU a favor; now return the complimena and show them that you are with them. Fill the Quirk theatre up.

Supervisor's Accounts Short $648.79, Result of Department Audit

A shortage of $648.79 in the accounts of W. W. Rounds, Supervisor of the Town of Oswego in Oswego County, during the years 1908-1913, was discovered by Municipal Accounts Examiners of State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis. In the report on the examination conducted, the Comptroller states this sum should be refunded to the town at once as, it was his opinion, the amount was illegally taken. The accounts of R. L. Callison, the successor of Supervisor Rounds, were found to be accurate although the bookkeeping system could be improved upon.

Deputy Comptrolled Fred G. Reusswig, under whose direction the investigation of the town of Oswego was carried on, makes the report on the findings which disclosed the loose, unbusiness-like system which former Supervisor Rounds pursued. No intelligent account of his receipts or disbursements was obtainable.

It appears from the records of the examination that Rounds, after his term expired, prepared a statement which showed the town owed him ab alance of $93.70. This claim was apparently paid to him without the proper audit being made. Another item of $50, on which an order was drawn to Rounds' credit, was found, but this order has not, for some unexplained reason, been presented for payment.

As a matter of fact, Rounds should have turned over to his successor, Supervisor Callison, in 1913, the sum of $2,016.37. Instead, he made a return of $1,367.58, showing a difference of $648.-79 which he has mailed to make an accounting for. Comptroller

RURAL CREDITS BILL MAY PASS CONGRESS

Washington—The Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate has reported favorably a bill for long-term land mortgage credit for the farmers of this country.

The House committee will report the bill substantially like the Senate bill.

The first bill providing for the establishment of such a system was introduced by Senator Fletcher in August, 1913. Since then over sixty bills on the subject have been introduced in the two houses of Congress.

Senator Fletcher is chairman of the American Commission assembled by the Southern Commercial Congress and also of the United States commission provided for by act of Congress and appointed by President Wilson, both of which toured European countries in1913 in a study ofthe various systems of agricultural finance in operation successfully there.

The Rural Credits bills is a farmers', not a bankers' bill.

It possesses all the features of the Landschaft system that can bemade applicable to conditions in this country and workable.

It permits the investment of a portion of the postal savings funds in the bonds under section 31.

It makes eligible for discount by the Federal reserve banks drafts or acceptances secured by farm loan bonds.

Government control of the system is assured by the creation of a federal farm loan board, independent and non-partisan, consisting of five members appointed by the President for terms of ten years each had paid from the public treasury.

Loans are made to farmers by twelve or more federal land banks, each operating in a separate district and having a capital of not less than $500,000. If the full amount is not subscribed from private sources, the government subscribes for as much as may be necessary to make up the require damount. Provision is made for returning the government subscription after the land banks are firmly established.

In order to secure intimate touch with the borrowers, it is pro-

Courts May Decide Upon Validity of Contract for Standard Lighting

The Board of Public Works did not take kindly to a request made by Manager Jordan of the Electric company, last night, when the gentleman asked that the contract be recognized for current furnished the ornamental lighting standards. Failing in his request the manager follow up with another, that the city come forward with a new contract which shall embody the conditions contained in the existing one. He was informed that members of the Board had not yet given the contract under which the current is being supplied a reading; also, that they have not read Attorney Hillick's different efforts to provide a contract that may meet with the approbation of the lighting company and the Board.

Mr. Jordan informed the Board that his company is advised of the validity of the original contract and that a court decision, if he case resulted in litigation, would undoubtedly go to his company—this from the fact that the contract is in action, and has been since the date set for it to go into effect—February 1st.

Mr. Hillick stated that he could not recommend action more than to consider the case in a private discussion with Mr. Jordan. The City Attorney also said that if the Board does not want to have the ornamental lighting system in effect the company should be advised, which might result in testing the validity of the contract in the courts. The attorney also suggested an early conference between himself and the Board, provided there exists a desire to continue the new system of street lights.

In order to decide whether they rice charged in the present contract, viz: $47.50 per light, is excessive, Mr. Hillick has asked the Chamber of Commerce to secure information from cities where ornamental lighting is in place. Commissioner O'Brien asked Mr. Jordan to explain why the lights on the bridge cost but $27 each, while the downtown ornamental lights are costing $47.50. Mr. O'Brien fails to understand why the contract was awarded to Mr. Jordan's company without it first having been advertised as required

FRENCH INFANTRY CHECK GERMAN RUSH ON VERDUN

Paris—Fort Douaumont has fallen to the Germans, but it is reported to be in ruins. Around this position the most desperate fighting of theb attle has been going on since Friday. Here French counter attacks were delivered with such crushing force that some of the German detachments wered riven back, and one regiment is almost encircled. West of this fort, in a hand-to-hand encounter, the French have ejected the Germans from a small redoubt which they had captured.

Throughout the entire sector of Verdun, except on the western bank of the Meuse river, where the Berman bombardment has slackened somewhat, the artillery duels are still of vast proportions. To the southeast, the French at Fresnes, in the Woevre region, have put down two German attacks against that town, but the Germans have inaugurated an important move in the Champagnedi strict, where by a surprise attack they succeeded in entering French advanced positions of a supporting trench over a front of nearly a mile, capturing more than a thousand.

On the Russian front around Friedrichstadt and Illoukst there has been heavy artillery, machine gun and rifle firing. In Galicia the Russians repulsed an attempt by the Austro-Hungarians to capture trenches on the Middle Stripa river.

The Austrians, according to Vienna, have put down with sanguinary losses an Italian attack against positions on both sides of Monte San Michele and east of Azzo and also destroyed an Italian trench on the Gorizia bridgehead.

The Russians are still operating successfully against the Turks who filed from Erzerum and the Ottoman forces in the Persian battle zone.

Opinions

SUFFRAGE AGAIN TO THE FORE

Although the vote on woman suffrage in this state was overwhelmingly one-sided, the question will not down. There are two suffrage measures before the Legislature. One would resubmit the whole matter to the people again, while the purpose of the other is to confer on women the immediate right to vote for presidential electors. Naturally enough, any measure of advancement is welcomed by the women, but their main purpose is to secure another expression of opinion on a question that has become of paramount importance in this state.

There is, perhaps no abler lawyer in the city than Hampden Dougherty, and we have his word for it that the Legislature is entirely within its province in conferring on women the right to vote for presidential electors Such an advance has been made in Illinois, and it has not brought about any deterioration in the qualifications of the officers chosen under its provisions.—Brooklyn Times.

PROTECTION FOR AGRICULTURE

We ask no rights or privileges or Protection for agriculture so far as the government is concerned that is not accorded to other industries, but, as is well known, the mission of this paper is to see that farmers have the same opportunity, the same advantages and the same Protection that other classes have. Our readers remember the fight we made against so called Canadian reciprocity, which meant that Canadian farm crops might freely cross the international line and compete with our own crops both in market and price; and they also remember the sentiment so emphatically expressed by the people in the election which followed. But the strange part of it is that those who took the places in government of the defeated reciprocity advocates not only opened the doors to Canada but practically the whole world. We concede that our farmers are an independent people and that they support themselves, develop the country, and abundantly supply the people with the necessaries of life, and all this under disadvantages and discouragements such as no other laboring class could or would stand.

But this is no reason why the farmers of the world who farm cheaper land and live under different conditions should be invited to pour their surplus stuff into our markets to over supply demands and force the prices to our own farmers lower and lower. Such permission, such law, such competition is cruel and inhuman. There is no reason for it. There is no justice in it. Our own farmers fully supply our home demand and because of unwise marketing to the extent that they often glut our own markets and force prices below the cost of production, allow much valuable stuff to waste on the farms.

As voters the farmers have a right to demand that their interests be Protected; and we believe they will do it. The ballot is their peaceful but effective weapon.— Indianapolis (Ind) Up-to-Date Farming.

HOW A WILSON SUPPORTER VIEWS PREPAREDNESS

Repeating his assertion that he is not a candidate for the presidency, Justice Hughes has found it necessary to say that he is likewise unwilling to participate in the discussion as to national defense. If members of the Supreme Court were to take sides on the question of militarism, they would presently be expected to tell where they stand on the tariff, prohibition, rivers and harbors and votes for women.

The apostle of preparedness who received this reply was well aware that the justice is believed to be as sane on that subject as on many others, and no doubt the purpose was to find out, if possible, whether in any circumstances he would be acceptable as a candidate to the element which hopes to Prussianize the republic. Refusing to commit himself, Mr. Hughes not only defeats another attempt to "smoke him out," but probably convinces more than one self-constituted society for defense that he is not the man they are seeking.

The failure in the case of Justice Hughes ought to be followed with rebuke elsewhere. These organizations are storming Congress, muckraking the army and navy and terrorizing the people in the interest of a partisan commercialism, cleverly disguised in patriotic colors. All who, like the president, favor reasonable preparation are held up to ridicule. Now that they have met a rebuff at the threshold of the Supreme Court, perhaps their newest diatribes will proclaim that tribunal's woeful lack of equipment and efficiency.— N. Y. World.

CITY INDEBTEDNESS

Senator Brown's pay-as-you-go plan for cities meets general commendation among all cities. He contemplates a commission or committee to inquire into the matter of compelling the municipalities of the state to adopt a policy by which the issuance of long term bonds for public improvements would be forbidden. It is stated that the cities of the state are in debt to an amount that is slightly more than ten per cent of the assessed valuation of the state and are rapidly going toward bankruptcy The objection is raised that a fast growing city must mortgage the future to grow in decent shape, with paved and sewered and lighted sts But that is hardly necessary. Most of these things are done by local assessments and the people who pay for them get the benefit of their taxes by increased value of their property.

Watertown has tried Senator Brown's proposal to pay as you go with good success and there is no small city in the state with better or more complete public improvements. By a budget system and a limited tax rate this city has no floating indebtness. Its bonded indebtedness is close to the ten per cent limit, but a large part of it is in water bonds, which take care of themselves, pay the interest and principal and the rentals also provide for extensions. The water bonds should not properly be counted in the city's bonded indebtness, but the law makes them so and perhaps it is fortunate, for it puts a limit on the bonding ability of the city and prevents extravagance. Again, bonds are not issued in this city for anything but permanent improvements which will be here when posterity pays the bonds. Pavements and that kind of improvements are considered temporary and of such character that it would not be fair to make posterity pay for them after they are worn out. The only indebtedness of this city is, therefore, a bonded indebtedness voted by the taxpayers themselves, for permanent improvements and issued serially, so that a certain amount with interest becomes due each year, the bonds running only 20 years. It is a fact a pay-as-you-go policy, such as Senator Brown suggests for all municipalities of the state. This city knows just where it stands financially all the time. It has a bonded indebtedness of something over a million dollars, with an assessed valuation of $16,000,000, so that it is a good deal more than solvent and the bond issues represent permanent improvements, which are assets and which in value at this time greatly exceed, the bonded indebtedness. The city water works alone could be sold at any time to take up the entire debt of the city. The pay-as-you-go policy has worked well in this town.—Watertown Times.

WHAT SOME PEOPLE WANT TO KNOW

Other matters of the municipality pressing more insistently for immediate consideration no doubt have diverted the minds of the people from the very pertinent and important problem to which a correspondent referred in this newspaper on February 1st, 1916, when he wanted to know what use is to be made of the difference between a deficit as found by the City Chamberlain amounting to approximately $9,000 and the proposed bond issue of $15,000. The inquiring gentleman was of the opinion that the Mayor would be able to enlighten him and there he allowed the question to rest, but up to the present writing the information is not forthcoming publicly.

And now The Evening Times is in receipt of one more inquiry upon the subject, but as the writer has failed to recognize the ethical side of the newspaper business, by subscribing his name to the communication, there is nothing left to do but to treat the message in this column.

The latest writer reminds the city administration that it is high time to give careful attention to the sum of money represented after deducting $9,000 from the amount of the proposed bond issue, and to say to the taxpayers how that sum is to be used, provided the bond issue receives the stamp of popular approval.

In view of the silence maintained by the officials who must know why it is found necessary to float bonds for $6,000 more than it apparently needed, the people are left to draw their own conclusions, because they are very much in the same position as the common people over in Europe who are described by Henry Ford as ignorant of the causes of the great war, or of the uncommon ones in this country who are in the same fix.

In view of the unfavorable attitude of a great number of people to the new bond issue, the proper way to allay apprehensions with regard to the decision of the administration, to ask for $15,000 more in bonds, and with regard to what the people consider their reasonable rights and expectations in the premises, would be a candid statement of the specific objects to be covered by the issue. The people want candor and they ought to have it: fairness demands it.

THE LOOKER

When a woman, with a long slit in her skirt, crosses a muddy street, do you see with what particular care she protects her skirt? When you take dinner, do you look at the legs of the table, or do you scan the menu first?

The idea of looking is all in the looker.

From the beginning, woman's dress was a little scant.

From the beginning, we have had men with minds like those of meadow-moles.

The man that says a modern-dressed woman "puts ideas into his head" is a monk. You couldn't get an idea in such a man's ivory dome if you soaked it a century in brain-broth.

From the early days of a fig leaf, down to the time of the morning gown of a slitted tiger skin, and then down to the days when the leading society family of Cave City gave their daughter to the President of the Elephant-Skin Syndicate of Tattoo Village, woman's dress has conformed to the call of fashion.

When your grandmother started down the street with a bulwark of steel hoops, she was bound to show her stockings; but no man at that time had the nerve to hide behind a petticoat and cry "Save me!"

About the best protected-from-gaze female I know of is the Turkish maid, and this Turkish trophy has a few comments coming her way.

When you hear a man talking about the "indecency" of modern dress, tell him to run into the first roundhouse and have the master mechanic look over his mental apparatus. —The Silent Partner.

SUFFRAGISTS LOSE HOPE IN MASSACHUSETTS

Boston—A survey of the present Congress has convinced suffrage advocates that there is no hopes of obtaining from it action favorable to national woman suffrage, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, said at a conference of suffrage workers of the State today.

"The campaign to convince Congress will be continued," she aded "because by aiming at Congress we may hit something else." The leader issued a call on the followers of the suffrage cause throughout the country to drop social distinctions in their fight for the vote.

"There are some women who will not associate with their washerwoman to obtain this great reform. Let them learn the true spirit of democracy," she said.

After reviewing the situation in several states, Mrs. Catt said that the state organizations would have to merge their activities on a common basis to gain success in the campaign for a federal amendment.

WILL PLACE WOMEN IN CHARGE OF CARS

Hamilton, Ont. — Superintendent William Parker of the Hamilton St. Railway stated that he had received a number of applications from ladies for positions on the street cars. He said that as soon as the number of men on the cars run short he would immediately start putting the women in charge of cars.

REPLY TO "HOME TRADE"

(By C. L. Sanford)

And how about the farmers' trade,
You claim you want to keep?
They are up at dawn and working hard
While you are fast asleep;
They have to take their stuff away
If they want a little cash;
If they sell it in their own home town
They must take their pay in hash.
You set the price on what you sell,
Also on what you buy;
You put their produce down so low
And yours up mighty high.
If they want to sell you butter,
You handle oleo or creamery brand;
If they want to seel you nice fresh eggs
You've plenty storage eggs on hand;
If they want to sell you beef or pork,
You buy of them I know,
And pay about five dollars less than to Armour,
or Swift and Co.
If they want to sell you apples,
A bushel a month you buy,
And charge your customers forty cents
For enough to make a pie.
Sometimes you buy a turkey,
A duck, a goose, a hen,—
So cheap you get ten cents a pound
To wrap them up again.
We can't sell milk at what you pay,
Unless we send away for feed.
Yes, a little get together
Is what the farmers need;
We admire your Chamber of Commerce,
We'd like a market too,
That we might take a chance with all,
And not with just a few.
Do you buy your banquet stuff of us?
Don't you think that would be nice?
We can't live all on pure air,
Mixed with a little broken rice;
When you banquet you—prefer the game
You've tramped our fields to shoot,
And maybe hit a cow or two,
Broke down our fence to boot.
We'd like to trade right here at home,
See what we buy and know,
But we cannot pay a double price,
And sell so very low.
If we have to sell our pork elsewhere;
Our eggs and butter too,
Ought we to bring our cash right here
And spend it all with you?
And if we want a little "mon,"
The tax man's voice to quell,
You show us in your sweetest way
That we can go to—"Pikes Peak or bust."

THE CAUSE OF ONE-HALF MILLION NEW YORK VOTERS

(By Mrs. Norman De R. Whitehouse)

It should be forgotten neither by the general public nor by the lawmakers at Albany that the Woman Suffrage is no longer the cause of one sex alone. By the action of a half million men in New York State on November 2nd, 1915, it became a political question, receiving more votes by many thousands than "any other question referred to the voters, except the new Constitution itself." It received almost as many votes as the State Democratic candidates at the same election.

In the words of the New York Tribune of February 24, 1916, "The strength which piled up more than half a million votes for equal suffrage is potent enough to deserve—to demand—fair and decent treatment. It will be unfortunate for any individual or party organization to deny such treatment, or to appear to deny it. The women who ask for this measure seek the high privilege of participating in the duties and of helping to bear the burdens of government. There should be no such petty juggling, no legislative tricks and evasions, in meeting this request: The Senate Judiciary Committee ought to report the bill speedily, so that a prompt test of the views of all the members of both houses may be taken on the floor." This is no time for 'side-stepping suffrage." Whatever may be the personal opinions of individual members of the Senate, no personal bias should stand in the way of resubmission.

The New York Press of February 25th makes clear the real question which lies before the New York State lawmakers:

"The Legislature isn't giving, and isn't asked to give, anything. It is asked to let this matter go before the New York State voters

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of James Pollock and is defended by her lover, Philip Langdon. Pollock was intoxicated. Shale, a crook and tool of Pollock, was on the fire escape watching for Langdon.

THE DRAMA OF THE LAW

WITH the entrance of the judge the turmoil of the vast crowd that filled the courtroom almost to suffocation subsided into a tense whisper of expectancy. The atmosphere was vibrant with it—taut as a violin string which snapped and brought the throng surging wildly to its feet when some one shrilled:

"Here she comes!"

At the back of the room men and women fought in a frenzy for foothold upon the seats of chairs, drowning the thunder of the judge's gavel with their clamorous hysteria, while those nearer the front were flung bodily against the steady wall of police beyond which stood Mary Page, framed by the grim shadow of the prisoner's door.

Mary was waiting, breathless, terrified, for "some one" to come. The judge looked at his watch and then at the door, and another whispering wave of sound too intangible to be called words swept over the room. Almost before it died, however, Philip Langdon, the brilliant young lawyer who was defending Mary Page from the charge of murder and who in his battle for her life was also battling for his own happiness, came in.

At sight of him Mary rose to her feet with a little childlike sob of relief and stretched out one slim hand with a quivering smile that was more poignant than tears and more pitiful than an outburst of grief.

"Poor little thing!" said some one and was instantly hushed by a burly policeman whose own eyes were suspiciously damp as Langdon, with a smile as brave as Mary's own, took her hand and bent over her with a whispered word of hope and greeting.

The judge rapped for order, and Langdon put back his shoulders with the gesture of one ready for the battle.

Another day in the great trial of Mary Page had begun!

It was a trial which was engrossing the whole country. The victories and defeats of the great war and the fluctuations of Wall street were unceremoniously thrust into inside pages of the daily papers that the whole front sheet might be devoted to photograph after photograph and story after story of the lovely young actress, who was either a tragic victim of the law or—a murderess.

Column after column had already been printed about this young girl, who on the very edge of triumph as a star had been sucked into the malestrom of law beneath the shadow of the gallows. The story of her youth amid poverty and suffering, of her first stage success and her wonderful ability, had been told over and over, while woven through it, like a shimmering thread of gold, was the story, half hinted, half boldly detailed, of the love of Philip Langdon for Mary, whom he was now defending in the face of overwhelming evidence and inexplicable mystery.

There were stories, too—more guarded—of James Pollock, who had been found dead with Mary's unconscious form on the floor beside him—stories that hinted of a dissolute life and of other girls whom he had led to tragedy; stories of his wealth, his strange ambitions and his life of gilded ease, but at best in the eyes of the world he was only a lay figure—a bit of dead flesh upon which hung the vibrant living tragedy of Mary herself.

The formal routine of the opening of court was hurriedly gone through. The district attorney and Langdon held a subdued and secret colloquy with the judge, and then the first witness of the day was called.

"Mary Page!"

At the sound of her name Mary rose unsteadily to her feet, her eyes turned appealingly to Langdon, one trembling hand crushing back the little cry that rose involuntarily to her lips. But HER agitation was no more than an echo of the excitement that swept through the crowded room. Somewhere a woman caught her breath in a stifled sob, and at the back the spectators clambered upon their chairs, crowding forward in spite of angry whispers of "Sit down!" and the sharp rap of the judge's gavel augmented by the official "Order in the court!"

To Langdon alone the calling of Mary came as no surprise, and he was at her side in a moment, whispering reassurance and urging her to answer as simply and clearly as possible the questions she was asked. His calm gave her back some measure of her own serenity, and her voice was low but clear as she took the oath and, stepping up into the witness stand, looked down upon that sea of faces. For a moment they swam before her eyes, and with a catch in her throat she remembered the last time she had looked down upon crowded faces; looked down across the footlights upon thousands of smiling lips and friendly eyes above a snowstorm of applauding white gloves. How long ago it seemed, and yet how short a time! And now the faces that stared up at her were avid with curiosity, some hostile, some sympathetic, but all pallid with the voracity of the sensation seeker.

Then her eyes, traveling beyond them, met the tear dimmed ones of her mother leaning forward yearningly from the witness bench, and because of the suffering on that face Mary smiled. Her first answers to the questions of the District Attorney were spoken with quiet dignity.

"Miss Page, isn't it true that James Pollock wished to marry you?"

"Yes." The answer was lower now and a hot flush crept for a moment into Mary's pale cheeks.

"And you found his attentions unwelcome?"

Something in the tone brought her head up sharply.

"I had told Mr. Pollock that I could not marry him," she said firmly, and with a hauteur that wrung a little whisper of admiration from the spectators.

Abruptly the prosecutor changed his train of questioning.

"Now, Miss Page," he said harshly, "please tell the court exactly what happened just previous to the time when the revolver-shot was heard and Mr. Langdon found you unconscious beside the murdered man. Begin with the moment you left the banquet."

With a shiver of aversion Mary closed her eyes for a second; then, gripping the edge of the witness-stand, she began speaking slowly and with an obvious effort.

"When the boy brought me the message—I—was glad to go. They were drinking and were very noisy at the banquet—and I was tired. The boy showed me the door of the suite, and I went in."

She paused and covered her eyes as if to shut out something terrible that she saw.

"Mr. Pollock was in the room," she said at last. "He—he had been drinking—he wasn't himself—he could hardly stand. He—he said he wanted to talk to me alone for five minutes—and he wouldn't let me out, though I was afraid and begged him to."

"Did you try to get out? Was there a struggle between you and Mr. Pollock?"

She shook her head. "Not then," she said, with a little sob. "But—I was very angry—I told him he had tricked me—and I wouldn't listen to him. We—we quarreled over his being drunk, and—he tried to make me take a drink of the whiskey myself."

A shudder of repugnance swept over her, and her eyes grew wide and staring, and she swayed for a moment like a flower in a storm; then, with a tremendous effort, as one called back from the borderland to consciousness, she added hoarsely:

"I remember striking at him—and knocking the glass out of his hand. I heard it break—and then—I must have fainted!"

"Miss Page," came still another question, "if you had refused James Pollock—if you feared him—why did you grant him an interview late at night in a private room at the hotel?"

"Grant him an interview!" her voice rose in startled protest. "I didn't. That was why I was so angry—I had expected to find Mr. Langdon in that room!"

"Oh! You had made arrangements then to meet Mr. Langdon there?" Again the satiric note crept into the harsh voice, and a crimson tide rushed to Mary's pale cheeks.

"The boy told me," she said with dignity, "that Mr. Langdon was waiting to speak to me. I thought he had come to take me home."

"The boy—what boy?" The question leapt sharply now.

"Why, the bellboy who brought the message," she said in surprise, and turning, pointed toward the group of witnesses where the small bellboy cowered, half covering his face with his shaking hands.

For the moment at least every eye was upon him, and some of the hostility vanished from those watching faces as a wave of surprised comment slipped from lip to lip. For after all, if Mary Page had indeed gone into that room expecting Langdon and not Pollock, it robbed the murder of the infamy of cool deliberation.

Mary herself was both surprised and confused by the sudden turn of events and, dismissed from the witness-box returned to her own seat bewildered at the seeming importance attached to what had heretofore appeared so small a detail.

But it was anything but small in the eyes of the District Attorney and Langdon, and there was a gleam of triumph in the latter's eyes as the whimpering boy from the hotel took the oath. Before he went into the witness-box, however, the judge leaned forward and frowned down at him.

"Do you understand, Joe," he said harshly, "that what you have just taken is an oath? And that the law can put you into prison for perjury if you do not tell the exact truth after taking that oath?"

"Y—yes, sir!" stammered the boy. "I'll tell the truth, s'help me Gawd!"

Light laughter ran through the room, but the court attendant immediately called for order.

"Tell us exactly what message you carried to Miss Page in the banquet room," said the District Attorney, when quiet reigned. "It was Miss Page you took the message to, wasn't it?"

"Yes, sir, it was her. And the gent in the gray suit he says, 'Tell Miss Page Mr. Langdon wants to see her here at once.'"

"And you delivered the message just that way to Miss Page?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why didn't you testify to this at the Coroner's inquest?" It was the judge this time, stern and implacable, and the boy in the witness-box cringed and burst into tears.

"They—they—n-never asked me wot the message was I was takin' to her. I—I didn't think it mattered."

With an exclamation of exasperation the prosecutor sat down, turning the small witness over to Langdon, into whose tired face fresh hope had now come. His voice, as he spoke to the boy, was gentle and friendly, and the snuffling lad wiping his eyes with the back of his hand answered him eagerly. He seemed glad to find someone who didn't frighten him.

"Do you understand, Joe, that what you have just taken is an oath?"

"Joe," said Langdon, his voice full of kindness, "that night wasn't the first time you had seen Mr. Pollock, was it?"

"No, sir," said the boy in his shrill young voice. "Everybody knew James Pollock at the Republic. He came there a lot—him and Mr. Slade."

"And he was pretty generous in his tips, wasn't he?" The question was quiet, and the District Attorney, who had made a move to interrupt, sank back without speaking as the boy answered:

"Oh, so-so! He could afford to be."

"And so, on the night when he asked you to take that message to Miss Page he gave you a good big tip, didn't he?"

"Yes," said the boy, beginning to whimper again. "But I didn't do it for that. I didn't think there was any harm in the message. He says to me, says he, 'It's just a joke I'm playin' on her, Joe,' he says. 'I want to fool her.' And he gimme five dollars—and laughed—and told me to beat it—and I did."

"That is all, I think," said Langdon with satisfaction, and the boy crept back to the witness-bench, striving in vain for some of the jaunty assurance that had marked him in the earlier hours of the day. He had thought he would be a little hero after his testimony and that he would enjoy the fleeting publicity; but he was ashamed of the laugh he had made.

The prosecutor himself was almost equally discomfited, for it had been his plan to build up stone by stone a towering temple of evidence to prove that Mary Page had in cold blood plotted and carried out the murder of James Pollock, and now the boy's testimony had in a minute undermined the whole structure. It forced him to play his trump card at what he feared was the wrong moment, but except for a harassed frown he showed little signs of his disappointment as he again called Mary to the witness-stand.

She came more willingly this time; it seemed somehow less of an ordeal for she sensed that things had gone in her favor for a moment, and she did not even flinch when, with a flourish, the District Attorney took up the revolver (lying with the other exhibits of the case before the jury) and, thrusting it toward her, asked sharply:

"Have you ever seen this revolver before, Miss Page?"

"Yes. It belonged to Mr. Pollock."

"Was it in his possession on the night when he was murdered?"

"No." Her voice broke now and fell. "It was in my possession then."

"And you had it at the Hotel Republic."

"Yes."

"And was it your habit," the prosecutor's voice was satirically mocking, "was it your habit, Miss Page, to attend banquets with a revolver in your handbag?"

Mary flushed angrily.

"The revolver was lying on my dressing-table at the theater," she said, "and I put it into my bag, intending to give it to Mr. Langdon, but—I forgot it."

"It was an unfortunate loss of memory for Mr. Pollock," said the attorney dryly, with a glance at the jury. Then he abruptly waved the witness away, as though it would be a waste of time to question her further. Langdon halted her.

"Will you explain to the court," he cried, "how that revolver came into your possession, Miss Page?"

Gaining courage at his tone, and the smile that accompanied his words, Mary turned toward the jury and in that beautiful modulated voice that had held so many audiences spellbound, she told rapidly, but in detail the story of Pollock's visit to her dressing-room on the afternoon of that fatal day. She faltered a little over the recital of his abrupt proposal and, woman-like, put in the world-old apology for his brutality by the simple statement:

"He was drunk, you know."

Then, vividly, her slender hands gesturing and her voice rising with poignant memories and pride of Langdon she told of the latter's entry in response to her screams and of his battle with Pollock. Tensely silent, but with every nerve alert, the crowd listened as she described how Pollock had pulled the revolver out of his pocket only to drop it.

"He tried to pick it up again," she said, unconsciously visualizing for them the picture of the struggling men, "but I crawled close and snatched it up before he could reach it."

She paused, and when she would have taken up the thread of her story again, Langdon's hand stopped her.

"That is all, thank you, Miss Page," he said, and the District Attorney, surprise on his face, but with a new glint in his eyes, got quickly to his feet.

"I crave the court's permission to ask the witness one more question," he said, and as the Judge waved assent he asked slowly, knowing the sensation his question would create:

"Miss Page, was there anyone else in the room at the time this struggle was going on?"

"Not—not exactly in the room," said Mary, after an instant's hesitation. "There were people outside the door, and—and my maid, who had been out, ran in during the excitement."

"Is your maid Janet or Jeannette Beauchamp?"

"Yes." Mary's voice was uneasy now, and her eyes met the frightened ones of the maid, who had risen with the apparent intention of leaving the room; But before she had reached the door the prosecutor had waved Mary from the stand and the clerk called loudly:

"Janet Beauchamp!"

There was a startled cry of "Oh, mon Dieu!" and the Frenchwoman paused, wringing her hands, the center of attention. She made a half movement as if determined to escape anyway and defy the law, but the sight of the police that guarded the exits and the stern repetition of her name brought her reluctantly back. She murmured a little prayer and crossed herself as she took the oath, but the cool friendliness of the prosecutor's voice reassured her.

"Janet, how long have you been in the employ of Miss Page?"

"Two—no, tree years sis season."

"And was it usual for you to leave the dressing-room when your mistress was getting ready for the street?"

"No, monsieur—sir!"

"But you had been told to leave her on this particular day?"

"Told to leave!" Janet's voice rose in Gallic excitement. "Mais non! I had but gone to se petite milliner, for ze new flowaires for ze blue gown."

"Who told you to go?"

"Monsieur Daniels, he come in, and he and mademoiselle, they talk, and he say pourquoi could I not go to get ze new flowaires—ze orchids, since ze shops would not be close for one half hour yet. And Miss Page she say, certainment that I should go then, for she could finish to dress by herself for once."

"How long were you out?"

"Oh, je ne sais pas—I mean, I do not know. Maybe fifteen, maybe twenty minutes. I come back quick parceque there are two kinds of orchid at ze shop, and I want mademoiselle to see zem both."

"And isn't it true," shouted the District Attorney, suddenly leaning forward and fairly hurling his words at the witness, "isn't it true that when you came in you saw Miss Page threaten Mr. Pollock with this revolver?"

He caught up the weapon as he spoke and thrust it under her eyes. The maid, with a quivering little scream of horror, shrank back amid a murmur of sympathy from the crowd. She could not speak.

"Isn't it true?" persisted the prosecutor harshly. "Answer my question—or tell us just what you did see when you came into the theater upon your return from the errand."

Bursting into a storm of tears, Janet flung out her arms in a wild gesture.

"It is true," she sobbed. "Mees Page, my mademoiselle, she was standing—and she had ze revolver—pointed at Mr. Pollock—and he—he—ran out of ze room."

At the words, Mary, whose hands had been twitching nervously throughout the maid's testimony, rose to her feet with a little gasping cry as if she would speak; but before the words came she swung suddenly about and crumpled into a little heap on the floor.

In an instant the whole room was on its feet, surging forward toward the dock; and the sobs of the maid were echoed by more than one woman among the spectators, where sympathy for the time ran high, though the pendulum swayed back when someone said shrilly with a derisive laugh:

"She's a good actress, is Mary Page!"

But the judge's gavel quelled the excitement and the dire threat back of his curt words that unless there was order in the court he would clear the room, was like oil upon the troubled waters of the sea of onlookers, and they sat in hushed silence as Mrs. Page and Langdon knelt beside the unconscious form of the slim young prisoner, bathing her temples and chafing her wrists until the momentary respite of nullity forsook her and she opened her eyes to the suffering of reality.

"Was there any one else in the room?"

At the sight of the fear on both Langdon's and her mother's face, however, she struggled bravely to regain her self-control and when the clerk called the next witness she was again in her chair. Very white and wan, but erect, her pallid lips set firmly to hold back the threatening tides of emotion and weariness that were sweeping over her.

The drumming in her ears and the little waves of nausea that are the aftermath of a fainting fit made events blurred to her for a little time, and it was with a start of surprise that she recognized in the new witness her erstwhile leading man.

The mere sight of his graceful figure and his boyish face; that handsome juvenile expression that was his stock in trade brought a flood of memories surging over her, and the shocked pity in his eyes made her realize keenly the difference that lay between Mary Page the prisoner—and Mary Page the star.

His testimony was to a great extent a repetition of what had gone before. He had been at the banquet; had seen the boy bring the message to Miss Page and had bidden her good night when she left. A few minutes later the sound of the shot had taken him down the hall with the others and into the room where Pollock and Mary lay—the one dead—the other unconscious.

"It was I who first urged that some one call the police," he said in his well-trained, youthful voice. "I would have gone myself but I wanted to be sure first whether I could be of service to Miss Page."

"Was that the reason you refused to leave the room when ordered to do so by Detective Farley?" The prosecutor's voice was dry.

"I resented his tone, sir," answered the young actor. "And besides," flushing, "I was her leading man and I felt that it—it was my place to be with her rather than that a lot of strangers should hang about."

An involuntary smile crossed Langdon's lips, but they grew grave again at the next question.

"After your ejection by Detective Farley and Mr. Langdon did you leave the hotel?"

"No, sir. I waited in the hallway in case I was wanted."

"Did you re-enter the room?"

"Yes, sir—not immediately, but when I heard a confusion of voices following the re-entry of the house detective and Mr. Langdon."

"Could you hear what was said?"

The actor flushed and hesitated, and then answered slowly:

"Yes, sir—in part."

"Will you please repeat what part you heard?"

"I heard Mr. Langdon say, 'But good God, there's only one door, she must be some place in here.' and the detective said, 'Well, she's not—you can see that.' Then Mr. Langdon said, 'There's the window—perhaps she's out there— I'll see.' And his voice sounded queer and excited as if he were frightened, and the detective said, 'No, nothing doing on that, sir—just remember, Mr. Langdon, that as yet I've no way of knowing whether that shot was fired before or after you entered this room!'

"Did Mr. Langdon reply?"

"Yes; he said, 'You d—— fool, what do you mean?' But just then the police came up and ran in, and I went on in with them, and the detective shouted, 'Some of you go down that fire-escape and hunt for a girl in an evening gown without either cloak or hat—and one of you keep your eye on this man Langdon—he was either in this room or at the door when James Pollock was murdered!'"

SUPERVISOR'S ACCOUNTS ARE SHORT $648.79

Travis says this sum should be paid back to the town or else proceedings be taken to compel Rounds to make a settlement.

In addition to finding the shortage, the Comptroller's examiners also learned it was thep ractice hot to record some receipts while in other cases, disbursements were recorded twice.

Except for some ambiguity regarding entries made in the books, the examiners found nothing to the detriment of Supervisor Callison, the successor of Rounds.

"It was found that from 1908 to 1913 inclusive, in some respects, the administration of town affairs was carried on in a loose, unbusiness-like and illegal manner. The responsibility for the inefficient and illegal conduct of affairs rests partly upon the supervisor, who was the chief fiscal officer of the town," says the report.

"Separate and apart from the difference of $648.79 for which W. W. Rounds is accountable, there is a still further sum of $93.70 which he admitted he received from the town, after an audit ofa claim for that amount submitted by him, and which he should now refund to the town. Mr. Rounds stated that he submitted the claim to the town andreceived the money on the theory that he was entitled to the money so long as the books which the town auditors had passed upon, purported to show that the town owed him that amount It is true that the books did show a balance in his favor."

"However, the facts disclosed in this report show that the balance of $93.70 in Mr. Rounds' favor was merely the result of his own errors and omissions in keeping the account of his transaction as supervisor."

"The examiner was informed by Mr. Rounds and other officials that the town board or town board of auditors had made some order or audit for a further sum of $50 payable to W. W. Round to reimburse him for some error in the account, by reason of which the town was supposed toowe him that much more money. It is understood that Mr. Rounds has not yet demanded payment upon that order and is holding it. The audit is regarded as without legal authority for payment, in view of the results of this examination which shows that Mr. W. W. Rounds is indebted to the town."

DEMOCRATS MEET IN SYRACUSE TOMORROW

A number of the local members of the Democratic party will go to Syracuse tomorrow to attend their convention.

Contrary to the original plans, neither the keynote speech nor the Democratic declaration of principles will touch on State issues. This determination was reached early last week when, after a conference held in this city, it was agreed that it would be better to make the attack on the Republican Administration at Albany at the Fall convention on the eve of the Guternatorial campaign, when it could be made to count more heavily than at present with the Gubernatorial fight months off and the Presidential primaries and prospective National Conventions absorbing the public interest.

OPEN LETTER TO AUTO OWNERS

At an enthusiastic meeting of the Chamber of Commerce ,held last Friday night, members of the Automobile Club expressed a desire to do all they can this season, financially and otherwise, to assist the Chamber in improving the streets of our city, as well as certain country roads leading into the city. It is not to oearly to begin laying plans, and as the Chamber of Commerce has suggested that we use their rooms, for a meeting, the same will be held next Friday evening, March 3rd, at 8 o'clock. It will be informal, and all automobile owners, whether members of the Club or not, are requested to attend and offer any suggestions that occur to them for the betterment of conditions in our city and vicinity.

It will be to the interest of every owner to attend and you are cordially invited.

R. L. McCULLY, President.

BRICK PAVING IN ONEIDA ST.

The Common Council held a special meeting in the City Hall late yesterday afternoon, the purpose of which was to draft a resolution requesting the State to construct a section of improved road for a distance of 1153 feet, from the termination of thep avement in Oneida st to the city line.

The resolution is made in view of the recent request of the Town of Volney to the State to construct a brick road fro mthe Fulton City line to the terminus of the State road from the top of Crosby Hill.

At the present time there is a bad section of road between the terminus of the state road from Volney Center and the Oneida st. pavement. The Town of Volney asks for an improvement to the section lying between the end of the State road and the city limits, while the City of Fulton's request is pertinent to a section of roadway lying entirely within the city limits.

After a brief explanation of the situation by Mayor Lewis, the board voted to present the resolution.

BACK TO JUNGLES TO TALK TO APES

Professor Garner Will Again Try to Learn Monkey Speech.

RECORDS IT ON PHONOGRAPH

Monkey Proof Cage His Home as He Gets Chummy With Inhabitants of African Forests—To Take Moving Pictures of Animals—Uses Ammonia as Weapon.

"Our'h"—Hello, there, my friend! Where are you?

"Euh"—Here I am under these palms, not far away.

"Qhui"—Well, wait there a moment. I want to join you.

Which is monkey talk, small chitchat of the African jungle, as interpreted by Professor Richard L. Garner. It is the talk of the little apes that swing by their tails. It is not the talk of the giant gorilla, which walks upright like a man, or the talk of the chimpanzee. Of their conversations, however, he has some samples.

Within ten days or two weeks, maybe, Professor Garner will sail from New York for the French Kongo, his scientific hunting ground. He goes partly on his own account to pursue his studies of ape language and partly on behalf of the Smithsonian institution and the Bronx zoo, for each of which he expects to obtain a collection of invaluable animals and natural history specimens.

In a Monkey Proof Cage.

For nearly twenty-five years Professor Garner has been going to Africa to imprison himself in a cage, too strong for even the mighty arms of gorillas to rend apart, while he listened night and day to catch the strange inflections of the ape voice. Now he can converse with little monkeys and big, returning their stare, but there is much that remains to be learned.

He has many big ideas for his new expedition. The study of ape language is his first scientific aim. He will attempt to increase his vocabulary of monkey words. He will take with him phonograph records for the recording of monkey language. He will try to capture two or three young gorillas for the Bronx zoo and two or three young chimpanzees as well.

"I shall go to the French Kongo," said Professor Garner, "and will establish headquarters in the Lake Fernan Vaz basin, about two degrees south of the equator and perhaps 150 miles inland from the coast. Thereafter I shall work inland to about 500 miles from the coast. As on my former expeditions, I shall construct a strong cage of stout steel rods about five-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, the whole inclosed by a netting of steel wire. The cage will be disguised by a covering of branches and leaves. Within the cage I shall have all of my necessary equipment for a long vigil—revolvers, a magazine rifle, three moving picture cameras, an ammonia squirt gun to discourage too inquisitive prowlers, my food supply, and so on.

Gorillas to Be Lured.

"I know of a pineapple plantation that will exactly suit my purposes, and I plan to lure within this plantation and to my cage many gorillas. You cannot find a gorilla merely by plunging into the jungle after him. You must bring him to you by the lure of food, by calls he understands, by scents agreeable to him. Naturally I expect to get some wonderful moving pictures and to capture several young gorillas and chimpanzees. I have arranged with the Smithsonian institution to have one of their men accompany me or to join me after I have made my arrangements in the jungle. He will assemble a collection for the institution.

"I am especially anxious to capture a young chimpanzee which can be trained as satisfactorily as was Susie, which I presented to the Bronx zoo several years ago. She died a year ago in an epidemic. Susie could do about anything that a four-year-old child could do. She could assemble geometrical figures, both plane and solid; could count up to three perfectly and up to four imperfectly; could select six colors and understood and obeyed at least 150 commands and about 300 words.

"This will be the most important expedition I ever attempted. Twenty-five years ago scientists used to laugh at my opinions, but they don't any longer. The novelty has worn off, and experiments have shown that I was correct in my deductions about the ability of apes to convey ideas by means of the spoken word."

KNIFE REALLY A GUN.

New York Police Warned of Arrival of New Deadly Weapon.

A new kind of dangerous weapon, consisting of a 22 caliber pistol, which is to all appearances an ordinary silver pocketknife, has arrived in New York. The police have been instructed to be unusually careful in "frisking" prisoners, not to be deceived by the device.

The knife contains two blades, with a heavy handle, a spring on the side of which can be moved by the thumb. The front part of the handle then turns around to admit the cartridge.

The firing is done by pressing the side spring.

EUCHRE CLUB GAVE BOOST TO ANNIVERSARY

The W. S. F. Fuchre Club gave Mrs. Bertha Cuyler a birthday surprise, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Halstead, Saturday evening. The house was decorated with the club colors, pink and green. Cards and music were enjoyed, and at 11 o'clock all were invited to the dining room where a course dinner was served. A large birthday cake, trimmed with candles and a wreath of smilax occupied the center of the table. Mrs. Cuyler was the recipient of a beautiful La Valliere. The guests who helped to celebrate the pleasant event were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilber, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Battles, Mr. and Mrs. William Guernsey and son Holley, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Battles and daughter Mildred, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Guile, Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Halstead, Mr. and Mrs. Orin Preshaw, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Battles, Mrs. H. # PARKER LOST TO EXPERIENCE

Local Boy Put Up Creditable Battle Against Great Odds---Return Match May Result.

"Al" Fisher, of Syracuse, bested "Kid" Parker in an interesting six-round bout at the Foster theater last night. Stomach blows, alternated with swings to the jaw gave Fisher a lead on points throughout a majority of the rounds. With the exception of the first round, in which both boys felt each other out and which resulted in honors being distributed evenly, and the third round which was Parker's, the rounds were all Fisher's. Time and again that more experienced fighter feinted the local lad into missing a number of vicious uppercuts, which if they had landed might have resulted in a victory for Parker. Parker, did, however, get in several of these blows fifth and sixth stanzas Fisher had the local boy wabbly. Parker's supporters were well satisfied with his work against Fisher, who has had several years' experience in the ring. It is stated that the boys have been rematched for four rounds at Syracuse.

The preliminaries furnished some real slugging, the opening bout between "Kid" Reed and "Young" Twiman, two colored boys, resulted in a knockout by Reed. The other boy, however, is entitled to the decision from the fact that Reed in his nervousness struck two blows while Twiman was on the floor. The most interesting of the preliminaries was that between "Buck" Green, of this city and "Kid" Sweeney of Syracuse. Green won by a safe margin. "Young" Tunk played with "Kid" Thorpe for four rounds. Tunk is entitled to the decision. The scheduled six-round semi-final between Eddie Coughlin, of Syracuse and Eddie McMann of Oswego lasted one minute. At the start the Syracuse boy took the count of nine twice in succession and a right swing from the shoulder of the Oswego boy ended the bout.

More than 300 people, including many prominent business men and city officials were at the ring side. Tom Slater refereed the bouts with Ray Westover holding the watch.

MANY CASES UP BEFORE COURT

Two of Them of Local Interest Reach Surrogate's Office---Melissa Williams Revokes Bequests.

A petition was filed in Surrogate's court yesterday for thep robate of the will of Melissa F. Williams, who died in Granby February 12, 1916. She left an estate, valued at $8,500, to a number of relatives and friends, the residue going to Cora Palmer, a neice; Neva Palmer, a grand niece; Emory Fuller, a nephew; Hazel Dewey, a niece, all of Fulton, and Lizzie Edwards of Baldwinsville, no relation. She makes specific requests of silverware, pictures, furniture, etc., and small amounts of money to relatives and friends. The will was made in 1909, and in a codicil, executed November 16, 1915, revokes a bequest of $200 to William Fuller, and Wava Palmer, one of the grandnieces having died, her share in the estate is left to her mother, Cora Palmer, Alfred E. Anold of Ira is the executor.

A petition for the probate of the will of Mrs. Mary J. Clarke who died November 4, 1915, at Minetto, was filed this morning by Robert A. Clark, her son and executor. The estate is valued at $1,500 personal and $2,000 real. Except for a bequest of $150 to the Oswego Rural Cemetery Association for the care of burial lot, the estate goes to Mr. Clark.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Lovisa A. Andrews, late of Volney, was filed by George W. Andrews. The estate is valued at $2,500 personal.

A petition was filed by Helen Ursula Bourlier on the estate of her husband, Henry Bourlier, who died at Hastings, February 13, 1916. The estate, which is valued at $6,000 personal, is left entirel yto Mrs. Bourlier.

An inventory of the estate of Christine McComb, late of Pulaski, shows the value of the peosonal estate to be $1,293.94.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of J. Gilbert Stewart was filed by Lovina Stewart. The estate is valued at $3,000 real and $3,500 personal.

The account of John Cloonan, as executor of the estate of Margaret Cloonan, late of this city, was filed today, showing that the receipts were $4,674.84 and the debts and expenses $777, leaving a net estate to be distributed of $3,797.84.

The account of Richard Nodda, as administrator of the estate of his sister, Mary Cavanaugh, was filed and the estate exempted from the transfer tax. Mr. Nodda is the only survivor. The amount received was $4,739.12; the debts and expenses, $513.91, and the net estate, $4,225.

ALLEGED BLACKHANDER SENTENCED TO AUBURN

Judge Coville meted out a number of prison sentences yesterday, one of which was that of Mariano Pagone, who was convicted in County Court of blackmail in connection with black hand threats against a countryman. Pagone was given not less than four nor more than six years four months in Auburn prison.

The maximum sentence is fifteen years for this offense but the law provides that a first offender cannot be sentenced for more than one-half that time! This is the first time that Pagone has been convicted of crime.

Byron Salisbury, charged with grand larceny, second degree, in stealing a horse and rig owned by Richard Halleck, was sentenced to six months in the County Jail.

Morse Donabella, who pleaded guilty to shooting pheasants out of season, had his bond continued until June 5.

Sam Demento, charged with assaulting Michael Paternoster, received a suspended sentence and must report to the probation officer for one year, in addition he must pay Michael Paternoster, whom he assaulted, $50 to cover damages.

Antonio Capilino, carrying concealed weapons, sentence suspended. He must report to the probation officer for two years and pay a fine of $40.

MEXICO HIGH COMES FRIDAY

To Return for Loss of Former Game---Local Girls Helping Athletic Fund.

A return game with the Mexico High school girls' basketball team will be played Friday night on the City Hall court by Miss Dickerman's Fulton High girls' quintet. The coming tilt will be more interesting than the Solvay game, Miss Dickerman states, the Mexico team having on the occasion of the first meeting at Mexico during the early part of the season given the local girls an interesting fight. At the end of the first half the Mexico girls tied up the score after the Fulton team had secured a good lead an dat the end of the second half repeated the performance with the result that an extra five minute session had to be played. Miss Dickerman's team scored a field basket in this period and thereby won the game.

The Mexico team is coached by A. J. Reed, Secretary of the Boys' Club of Mexico and since the last encounter the team has engaged in several games and has shown a vast improvement over their early season form. Margaret Howe, who in the Mexico game as well as the Solvay fray, was the chief point getter for the Fultonians will no doubt be kept under close surveillance on this account by the visiting guard.

The Athletic fund of the high school was enriched to the amount of $10 from the Solvay game. More than $35 was realized and the money was applied to various purposes, such as the purchase of a new basket equipment. The large gate receipts, perhaps the largest sum of money which has ever been taken in at a basketball game in the City Hall shows that there was much interest taken in the former game by the townsfolk, and with a better team to make its appearance on Friday, it is expected that the cash returns will be greater than that from the preceding game.

GOOD JOBS GO BEGGING IN ILLINOIS

Springfield, Ill.—Good jobs are going begging in Illinois because of a scarcity of labor due to "the unprecedented era of prosperity," according to a statement issued by the State Bureau of Labor statistics. The secretary of the bureau, Luke McCoy, with members of a general ... board, conducts the State ... employmen offices.

"Common labor was never in such a demand at such good wages as it is today," says the statement.

"The problem now seems to be to find men for good position ... of positions for men. The ... reports show hundreds of calls for help of all kinds, mostly skilled, which the employing offices are unable to fill."

The statement expresses the fear that lack of men may create a situation as critical as the usual lack of jobs.

BEGUN ON A PHONE

By OSCAR COX

There is nothing so pleases a girl as to get behind a screen where there is no possibility of being discovered and treating one of the opposite sex as she would never dream of treating him were her identity known. Ralph Harding, a youngster who was, to say the least, by no means bashful, was called to the telephone one day—a party wire—and a soft feminine voice asked, "Is this Mrs. Partington?"

"No; this is not Mrs. Partington."

"What is your number?"

"My number is 846, party W."

"Oh! I've got the wrong letter. I called 846 R. Excuse me."

How much often depends upon a trifle!

"No excuse needed, I assure you. Indeed, I must ask you to excuse me."

"What for, please?"

"Keeping you talking longer than is necessary to your purpose. The sound of your voice is pleasant to the ear."

A slight chuckle informed Mr. Harding that he had not given offense. The chuckle was the only reply, but it encouraged him to go on.

"We are frequently called to answer calls of 846 R. I suppose it is very easy for an operator to make a mistake in a letter."

"Quite so."

"Are you on a party wire?"

After some hesitancy the lady answered in the affirmative.

"Do you have the same letter as I?"

"My letter is 'M.'"

"And your number?"

Again the chuckle, but no other reply.

"Beg pardon. My question was thoughtless."

This was not true, as the girl well knew. If he had the number and the letter it would be possible for him to learn her identity.

"It wouldn't be proper for me to be chatting over the phone with a stranger," said the voice, "if he knew who I was, but since I am unknown I suppose it's no harm."

"How do you know that I'm not a very disreputable person?" asked Harding.

"By your voice. There is nothing that bespeaks refinement or the want of it so surely as the inflection of one's words. I defy any one not born and brought up in the highest class to assume the accent of one of that class."

"Thank you. You are repaying me for what I said to you with interest. Isn't it strange that I can hear you speak as plainly as if our lips were only an inch or two apart?"

Another chuckle.

"But, not being able to see you, I am obliged to rely on my imagination for a picture of you."

"What do you think I am like?"

"One of Titian's pictures—fair skin dark eyes and a tinge of mellow sunset in your hair."

"I'm not like that at all."

"Well, then you're a brunette."

There being no reply, Harding asked if he was "getting warm," as the children say in hide and seek games. But the lady, who was evidently guarding herself against identification, declined to favor him with a reply.

"I wish you would give me something by which I could find out who you are," he said.

"I am a lady."

"And, while a lady may talk to a strange man unknown, she would cease to be a lady if she became known, I suppose."

"Exactly."

"Very well, there is a chance, according to your definition of a lady, of your ceasing to be one."

"How is that?"

"If ever I meet you and you say a word to me I shall know you by that voice of yours, which has a melody in it I have never heard in a woman's voice before."

"Oh, my good gracious!"

"Therefore pray that I shall never meet you."

"I will. You're simply flattering me. I don't believe you could tell me by my voice at all."

"We may test that, and without your giving me any clew to your identity except what I have, your voice."

"How?"

"I'll tell you my name and where I live and give you any other information of myself that will enable you to meet me, you remaining unknown to me. By this you may contrive a meeting without my suspecting it. If I don't recognize you by your voice I am much mistaken. Is it a go?"

She did not say whether it was a go or not, but he gave her his name and address. She asked him to name some persons he knew, and at his giving a certain name she said he need not go any further, thereby giving him a point, and he resolved to be watchful whenever at the home of the person named. Then they said "Goodby," there were two clicks, and fate had arranged for a wedding.

Some months later Harding was invited to dine at the house of a friend—not the one the girl of the telephone had given him reason to suspect as a mutual friend. Before going in to dinner, hearing a voice behind him, he turned, looked a girl in the face and said:

"I am pleased to renew our acquaintance begun on the phone."

The girl blushed to the roots of her hair.

The wedding took place ten months later.

A WRONGED MAN'S CRUEL REVENGE

Dreadful Fate of an English Officer In India.

Colonel Collinwood commanded the ——th Haidarabad native infantry. The colonel was a large, florid man who well illustrated the English proclivity for not being able to learn from others. His father had been a small tradesman in London who in some way had put a member of the cabinet under obligation to him and the obligation was repaid by a commission for the son. Nearly all the young man's brother officers were gentlemen born, and many of them younger sons of nobles. Colinwood was snubbed for twenty years, and as soon as he was promoted to the command of a regiment commenced a systematic snubbing of every officer beneath him in rank.

The colonel was especially hard on his servants. He seemed to consider any servant as a necessary evil and a native Indian servant as a worm of the dust. Among those who attended him was an Irishman named Malony and a native named Haroutune. Malony treated all natives as his master treated his inferiors. Haroutune was very different from both the colonel and the Irishman. He was as gentle as a woman. He was married to a soft eyed young Indian, and they had three children.

One day Colonel Colinwood missed a valuable diamond that he had bought, expecting to make a display with it when he returned to England. The only two persons who had access to the room where it was kept were Malony and Haroutune. The colonel, who had perfect confidence in Malony, had Haroutune arrested, and the courts in the neighborhood were so afraid of the autocratic soldier that he had little trouble in having the Indian convicted. Haroutune was sent to prison to serve a term of fifteen years.

Not long after the loss of the diamond Maloney left the colonel's service to return to the British isles. Eight years later Colinwood, having been invalided home, found his former servant living "in clover." Setting detectives on his track, the colonel unearthed the fact that he had disposed of a valuable diamond, and his prosperity dated from the sale. Colinwood, finding it to his interest to accept the remainder of the thief's fund on condition that he would not prosecute, made the compromise.

A few years after this the colonel returned to India with a wife and two little children. He debated the matter as to what he should do in making amends to Haroutune and decided that to say anything about the mistake would place him in an unpleasant position. Haroutune now had but a few years to serve. Besides, he was nothing but a low caste native, and a prison was as good a place for him as anywhere else. So the colonel concluded to do nothing in the way of justice.

Meanwhile Haroutune was languishing in prison. He was so gentle in his manner that one of the prison officials took him into his service. This gave the poor fellow a great deal of liberty. Not long before his term expired a snake charmer gave an exhibition at the prison, and Haroutune saw him perform. Among other things, the snake charmer would place a bird in the same apartment with a snake. On its master's order the snake would steal up to the bird and strangle it.

One day when Colonel Colinwood was at dinner with some friends he remarked that the time for the release of the man who had stolen his diamond must have arrived. Some of the party said that the natives were prone to take revenge for punishment and it behooved the colonel to be on his guard. Colinwood declared that if he were inclined to fear any Indian he certainly would not fear Haroutune, who was more woman than man. Had the colonel realized that the prisoner, who had served fifteen years for an offense of which he knew himself to be innocent; that he had come out of prison to find his wife and children, having been deprived of his support, had succumbed and were all dead—had the colonel known this he might have feared that even a worm will turn. Mrs. Colinwood did not share her husband's want of faith in Indian revenge and shuddered.

The very next day Elsie Colinwood was found dead in the garden. The children were permitted to play there, since the place was surrounded by a high wall. The little brother who made the discovery said that he had seen a snake pass from a tree on to the garden wall. There was no mark on the body, though the throat gave evidence of strangulation.

A month later the boy was found dead in his bed with no more marks on him than had been found on his sister. The mother, on the verge of insanity at her loss, besought her husband to resign his position and return to England. He promised to do so, but before he could make his arrangements his wife met a fate similar to that of her children. The distracted man followed her to her grave and completed his preparations to leave a country that had become a horror to him. The night before he was to sail he was awakened by a choking sensation and, grasping what was coiled about his neck, tore it away and threw it to the other side of the room. The next morning a servant went to awaken him and found his dead body terribly swollen. He had been bitten on the hand by one of the most deadly snakes in India.

A FAMOUS VICTORY

By F. A. MITCHEL

A young man within the German lines in Alsace knocked at the door of a cottage. A girl came to the door, and he asked her if he might be accommodated for the night which was coming on. She called to her mother in the German tongue. The young man knitted his brows. He had expected to find French inmates.

The mother came and spoke to the stranger, speaking French with a German accent. He told her that he was traveling and since there was no other house near either she must admit him or he must bivouac for the night. She consented to admit him.

The young man was about twenty-two years old and handsome as a picture. A winning smile began to play about his lips the moment he spoke to the girl, and his eyes indicated his admiration for her. He said nothing about the terrible war that was going on nor did his hostess or her daughter. Nevertheless he assumed that they sympathized with the German cause. For France's lost province has at least as large a population of Germans as French. As to the young man, he was plainly French.

Now, though these persons did not talk about the war, it was evident that the visitor, being a Frenchman within the German lines, was living with a sword suspended over him. True, the country near about was not occupied by troops except in small bands, but any German soldier meeting a Frenchman there would require him to give an account of himself. At bedtime the stranger took a candle and went to the room that had been assigned him, locked the door after him and went to bed, but not to sleep. There was that on his mind that precluded sleep. Life was on the one hand, death on the other. He was liable to be clutched by death.

The girl about midnight, armed with a pair of pliers, went to the guest's door and, feeling with her implement for the end of the key, finally succeeded in turning it. Opening the door, she stole into the guest's room and to a chair beside the bed on which he had put his clothes. She was about to withdraw them when she felt a hand on her wrist.

"Let me go," she said in a low voice.

"Certainly," said the visitor. "You have doubtless made a mistake in the room."

He released her, and she withdrew. He knew well what her object had been in trying to take his clothes. She suspected he was a spy and that in his pockets would be found papers containing information he was taking to the entente allies.

In the morning when he came down to breakfast and bade the girl good morning his face wore that same winning smile. She did not respond, evidently steeling herself against him. When he started on his journey she had on her hat and coat and gloves.

"I am going with you," she said.

"I am delighted."

"You are a spy, and I intend to turn you over to the first German officer we meet."

"Oh, no, you won't!"

"Why not?"

"Because they would stand me up and shoot me."

"I have considered all that."

"But when it comes to seeing me shot down you will regret what you have done."

All this the Frenchman said with that same irresistible smile on his lips.

"Give me the papers you are bearing and you may go free for all me."

"It is beyond your power to free me."

"Why so?"

"You have made a prisoner of my heart, and my heart will not be released."

It was evident that the shot had hit. The girl was winged. But she was not ready to surrender.

"My feelings may drive me one way, but my duty is driving me another. I am capable of sacrificing my feelings to my duty."

"Then do so."

The only weapon he carried was a revolver. Taking it from its holster at his hip he tossed it to her. It fell at her feet. He folded his arms and stood looking at her with that smile which was having the same effect upon her that the eye of a serpent would have on a bird.

"Do your duty to your fatherland. The papers you wish are on my person, but you shall not have them without first killing me."

She was not yet conquered. Taking up the weapon she cocked it, advanced to within a few feet of him, put the muzzle against his breast and said:

"Give me the papers or I will sacrifice you to my duty."

"I love you," was his only response.

"Once more, give me the papers."

"Once more, I love you."

They stood, the eyes of each fixed on those of the other. The battle waxed hot, but not with weapons of death. It was a fight of love against duty. Without that smile duty might have won.

Presently he saw victory for himself, defeat for her. Disregarding the weapon pressed against his heart he extended his arms, her hand sank slowly, he encircled her, drew her to him and kissed her.

When he went his way with his papers she returned to the house. Her sense of duty had given place to an all absorbing love.

Woman's Work

Newly Elected Treasurer of New York State Suffrage Party.

MRS. OGDEN MILLS REID.

"Ever since I was a girl at Barnard college," says Mrs. Reid, "I have had the feeling that life outside the home was incomplete without woman's direct contribution to the making of public affairs. This is an age of specialization, and if women specialize in anything it is in a sense of the value of human life.

"This idea of conserving life as the best investment any state can make is needed in political affairs. I believe in all the other arguments for enfranchising women, but this seems to me the most urgent. Woman's own specialties, those things which make up her peculiar province, such as guardianship of home and children and her better knowledge of housekeeping, are needed to make up a good world for men and women just as much as man's knowledge of business and finance is needed. Men have surely realized that women have had success in their own province. Why should they deny the world the value of this special skill? This great mass of influence and expert knowledge could be used for mankind. It should so be used."

Born in Appleton, Wis., Mrs. Reid is a true western woman. She has the point of view which sees the United States as stretching from coast to coast and not as a thin line along the Atlantic seaboard. As one who has herself been a wage earning woman she believes in woman's economic independence. "I certainly hope my daughter will have this same wholesome experience, for I believe every girl should be given the chance to earn her own living," she says.

She voices the newer call for woman's political freedom not alone because women are denied a privilege when the ballot is withheld from them but because the world needs the enfranchisement of its women and because politics as well as domestic life needs her point of view.

Spring Cues.

Blouses formed of net, either used singly or double, are most charmingly dainty. They are severely tailored or made with ruffles and frills.

Chiffon hems on faille frocks are finished with overlapping folds of the faille.

An oblong picot edged piece of chiffon was attached to the underside of the seams of a dark blue faille and chiffon frock.

Sleeves are full below the elbow and in many cases flowing, with undersleeves that are often of extreme daintiness.

How are the women of spring to disguise themselves—for during the winter it was a wise husband who could recognize his wife at a little distance. The chin-chin collar hid her chin and mouth, while the small, close fitting hat hid all her hair and even obliterated one eye. So, given one eye, one had to recognize one's fashionable friends. Of course, if feet and ankles are individual enough—and, goodness knows, some are—one had a generous view of the latter.

Corsets continue to hug the waist, are still short on the hips and the bust remains medium in height. Even if the waist is to be smaller do not order a smaller corset to obtain this effect, for it will not only not wear well, but will be uncomfortable. The same effect can be obtained by getting a corset of your own size that is cut to fit in at the waist.

Fashion Hint.

Evening dresses are sleeved! Sometimes the sleeves are mere wisps, 'tis true, but yet they cover to an extent milady's pretty shoulders and make them even prettier for the veiling. A few evening dresses will be sleeveless, but they will be the exception. The [illegible] drop shoulder is also forcing itself upon fashionable notice, and a few extreme evening gowns show its charming lines.

Shrimp Salad.

Chop shrimp with celery, if large, and add a little onion. Place in a salad dish and pour over it mayonnaise made very thin and garnish with sliced boiled eggs, sliced lemon, beets and celery tops. It may be served on lettuce leaves if preferred.

CASSEROLE COOKING.

Appetizing Viands Depend Upon Dainty Serving of Them

The cooking done in casseroles has several important advantages over that of the ordinary kitchen vessel. The dishes are without the metal taste which so often contaminates common pots and pans. As the cooking is slow and thorough the nutritive values of food are preserved, and the perfection of the flavor is therefore concentrated.

The ornamental appearance of the various dishes used permits serving the viands in the very utensil in which they were cooked, which is a tremendous point when the dish needs to be eaten very hot. Food can be kept warm in the casserole without danger of changing color or taste, as would happen if it were left to chill in a metal vessel. The earthenware of which the dishes are made is not open to the acid influences of fruit and therefore is without the possibility of any noxious change. The enamel of the inside does not scale off. It is easily kept clean and so food prepared in the casserole is clean and sweet.

The pretty marmite for soupmaking, the larger and smaller pots and shallow pans and plates in every size can be bought. Among the many shades of brown there are some green tones (these vessels of French make) which are very effective on the table. Some don'ts are involved in the proper care of the charming utensils.

Before using them for the first time the dishes should be soaked in cold water for some hours, as this will help to keep them from cracking on their first exposure to heat. Never put the vessels on the hot stove or in the oven without first putting in water or fat. Do not put them roughly on a metal surface or set them when hot on a wet table. A fierce heat is never desirable and so, even if the flame of the top of the stove is low, it is best to put an asbestos mat under the vessel used.

Many more things for the preservation of these toylike cooking vessels might be said, and for young housekeepers and girls who want to learn how to cook in a dainty and perfect manner they are certainly more inspiring than the common cook pot, pan and kettle.

CODFISH RABBIT.—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in the upper part of the chafing dish, blend with it one tablespoonful of cornstarch. Add one cupful of hot milk, gradually, and season with a dash of paprika. Cook until smooth and then add three-quarters of a cupful of grated cheese and a cupful of codfish previously soaked in cold water and then flaked. As soon as the cheese is melted stir in one well beaten egg quickly. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice and serve on crisped wafers.

Breaded Sausage.—Select your favorite brand of sausages. Beat the yolk and white of an egg till they are frothy and, wiping each sausage dry, dip into the egg and roll in powdered breadcrumbs. Have a pan of hot fat ready. Place the sausages in a wire basket and lower into the fat, leaving them there for about ten minutes. Prepare thin, dainty slices of toast and arrange the sausages on the toast on a platter with a garnishing of parsley.

Tomato Rabbit.—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan placed over boiling water, add one cupful of finely cut American cheese, stir until melted, add gradually one cupful of well seasoned tomato liquor from canned tomatoes, stir until well blended, add three well beaten eggs, cook a minute longer, add a generous seasoning of paprika and serve on bread toasted on the under side only.

Peppers and Fish.—Cut the peppers in half lengthwise and remove the seeds. Drop into hot water and boil for six minutes without covering. Then drain and fill. Make the filling of fish, removed from bones and skin and mixed with fine breadcrumbs. Season with salt and pepper and melted butter. Baste the peppers with strained tomato juice three or four times while they are baking. They should be done in half an hour in a moderate oven.

Scrambled Calf's Brains.—Wash the brain and remove all the fine skin; be sure every bit of the fiber is removed. Put a tablespoonful of butter or bacon drippings in pan, add the brain and cook slowly, stirring all the time; beat two eggs until well mixed and pour over the brain; stir until set; add salt and pepper to taste, sprinkle with chopped parsley and paprika.

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Qualified For Style Honors.

Fashionable waist in shell pink satin crepe trimmed with hand embroidery in self-color.

This is a very desirable waist for spring because it is fashioned on desirable lines and developed in that most desirable of materials—satin crepe—in a very desirable color—shell pink. The long one-piece sleeve extends over the shoulder to form a strapped effect, while delicate hand embroidery contributes its quota to the smartness of the gathered front. The convertible collar may button high at the throat or be rolled back with a V-shaped outline. In medium size the waist requires 3½ yards 27-inch material.

In working on the waist bear in mind the fact that the large "O" perforations indicate the center-front. Begin to make, however, by first turning under front edge of front on slot perforations for an underfacing. Gather the shoulder edge of front between double "TT" perforations and sew the sleeve to the shoulder and armhole edges as notched. Next, close the under-arm and sleeve seams.

To make the sleeve ready for the cuff gather the entire lower edge and turn under edge of narrow cuff on slot perforations and lap to small "o" perforations, edges even. Stitch about ⅜ inch from folded edge, leaving edges free about 3 inches from lower edge. Sew to sleeve, single large "O" perforations even, small "o" in cuff at seam of sleeve, and bring the folded edge of pleat in cuff to small "o" perforation in sleeve. Sew turn-over to cuff as notched. Sew sleeve in armhole, easing in fulness.

Now, gather the back of the waist on small "o" perforations and ½ inch above; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape over gathers. Face the collar and sew to the neck edge, the notches and center-backs even.

The embroidery should be done before the material is cut. The design is exceedingly simple and will work up quickly in satin stitch.

ABOUT GOOD BUTTER.

How to Keep It In the Refrigerator Without Contamination.

Most persons nowadays are fastidious about the butter they eat. The woman who is content to do without fruit and vegetables out of season usually considers it no extravagance to buy the best butter. And the number of persons who pay a really high price for special butter, fresh butter or other butter with an especially sweet flavor increases every week.

But the best butter can be rendered unfit for eating with little difficulty. Good butter needs to be carefully kept and it is often so carelessly or ignorantly cared for in stores and houses that it loses its good qualities.

The intelligent dealer, of course, has proper refrigerators and usually keeps butter in a separate compartment. As an extra safeguard he buys butter in small prints or blocks, and these are wrapped in waxed paper. But now comes the task of preserving its freshness in the home refrigerator.

Butter absorbs odors very readily, and that is why it is so difficult to keep properly. Of course it is quite out of the question to have a separate compartment for butter in the ordinary home refrigerator. But it is possible to keep the butter separate from everything else by keeping it in a special covered dish. Glass jars with glass covers that clamp securely into place are sold for this purpose, and one of them is an economy. As soon as the butter comes into the house remove the pasteboard and paper wrappings and put it into one of these jars. It should be washed and scalded and thoroughly dried before receiving a new cake of butter. Any old butter remaining should be packed into another covered dish.

If the ice gives out and the butter is soft, try hardening it by putting it in a bowl under running cold water. This will do wonders with the butter. When it begins to harden around the outside cut it in smaller pieces so that the inside part will also harden.

THE SPRING MODEL.

For Juveniles Comes This Good Looking Sports Coat.

SMART LINES.

One of the new coats comes in this rough weave of tan cloth, with velvet collar and cuffs and brass buttons as trimming. Belted waist line and reversible collar, along with the flare, are also good points.

Rice Griddlecakes.

One cupful of boiled rice, a cupful of scalding milk, one and a half cupfuls of sifted flour, two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, one and a half teaspoonfuls of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar, a tablespoonful of melted butter, two eggs, a little cold milk. Pour the scalding milk over the boiled rice, cover closely and let stand overnight. In the morning add the other ingredients in the order given, using enough cold milk to make a batter that will pour easily. Bake on a hot, lightly greased griddle and serve at once.

Crumb Cake.

Mix three cupfuls of flour, two cupfuls of sugar, half a cupful of lard and half a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg together thoroughly, then take out half a cupful of these dry crumbs. Now add two cupfuls of sour milk with half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in it and put cake in pan. When cake is in pan sprinkle over the top the half cupful of dry crumbs which you took out in the beginning. Put in oven and bake slowly.

Crab Meat, Terrapin Style.

A cupful of crab meat, two tablespoonfuls of butter, half a small onion thinly sliced, two tablespoonfuls of sherry wine, a third cupful of heavy cream, the yolks of two eggs. Cook butter and onion until yellow, remove onion, add crab meat and wine. Cook three minutes, add cream, yolks of eggs, salt and cayenne.

For the Children

Snow and Ice Make Sport For Little Folks.

Not for many years have the children of New York enjoyed such a winter as the weather man has provided this year. There have been half a dozen snowstorms, and some of the time the lakes have been covered with ice for skaters. You may easily believe that skates and sleds have been much in use. Little New Yorkers do not let such opportunities go to waste, for some of them remember winters when there was not snow or ice enough to give them a chance to enjoy the sports of winter. The young lad in the picture has probably seen very little snow in his lifetime. However, he is making up for whatever time he has lost. His name is Duncan van Norden, and he was shoveling snow in Central park when the camera man happened along.

The Chickens' Surprise Party.

In southern California the dry season lasts from six to eight months, so there were some good sized chicks in our yard that had never seen rain, writes a correspondent of the Orange Judd Farm.

One morning a little cloud suddenly began to send down some big drops on the dry soil. The chicks evidently thought some one was throwing grain to them. They flew at the drops, this way and that, trying to pick them up. Peck as fast as they would they could not get a bite of anything. They heard the pattering; they saw the spots on the ground; they jumped about like crazy chickens, pushed each other about and looked skyward in their funny sideways fashion.

When the shower became heavy they flew to shelter, huddled together and cheeped pitifully. How we wished we could have understood what they said to each other about then!

The River Jordan.

Among famous rivers must always be included the Jordan, nearly as sacred to Christians as the Ganges is to the Hindus because of the baptism of Christ in its waters. The Jordan, except near its source, is below the level of the ocean, and the Dead sea, where it empties, is a quarter of a mile below the surface of the Mediterranean.

There are four old fords of the Jordan. At one of these on the Monday before Easter the pilgrims of the Greek church, often thousands in number, who have come down from Jerusalem escorted by Turkish soldiers, perform the well known ceremony of bathing in the sacred stream. A short distance below this is the point where the river loses itself in the lifeless waters of the Dead sea.

Natural Snow Bridges.

A slow thaw, following a heavy fall of snow, is almost sure to form, here and there, miniature natural bridges of snow, over which a rabbit or even a fox might run without crushing the short span. According to the lay of the land, the melted snow water collects at a certain place and gradually eats its way under another part not melting so rapidly, and this tunnel, growing larger from the increasing water, soon forms the span. In the same manner natural bridges of earth and rock are formed after hundreds of centuries of erosion, while the snow bridges are formed in a few hours and often disappear as quickly.

Under the Bridge.

Under the bridge the trains go by
With whistle and shriek and puff,
And I mean to go right off in a train
When I am big enough.

I shall go to a land where bananas grow,
And oranges, too, on trees;
Where every one eats whatever he likes
And no one says, "If you please."

I shall drink my milk from a cocoanut
And munch the sugar cane,
And when I am tired of that faroff land,
Why, I'll come home again!

A Misapprehension

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Being detained at the town of Acland, where I had gone on business on account of the absence of the man I had gone there to see, I asked the clerk of the hotel where I stopped if there was a free library in the place. He directed me to one of the most attractive little buildings I ever saw, in the center of a grove. I went there and nosed over the fiction shelves for awhile and finally took down a novel.

On turning the leaves a bit of paper flitted to the floor. I picked it up and, seeing some words written on it in pencil, read them:

> Ten years today since Frank left us, and I am no more reconciled to his absence than the day after his departure. Oh, the long, long, weary day!
> ALICE.

Now, there was something in this that fitted me. My name is Frank Tisdale. Twelve years before I had accepted a position in a commission house in Hongkong and gone out there to make my fortune. I returned on a visit after eight years' sojourn in China and never went back. I was twenty years old when I left home, and among the girls to whom I said goodby was one Alice Ringold. But I was not aware that I was any more to her than any other young man.

I took the book and the paper to the librarian, telling her that I had found the one in the other. She said that returned books were apt to have a variety of articles in them, usually put there in lieu of a book mark. I asked her if such articles were returned, and her reply was, "Sometimes." I requested that if she returned the paper I had left with her to the person who had written it she would let me know. I left with her a postage stamp and my address.

Not very long after my return to my home I received a letter from the librarian announcing that she had found the Alice whose name was appended to the writing on the paper I had discovered. The lady had dropped it into the book which was lying open on a table, some one else had closed the book, and it had been returned to the library with the slip in it. The librarian gave the name, Alice Ringold.

Now, I had passed the age of thirty, supposing that no woman had shown any predisposition toward me. I was on the verge of middle age, with no one to care for me, and now accidentally I had discovered that a girl from whom I had parted a dozen years before had been mine for the asking during the whole of that period. I remembered Alice Ringold, a shy little thing, so young that I would not have believed she could love any man. She could not at the time have been more than fifteen.

Here was a chance to break away from the bachelorhood into which fate seemed to have thrown me. I would renew my acquaintance with Alice Ringold, and if she was of the same mind—and from the recent date of what she had written it was likely that she was—I might settle myself in a home under the same advantages as pertained to youth. But I must contrive to make the meeting appear accidental.

She had removed from the town where she had lived to Acland, and there I went. Having learned where her home was situated, I set out to find her, proposing to make up a story as to how I had come to know of her being in Acland. Just before reaching the house a young woman came out of the front door and in another moment met me face to face.

She was Alice Ringold. Between sixteen and twenty-six there is not so great a difference in one's appearance as between twenty-six and thirty-six. At any rate, there was enough left of the girl I had known for me to recognize her. I stopped, lifted my hat and spoke to her. She looked at me, and I saw at once that she knew me.

"Alice Ringold?" I asked.

"Yes; and you are Frank Tisdale."

"Singular that you should know me after so many years' absence."

"No more singular than that you should know me."

"I have been wondering what had become of you since my return to America. I have been hunting you for months."

She cast her eyes down just as she did when she was little more than a child. She was going to the village, and I walked beside her. I told her of the many times I had thought of her during my absence in the east and how I had longed that fate should have brought us together again.

With that slip of paper in my possession I had all the boldness of a grenadier. I made rapid progress, speaking more and more plainly in my lovemaking as I advanced. When I parted with her I told her I would see her in the evening, and when the evening came, having gone through the preliminaries, I proposed to her.

She said it was very sudden and a great surprise to her. I smiled inwardly at this, thinking of the paper I had found. However, after a little coyness she yielded and accepted me. Just before I left her she said:

"Do you remember my brother Frank?"

"Frank? I believe I do."

"He died soon after you left for China. I have never got over his loss."

Great heavens! It was her brother she had loved all these years.

Nevertheless we are very happy.

THE CAUSE OF ONE-HALF MILLION NEW YORK VOTERS

in the form of a Constitutional Amendment. Who can reasonably doubt that as still other States fall into line with those which already have adopted woman suffrage there will be at least hundreds of thousands more of New York voters for the measure in 1917 than there were in 1915? hWo can fairly dispute that the only way to handle this question is to give it ove rto the voters?

"It is not for the leader of the Senate, it is not for the leader of the Assembly, it is not for any political manager in one party or the other to decide what the people will want to do with this measure in 1917. It is for the voters of New York to decide. They must have the chance."

RURAL CREDITS BILL MAY PASS CONGRESS

vided that the land banks shall make loans to farmers through local associations of borrowers, called national farm loan associations. These associations do not conduct a banking business. Their operations are very simple. The yadmit members who desire to borrow; their directors and loan committees pass on the value of the security and character of the borrower. Every borrower takes stock in the farm loan association to the amount of 5 per cent of the face of his loan. This amount is subscribed by the association to the stock of the land bank, thus providing for a capital proportionate to the amount of loans, approximateing one to twenty.

The farm loan association may be of limited liability or of unlimited liability. In the former each member is liable for the debts of the association in an amount equal to the face of his subscribed stock; in the latter the member undertakes unlimited liability for all the debts of the association. This individual liability gives to the indorsement of the association solid financial backing. The bill provides that all loans shall be indorsed by the association of which the borrower is a member.

The land banks are permitted to charge borrowers 1 per cent more for interest than they pay bondholders. For example, if the current rate on farm-loan bonds is 4 per cent, the bank may charge not to exceed 5 per cent to farmers who borrow. This margin of 1 per cent on the amount of the unpaid principal outstanding is available to the bank for its expenses and earnings, but it will probably be largely reduced to practise. The profits go to the local associations in the form of dividends on stock of the land bank held by the then in the associations. In this way the earnings of the system go to the borrowers, and its cooperative character is assured. If the 1 per cent margin is too high, no harm is done, for the excess comes back to the borrower in dividends.

It is desired that local associations organize in every community at an early date, but it is also recognized that on account of the peculiar local conditions some communities may be without local associations or joint stock land banks indefinitely. The farm loan board is given power in such cases to authorize federal land banks to make loans to farmers through duly incorporated trust companies, mortgage companies or saving institutions.

RESIDENTS OF CORNERS FILE COMPLAINT

A complaint has been filed with the Second District Public Service Commission by resident of Bowen's Corners against the Fulton Light, Heat and Power company regarding the erection of aline between Granby Center and Bowens Corners, and the refusal to complete the same unless poles are furnished by the complainants.

In speaking of the grievance set forth by the complainants, John J. Jordan, manager of the company stated today that the case is governed by the action of the Public Service Commission who will shortly advise the local company the final outcome of a matter involving the situation between Granby Center and Bowens Corners, phich, it was stated is that of the proposed power line to Phoenix by way of Bowens Corners. Thep roceedure of the power company, according to Mr. Jordan, is governed entirely on the decision to be handed down by the Commission.

Why Do Dairy Cows Run Down?

No other farm animal is the cause of so much anxiety to the owner as his dairy cows; sickness gets in in spite of the best of care.

Why? Because the dairy cow is subjected to constant forcing to get the maximum in quantity and quality of the milk yield. This constant strain proves too much for many a good cow; some important function becomes impaired and for want of proper medical assistance she becomes a "backward" cow. In just such cases as these Kow-Kure has made its reputation for success when used to

of the herd. Kow-Kure is a medicine for cows only—not a stock food. It has wonderful medicinal qualities that act on the organs of production and reproduction for the prevention or cure of many serious cow ailments. It is especially useful in cases of Abortion, Barrenness, Milk Fever, Scouring, Lost Appetite, Bunches, Retained Afterbirth, etc. Farmers who have used it keep Kow-Kure on hand constantly. Most feed dealers and druggists sell it.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

There will be a meeting of the automobile owners Friday evening at the Chamber oof Commerce rooms; the meeting will be called to order at eight o'clock and we hope that all owners of autos will be present, because some things of very great importance not only to themselves, but to others as well will be discussed. If you are interested in good and better roads and if you are interested in the very welfare of Fulton, then come to this meeting.

* * *

It was proven again last evening that the people in Fulton are willing to back up something good, when it comes to the city. The performance of "The Princess Pat" was of the very first class and we sincerely hope that the management of the Quirk Theatre will give us another chance like that. Remember: it will keep the people at home; remember that the money will be spent in Fulton instead of Syracuse and also remember that it brings the citizens together.

* * *

We were taught an excellent lesson last evening. The performance started exactly at 8:15 and quite a large number got FOOLED. Be on time on all occasions; don't make your fellowmen wait for you at dinners, meetings, etc.

* * *

The greatest thing that happened in the history of Fulton for a number of years will take place next Tuesday evening, when FULTON'S OWN ORCHESTRA will give its first concert. This is an epoch making event and it will all depend on the citizens, if this organization will be a success or not. It is our intention to use this orchestra in other cities than FULTON and to show the outside that FULTON is there, when it comes to good things. Now let's all be present; we don't want to MAKE any money, because the proceeds will go for a Charitable Fund and out of this fund we will help institutions like the Hospital, the Library and above all, the poor in the city. There are therefore two chances for you; first you back up a home institution and [illegible] good turn to the other fellow.

* * *

Let us show that fellow in Syracuse that we do not need to go to his town to listen to music; that we can produce it right here at home and that we can compete with larger cities in good things.

* * *

Have you ever given it thought that a home institution may expect the solid backing of a community? We ought to have just as good a crowd out next Tuesday evening as we had last evening. And our prices are so much more reasonable that you can come, one and all.

* * *

FULTON MUSICIANS WILL GIVE A CONCERT TO FULTONIANS. YOUR ORCHESTRA WILL GIVE ITS FIRST CONCERT NEXT TUESDAY EVENING.

* * *

Get that half-dollar or that quarter out of your pocket and spend it for a ticket for the first concert of the FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

* * *

The cooperation of the many people in FULTON is getting better every day and we hope to see the day when we are all one.

* * *

Watch your daily paper for the news that comes from the Chamber of Commerce.

* * *

If you really want to know something, come to the office of the Chamber and get results. You don't know half what service we are able to render.

* * *

The annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce will be held on March 31st, 1916. Get ready for this—the biggest meeting you ever attended

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce is the burning point of FULTON.

Be a sport and come to the office and let us show you the many things we are doing in YOUR interest.

Officials Reply to Evening Times' Editorial, Expressing Surprise That Ignorance of Conditions Should Exist

It is asked, "what use is to be made of the difference between a deficit as found by the City Chamberlain amounting to approximately $9,000 and the proposed bond issue of $15,000?"

It is said, "that it is high time to give careful attention the sum of money represented after deducting $9,000 from the amount of the proposed bond issue and to say to the taxpayers how the sum is to be used provided the bond issue receives the stamp of popular approval," and it is remarked, "In view of the silence maintained by the officials who must know why it is found necessary to float bonds for $6,000 more than it is apparently needed, the people are left to draw their own conclusions."

We had supposed that the nature and cause of this deficit had been made so plain that every person understood. We consider it a privilege and it is a pleasure to answer the foregoing inquires.

To start with, the writer is misinformed. The City Chamberlain did not find a deficit amounting to approximately $ 9,000. He found a deficit of approximately $22,000. (See his report). There is no authority for the statement that it is proposed to float bonds for $6,000 more than is apparently needed. About $15,000 is apparently needed. it being impossible at this time, owing to the State of the city records to ascertain precisely. For this reason the precise amount is left for the determination of Common Council, as the affairs of each department are in turn examined and considered, it is proposed to take care of those deficits only which are entirely obvious at this time and to leave [illegible] and uncertain matters for further and full investigation.

In substance, the deficit consists of two entirely obvious, clear and certain matters, as follows:

First— The various departments incurred indebtedness to the amount of about $9,000 more that was appropriated for them. It is plain there is no money to pay these bills. The city received value for these bills. They number several hundred. They are largely owing to persons who furnished goods or labor to the city in good faith. They number several hundred. The expense of litigation and investigation largely exceeds the amount of the bills, payment of which might be avoided. It would be the height of folly and very unfair to many merchants and laborerers to refuse payment. The remedy is to pay up the bills, and in the future to have such publicity of city affairs and such interest on the part of citizens, that no administration will dare to permit such conditions to exist.

Second—The water department has used upwards of $6,000 of moneys belonging to other funds of the city. In other words, $6,000 of money paid by abutting owners for paving (and which were applicable and should have been paid on the certificates of indebtedness in anticipation of the payment of the tax) were mixed with the general moneys of the city and improperly paid out for payment of the expenses of the water department.

This came about in this way:

Money was appropriated for building a standpipe. It was put into and kept as part of the water fund.

In 1913 a new ledger was opened. It was properly determined that the standpipe moneys should be kept in a separate account. The account was opened. The unexpended balance of the standpipe moneys was ascertained. It amounted to about $6,300. This sum was placed to the credit of the standpipe, but was not deducted from the water account. Thus, the water department appeared tohave $6,300 more money than it actually had.

The department spent the amount of money it appeared to have. It, therefore, is apparent that it used about $6,300 belonging elsewhere.

The money so used was money received for payment on the sum borrowed for paving. It should have been paid there on. We find these certificates of indebtedness in the hands of the banks drawing interest at 6 per cent and we, of course, lack $6,300 of enough to pay them. We find no money in the water fund. Every cent of water rent is necessary for the current expenses of the water department. It is impossible for the water department (owing to its exhausted condition) to restore this money which it has improperly used.

We must pay these notes of the city. The banks will not permit them to run indefinitely. We are paying 6 per cent for the money and we can borrow it on bonds at about 4 per cent.

The $6,000, therefore, is to pay the certificates of indebtedness. It replaces the money improperly converted to the water department. Otherwise, the city will be sued and considerable cost made. The only remedy for such conditions is to have a competent, efficient and high grade City Chamberlain, independent of politics and to keep him year in and year out.

The present administration considers that it is its duty and pleasure to constantly and frankly inform the public as to the affairs of the city. It will engage in no acrimonious or unprofitable arguments or discussions. It feels that it has and reserves the confidence of the people of the city. It will be ready and willing at all times to exhibit and state the facts in relation to all city matters. It wants all citizens to feel free to come to the officials and make inquiries and offer suggestions. It feels, however that all inquiries should be made in good faith and in proper public spirit for the interests of the city and all newspaper inquiries should be signed or editorial.

Dated, March 1st, 1916.

(Signed), Victor C. Lewis, Mayor; Herbert W. Adkins, City Chamberlain; Wm. S. Hillick, City Attorney.

HOME MUSIC

The Fulton Symphony Orchestra will make its bow to the public on March 7th, and it behooves every person who believes in good things for Fulton to get a ticket at once. When the first note is struck every seat in the theater should be taken.

While there may be a few local people who doubt that the organization of a symphony orchestra composed of local talent can be of any especial assistance to our city, it is because they have not thought. Lots of people don't think along any particular line, so this should prove no exception. However, to all wholesome, living people music is a force, a factor in life itself. Home music strengthens home times. The person who has never been one of the group that gathered 'round the old piano at home and sung the old songs in the candle light has missed a big unnamed something in his life. He is to be pitied if he doesn't understand—not censured.

And so, it is certain that the love of music is responsible for most of the joys of life. It can never have charged up to it any of the sorrows of life. Even the saddest music while it may make us gulp, is good for us. As to the patriotic music often brings tears to our eyes, but the tears are not those of sorrow. The music in the home wells over loyalty—and Fulton's our home, you know.

Music softens us—makes us more human—better men and women. Who of us would be without it? Everyhome is much better off to have music of some kind inside of it. Every community becomes better because of an organization of musicians. It establishes a relationship between members of a community as well as between members of the household that would not exist otherwise. The family that loves music is generally a happy family—and may this not apply to the Family of Fulton?

The Chamber of Comme rce is to be commended in its good work, and every music lover, every home-town booster, and would-be-helper should buy a ticket. Also every pessimist growler, grouch, and knocker in the town should especially plan to attend the concert. No one can tell what miracle might overtake them.

Remember the date, March 7. Buy your ticket early; if you don't you may have the S. R. O. sign confront you.

A few years ago the career of Porfirio Diaz, president of Mexico, was looked upon as a wonder, to be admired or otherwise, according to one's point of view. Dictator he was, but the term was softened by the addition of an adjective which takes the curse out of the terrible word—"Benevolent Dictator." The best to be said of him was that he kept order: the worst, perhaps, that he re-elected himself again and again and in governing his people so well and so fatherly failed to train them to govern themselves. No man can last forever, and no one man system built around a peculiar individual can move smoothly after that guiding hand is taken away. Another Diaz is impossible: a near Diaz might not be an improvement on the national fortunes of Mexico. If the Diaz rule did not debase the state, it did not prepare it to weather storms. Order must be restored, but in such a way that the best that is in the people politically shall have a chance to become a force.

Of late the New York Times has devoted space to discussions of the national guard in its relation to a reserve force to the regular army. In a recept editorial summary of the situation this paper said: "Obviously the Continental army plan should not be abandoned merely because the national guard disapproves of it. If the national guard can really be separated from state control, well and good. But if not there are thousands of loyal citizens in the guards who are also good soldiers. They have derived much benefit from the training of federal officers. They can resign from the guard and join the Continental army. They can help to make that body of really national militia an efficient military arm. State soldiers, permanently controlled by state governments, cannot be nationalized merely by the payment to them of money out of the army appropriations."

At a recent national trade convention the president of the Brazil Railway company surveyed trade conditions in South America in which the business men of this country are interested. He spoke of the products from South America which are consumed in the United States, as iron ore, nitrates, tin, copper and silver, rubber and meat. To trade for these products the United States has coal to furnish cargoes for steamers southward bound. This gentleman suggested that the situation in South America be closely studied by Americans with a view to developing new channels of trade.

Recent private advices from Italy on the inside tell of a sad state of things brought on by the war. Business is dead, and all sorts of activities languish. All the males between seventeen and forty-five are at the front, and those between forty-five and fifty are in arms at depots. Only old men, women and young boys are at home to do the work. And Italy has little to show for the sacrifice except on the side of loss.

The question of whether the people will approve of universal military training could best be equitably settled by a plebiscitum of men of military age who are physically fit. The burden must fall upon them. The race of Artemus Wards, ready to sacrifice all their first wife's relations on the altar of the country, is not yet dead.

At the rate the old world is killing off bone and sinew it looks as though American manhood would have to get into training to handle the pick and spade as in the days before the immigrant cornered the job.

On the good side of war it can be said that doctors are too busy tracking shell splinters and bullets to pester humanity with all sorts of germ scares.

The hopes of the Chinese should feel an uplift in Wilson's pronouncement that the United States will champion freedom throughout the world.

GREECE TRANSFERRING MONEY FROM LONDON TO AMERICA

Millions Have Been Removed From Banks In British Empire.

The government of Greece is quietly but steadily transferring its funds from London to New York. According to estimates by bankers whose institutions are depositories for Greek funds, an excess of $73,000,000 has found its way to this country from London for Greek account since Greece failed to aid Servia when that country was attacked by Germany, Austria and Bulgaria. While bankers state that this movement on the part of Greece does not necessarily mean that she intends going to war with Great Britain or severing diplomatic relations with any of the entente allies, it is taken as a precautionary move by King Constantine's government in case a break should come.

London always had been a favorite depository for Greek funds, owing to the fact that Greece did a large part of her borrowing in Great Britain. London, too, was the center of the international money market, and having funds on deposit there made it easier to make payments in other parts of the world. When the concerted attack of the three Teutonic allies began on Servia bankers in New York noticed an increase in the amount of Greek funds being transferred to this market. When British and French troops seized Salonlki the transfers of Greek government funds to the United States were augmented largely.

The transfers of Greek funds to New York do not mean that Greece is shipping gold. She is disposing of sterling credits which she has in London by selling them in New York. The proceeds received from the sale of these credits are then turned into dollars and deposited in banks. Greece has recently been increasing the number of her depositing banks in this country in order to distribute the funds she is storing.

The Strange Case of MARY PAGE

The Great McClure Mystery Story, Written by FREDERICK LEWIS In Collaboration With JOHN T. M'INTYRE, Author of the Ashton Kirk Detective Stories. *Read the Story and See the Essanay Moving Pictures

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Publication

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of James Pollock and is defended by her lover, Philip Langdon. Pollock was intoxicated. Shale, a crook and tool of Pollock, was on the fire escape watching for Langdon. At Mary's trial she admits she had the revolver. Her maid testifies that Mary threatened Pollock with it previously, and Mary's leading man implicates Langdon.

"MY TIME WILL COME!"

"KEEP your eye on this man Langdon! He was either in the room or at the door when James Pollock was murdered!"

The words of the witness were like a stone flung into a pool of subtle inference that sent ever-widening ripples of possibilities to lap the very shores of suspicion itself. Every eye was on Langdon now, but except for a tightening of the muscles about his jaw he gave no sign of perturbation or anger.

The actor himself was uneasy now, however, and cast apologetic glances at both Mary and Langdon, moving nervously in the witness-stand as the prosecutor took up his questioning again.

"You say you overheard only a part of what was said before the police came. Will you tell us where you stood and why you heard only a part?"

"Yes, sir. The door opens out—as is always the case in hotel rooms—and when I started to open it I was behind it and therefore not visible from the room. But I could hear what was said when Mr. Langdon and detective Farley came out from the inner room of the suite where they had gone to look for Miss Page."

"And when the police came, did you remain in the room or did you join in the search for Miss Page?"

"I joined in the search, and went with the police down the fire-escape and through the back street."

"What had become of Miss Page?"

"I don't know."

"Do you mean that the police did not find where she had gone?"

"Yes."

"What did you do?"

"I returned to the hotel, got my hat and coat and went home."

"That is all," said the prosecutor. But the Judge leaned forward and voiced the question that everybody in the courtroom was mutely asking.

"Do you mean to say that a young lady in an evening gown and with no cloak walked through that street back of the hotel and that no one saw her! That you and the police got no clue in your search?"

"Yes, your Honor. Mary Page had disappeared absolutely, and no one knows where she went."

Langdon smiled, and the Judge sat back with a little exclamation that was not complimentary to the police; but when the name of the next witness rang through the room he leaned forward again and spoke with some irritation to the prosecutor.

"Is it your intention, sir, to develop through the testimony of THIS witness the whereabouts of Miss Page after the murder? It seems to me that that is the testimony that should be brought forward now."

"Your Honor, the movements of Miss Page between the time she was left unconscious in the room at the Republic until the following morning will have to be told by Miss Page herself. They are not known to me and I have no witnesses to testify to her whereabouts or actions. I have, in fact, been unable to get anyone who actually saw the prisoner during her flight. The truth must come out, of course, and I have in the meantime called the sister of James Pollock to develop an important line in the case for the State."

Again Langdon smiled, and the Judge sat back with a little shrug, as, amid a murmurous wave of comment and curiosity the name of the new witness was repeated:

"Ruth Pollock!"

The sister of the dead man who throughout the earlier testimony had sat unnoticed among the throng was a tragic figure in her trailing black garments as she went to the stand.

"Miss Pollock, you have known the prisoner, Mary Page, for some years, have you not?"

"Yes, we were at school together and remained intimate friends afterwards."

"Was your brother also a friend of hers?"

"He was."

"Was there ever any closer relationship than that of mere friendship between your brother and Mary Page?"

"Yes. They were engaged to be married."

Even the Judge sat forward in his chair at the words, so simply uttered and yet so sharply changing the aspect of things. The prosecutor's next question came quickly.

"Was your brother happy in his engagement?" he said.

"I don't know how to answer that question. He was happy because he wanted to marry Mary, but he knew she didn't love him."

"If Miss Page did not love your brother, why was she willing to be his wife?"

The girl flushed and answered less readily:

"Well, you see—there were reasons—and she had promised."

"Will you please tell us those reasons?"

A little gasping sob wrenched from a woman's overburdened heart broke the stillness at that question, and Mrs. Page suddenly drooped forward, hiding her face in her hands. She knew only too well what was coming, and the courage that had kept her erect and smiling during the torture of the trial, gave way suddenly at this tearing open of old wounds. All her agony found vent in that one piercing cry of grief.

With her own eyes tear-dimmed Mary stretched out her hands yearningly, half whispering, "Mother! Mother!" and Langdon was at her side in a moment. She waved him back, and, drawing her veil across her distorted face,

"Do you mean that the check was forged?"

smothered the sobs that shook her thin shoulders like a storm, as the prosecutor repeated his question.

"It all happened several years ago—five—maybe six. Mary and I were very good friends at that time, and I was at her home a great deal. So I knew that—that—they were greatly in need of money. I overheard Mr. Page say that there would be ruin for all of them, and that they'd be turned out on the streets unless he 'got the money' before morning. Mary overheard him, too, and when he went out she and I sat trying to think of some way by which we could raise money. It was while we were still talking that Mr. Page came back. He—he—had been drinking, and he was waving a check around his head and cried, 'I've done a good turn for a friend and I've been well paid for it. The Lord helps those who help themselves.' He seemed terribly excited, and went out again almost immediately saying that he wanted to cash the check before the banks closed."

"Whose check was it?"

"My brother's."

"Was he interested in Miss Page at that time?"

"Yes. He had always been, I think, but she was not at all in love with him. She had told me that."

"Yet he gave her father a check for a large sum?"

"No." She flushed hotly now, and cast a timid glance at Mary, as if half deprecating the necessity of the testimony. "That was just it. My brother had not—signed that check."

"Do you mean," broke in the Judge, "that the check was forged?"

"Yes. A detective sent by the bank came to the Page home while I was there and told Mrs. Page and Mary and me. Mary didn't believe it at first, but at any rate she said she didn't know where her father was, though we both guessed he—he—was in the bar of the hotel. He was mostly there. James was horrified when he found out that it was Mary's father who had cashed the check because, not knowing, he had already told the police to 'prosecute the man to the limit.' Mary cried and begged him to do something to save her father, and James said, 'I'll save him for your sake, Mary, if you will promise to do something for me in return.'"

"Did he say what that something was?"

"No. She didn't even ask. She just said she would do anything in the world he wanted if he would save her father. So he went with us to the hotel and we got there just in time to save Mr. Page from arrest."

"How did you 'save him,' as you call it?"

"James told the detective that he had forgotten about giving the check to Mr. Page and that it was perfectly good."

"And Miss Page was naturally grateful to your brother for his having saved her father?" prompted the District Attorney, as Ruth broke off, not knowing how to go on.

"Grateful? Yes. She—she promised to marry him. I heard her tell Mr. Langdon."

"Was Mr. Langdon at the house at that time?"

"No, he came while I was sitting talking to Mrs. Page. Mary and James were in the next room, so I went to let Mr. Langdon in. He stopped at the gate, looking at my brother's automobile, and I walked down the path to meet him. While we were coming back toward the porch the others came to the door. Suddenly James caught Mary up in his arms and kissed her. She seemed to struggle against him and, slipping away, ran into the house. Mr. Langdon, thinking that my brother had kissed Mary against her will, rushed at him and threatened to strike him."

"Your Honor!" It was Langdon's voice, suddenly harsh and strained, "I protest against this evidence as entirely irrelevant and leading up to nothing that has a bearing upon the case at present."

"The court cannot sustain your objection," said the Judge, curtly. "It is very unfortunate for you, Mr. Langdon, but whatever brings out the details of the relationship between Mary Page and James Pollock is decidedly relevant."

The District Attorney smiled in triumph. He turned to Ruth, who looked startled at the interruption, and said, gently:

"You were saying, Miss Pollock, that Mr. Langdon threatened your brother. Was there a fight?"

"No. Mary ran between them and said that James had a right to kiss her, that—that—they were engaged."

"What did Mr. Langdon say then?"

"He didn't say anything. He just turned around and walked away, and Mary began to cry."

"Was the engagement of your brother and Miss Page made public?"

"Yes. At a dance."

"Did your brother and his fiancee seem happy on that occasion?"

"No. I—In fact, I know they were not."

"Did they tell you so?"

"No, but I overheard. I—was hiding in the conservatory."

With a smothered gasp of surprise Mary's head came up suddenly and for the first time the eyes of the two girls met; but now it was Mary's that were accusatory and Ruth's that were troubled and it was in answer to that reproach, rather than the startled look on the prosecutor's face, that made Ruth add shyly: "It was all just in fun! I had promised a dance to Mr. Brandon, but I had told him that if he could find me before the music was half over, I would give him two more, for I had discovered a nook behind the palms which I was sure no one else could find."

She stammered over the girlish confession, a tide of crimson dyeing her pale cheeks.

"While I was hidden there, Mary and Mr. Langdon, who had been dancing together, came into the conservatory. I—I—didn't move because I felt I should look so silly, hiding like a kid behind the palms, and I thought they would soon go away. But—they didn't."

"Did Miss Page say anything about her engagement?"

"They were talking about it as they came in, and the first thing I heard was, 'I have given my word, Philip, and I must go through with it—even if it kills me.' She was half crying. Then Mr. Langdon said quietly, 'Mary, you don't love him, do you?' And Mary said, 'You know I don't, Philip. There is only one man in the world that I love.' Then he took her in his arms and she broke down and sobbed; but when he tried to make her say she would break her engagement she wouldn't, and she wouldn't tell him why she had promised to marry James. She only said that she could never be free unless James gave her back her promise."

"Do you mean to say," interrupted the judge, "that Mr. Langdon knew nothing of the episode of the forged check?"

"No. Mary told me she couldn't bear to tell him about her father. Besides, James had made her promise to keep that part of their engagement a secret from everyone."

"It seems incredible!" said His Honor, settling back, and the prosecutor asked, as if suddenly seeing a new viewpoint:

"Did your brother know of Miss Page's love for Mr. Langdon?"

"I don't know whether he knew then or not, but he knew later because Mr. Langdon told him. While I was still back of the palms James came to hunt for Mary, and she didn't want him to see she had been crying, so she went out and Mr. Langdon stood waiting for James. He told my brother that Mary was very unhappy in her engagement, but felt that she was in honor bound to 'go through with it', and he urged James to set her free."

"What did your brother say?"

"Well, he was—very angry," she answered, deprecatingly. "I—I—know he thought it was just interference, and he said, 'I suppose you want her set free so YOU can marry her.' And Mr. Langdon said, 'I want her set free because she doesn't love you and is breaking her heart over her promise to marry you.' 'What is that to you?' asked James. 'Do you think she is in love with you?' And Mr. Langdon said angrily, 'I know she is, but that has nothing to do with the matter. Can't you be decent for once and set a girl free when she doesn't want to marry you?' That made James even more furious, and he fairly shouted, 'Mary will learn to love me fast enough, once we're married, and I shall never set her free. She has promised and I'm going to see that she keeps that promise. Besides, do you think I'm going to let everybody say she jilted me, after we've announced our engagement this way? I should say not.'"

"Did Mr. Langdon reply?"

"No. He just turned round with a shrug and walked away, and I came out and joined my brother."

"Did he ask if you had overheard?"

"Yes."

"Did you tell him of the conversation between Miss Page and Mr. Langdon?"

"Yes. I felt that he ought to know. You—you see, he was my brother, even though Mary was my friend."

"Did your brother make any comment?"

"No, he just flushed up a little: then he laughed and said they'd have to get over it, and he was going to marry Mary anyway."

"Did Mr. Langdon ever make any other plea to your brother, or see Miss Page again?"

"Not then, but Mr. Brandon told me—"

"Your Honor!" broke in Langdon, leaping to his feet. "I object!"

"The court will sustain that objection," said the Judge, promptly. "Miss Pollock, you must not repeat what you have simply heard from others, only what you saw and heard yourself."

"May it please the court," cried the prosecutor, quickly, "I shall be glad to have all of the answer of the witness with the exception of the words 'but then' stricken out, for what Mr. Brandon said he will tell the court himself."

Brandon! Langdon winced at the name, and Mary, lifting her head, turned a pair of despairing eyes upon him that seemed to ask if all their friends were to be leagued against them in this fight for life and liberty.

He could object—could fight to have the witness kept out of the stand—but in the end he knew that he would lose and perhaps lend added weight to the testimony. He fancied he knew what THAT would be, and his teeth clenched in an agony of longing and a rage against the futility of that desire to spare Mary the raking up of these old memories—memories that brought a throbbing ache to his own heart that was only balanced by the bitter exultation of the thought that at least Pollock was DEAD now. And he vowed to himself that Mary should soon be free of the law as well as of James; but he did not face the fleeting thought of the price that might have to be paid for that freedom of Mary Page.

As for Mary herself, after that one fleeting glance at Langdon she drooped again like a flower cut off from rain and sunlight and air.

She would not look at Brandon when he took the stand, though his eyes as he glanced from her to Langdon were full of mute appeal as if he wanted somehow to explain that it was not by choice that he stood there; and there was an aggressive, almost a hostile note in his voice, as he answered the prosecutor's first inclusive question:

Mary Turned a Pair of Despairing Eyes Upon Him.

"Mr. Brandon, you were present, were you not, on the night of the dance given to announce the engagement of Miss Page to James Pollock?"

"I was."

"You were well acquainted with both of them?"

"We all grew up together. I was not particularly intimate with Mr. Pollock," said Brandon drily.

"Did anything occur to lead you to believe that Miss Page was not happy in her engagement?"

"Yes."

"Will you tell us what that occurrence was?"

MAY CHANGE STYLE OF THERMOMETERS

Scientists Interested in Plan to Adopt Centigrade Instrument

BASED ON DECIMAL SYSTEM

Freezing Point of Water, Which Is 32 Under the Fahrenheit Scale, Is Zero Under the Centigrade Standard—Bill Already Introduced In Congress and Campaign For Adoption Is On.

Shall the use of the Fahrenheit thermometer be discontinued in all government scientific departments throughout the United States? That is a question being seriously considered by leading scientific men in all sections of the nation, according to the Boston Herald, their opinions and advice having been asked by Congressman Albert Johnson of Washington, the author of a bill that would banish the thermometer now in use for government work and practically universally by the average citizen.

Though Congressman Johnson's literature does not state what thermometer he would substitute for the Fahrenheit, the centigrade is referred to by him as being widely in use already among scientific men in some government departments other than the weather bureau.

The centigrade, being based on the decimal system, is regarded as having the same advantage over the Fahrenheit that the American system of coinage, involving cents, dimes and dollars, has over the more ancient English system of pounds, shillings and pence.

The Fahrenheit thermometer, which has been in common use in this country for generations, was invented about 1714 by Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit of Amsterdam. Previous to that date thermometers had been very crude affairs.

The Principal Differences.

The centigrade thermometer, invented later and still widely used in Europe, differs from the Fahrenheit in having the zero at the point marked 32, or freezing, on the Fahrenheit. The centigrade is divided into 100 degrees between its zero and the water boiling point, which, according to Fahrenheit, is 212 degrees. In other words, the 180 degrees intervening between freezing and boiling on the Fahrenheit are reduced to 100 degrees on the centigrade.

The American Association For the Advancement of Science, having a membership of 9,000, is credited with being in favor of the change. Nevertheless the father of the bill has appealed to many other scientific societies in order to avoid the charge that the measure was rushed through congress. Dr. S. W. Stratton, director of the national bureau of standards, is at the head of a committee of scientists furthering the bill.

The bill providing for the change was introduced in congress Dec. 6 last, but no definite action has yet been taken by congress on it. Mr. Johnson's appeal to scientific men for support in his undertaking was made last month. He claims that the Fahrenheit thermometric scale is irrational and inconvenient and a nuisance and that the only question is as to how soon it should be abolished.

He thinks that perhaps his bill should be amended to postpone the abolition ten or fifteen years, but that "we should ill deserve our reputation as a progressive nation if some date is not set before long."

Would Lead to Inconveniences.

He says that, while the change to some other thermometer will be attended by considerable inconvenience, delay will increase rather than lessen the disadvantage and will "add to the ridicule that we have already earned by clinging so long to the worst thermometric scale and one that is bound to be abandoned in the near future." Referring to the repeated recommendations by the pan-American scientific congress to "the establishment of the pan-American meteorological service," he declares that the first requisite will be the abandonment of the Fahrenheit scale.

As proof that the government departments already have power to make the change, he cites the fact that in publications intended for scientists many bureaus already use the centigrade thermometric scale exclusively. He fears, however, that serious criticism would arise if publications for the general public were to use any but the Fahrenheit scale without any express mandate from congress, and he thinks that congress will not act except in response to an unmistakable demand by the scientific world.

Mr. Johnson urges that no person interested in the question excuse himself from advocating the change on the plea that "others will push the bill." Steps have been taken to form local committees in various sections of the country, to be merged in a national organization, the object of which shall be to enlist the co-operation of every organization and individual calculated to appreciate the advantage of the change and to exert influence on individual congressmen.

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3⅛-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83-B five-passenger touring car $695; the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Is It Merely Indigestion?

It's queer about life. We like to talk about its large issues. But most of them, when reduced to their lowest terms, are extremely simple.

An old minister's wife never used to hear her husband preach an especially accusing or intolerant sermon without wondering what she had been giving him to eat that did not agree with him. For she had learned by experience that even the color of his theology was affected by his digestion.

A prominent citizen admits that for years life looked like a dreary desert and a barren waste to him until one day a doctor exclaimed, "Why, man, do you realize that you are going about this earth without a particle of hydrochloric acid in your system?"

The full significance of this highly important fact had never before pierced the outer rim of his consciousness, but he learned then that to most humans a certain proportion of this acid is essential to digestion. "And," he went on to say, "after a few weeks I felt like going around preaching the gospel of ten drops of dilute hydrochloric acid in a glass of water after meals to all of suffering humanity." It was all so perfectly simple and so almost ridiculous to know that so much of the value of life itself could turn on so small a matter as ten little drops of fluid with your food.

It's the old story of the horseshoe nail. For the want of a nail a kingdom was lost, and there are more trifling little nails missing in every day life than we imagine. And this is not by way of urging us to brood over our ills, but to examine them sufficiently to find out how simple some of them are.

Perhaps it isn't a matter of ten drops of anything that will make this world a fairer place for you. Perhaps it is a simple little pair of reading glasses that will remove your eye strain and eliminate your headaches and sweeten your disposition. Perhaps it is nothing but a foolish little corn that is pressing on a nerve and making you think you are going to be laid up for life with rheumatism or paralysis or what not. But if it is a small thing on which much of comfort and health depends, how foolish not to take the trouble to set it right.

For, after all, it takes more than sentiment to live well and happily. It takes common sense and as much decent interest in the care of the machine you live with, which is your own body, as you would bestow upon your dollar watch or your typewriter, not to mention your sewing machine or your automobile.

Children's coats have as much tailoring and detail lavished on them as do big ones. This tot's is cut of gaberdine, with a double row of novelty buttons. The yoke is corded, as are the cuffs, and interesting little patches of smocking fill spaces. The coat takes a little white straw and satin bonnet trimmed with pink rosebuds.

A CORRECT COAT.

Tartare Sauce.

Materials.—Two small cucumber pickles, three olives, one teaspoonful capers, one tablespoonful chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful chopped chives or a few drops of onion juice and one cupful of mayonnaise.

Directions.—Chop all of the ingredients very finely, unless onion juice is used in place of the olives, in which event grate this from the whole onion on a coarse grater. Blend with the mayonnaise and set aside to become thoroughly chilled before using.

Fresh Meat Griddlecakes.

Chop bits of cold cooked fresh beef, veal, etc., and season with salt and pepper. Make a griddlecake batter and lay a spoonful of it (batter) on a heated and well buttered iron spider; on the placed batter a spoonful of the chopped meat, then a spoonful of batter over the meat. When cooked sufficiently on one side turn, and when sufficiently done (well enough cooked) carry to table to be served while still hot.

STAND BY YOUR TOWN

If you think your town's the best
Tell them so!
If you'd have her lead the rest
Help her gro'.
When there's anything to do
Let the fellows count on you
You'll feel bully when it's through;
Don't you know.
If you want to make a hit
Get a name,
If the other fellow's it
Who's to blame.
Spend your money in your town,
Thusly keep the prices down;
Give the mail concerns a frown—
That's the game;
If you're used to giving knocks,
Change your style;
Throw bouquets instead of rocks,
For awhile;
Let the other fellow roast,
Shun him as you would a ghost,
Meet him manner with a boast
And a smile.
When a stranger from afar,
Comes along;
Tell him who and what we are —
Make it strong,
Needn't flatter, never bluff,
Tell the truth for that's enough,
Join the boosters—they're the stuff,
We belong.

Confidence is a necessary part of every sale. The buyer must have confidence in the seller, or he must have confidence in himself to judge for himself of the merit of the goods he is purchasing. Few of us can have the knowledge of all articles of trade to have confidence in himself as a judge of their worth. We must take the other fellow's word for it. All things being equal, it is easier to have confidence in the man we know, and the man who lives in Fulton can not persistently deceive his customers. He must have our confidence. It is his own interest to win our confidence. He will do everything he can to win it and to hold it when won. He must stand behind the goods he gives in exchange for our money. You know him—we all know him—you can trust him; we all trust him. Buy in Fulton and you guarantee yourself satisfaction.

Ashes Should Be Free From Garbage and Other Refuse, Declares Member of Board of Health

An interesting meeting of the Board of Health was held in the City Hall last night, resulting in a number of changes in the local laws governing and selling of milk, examinations of milk and cream, collection and dumping of garbage and ashes, and an investigation of flood conditions in the "flats."

After lively discussion on bacteria, bacili, and other points connected with the city distribution of milk and cream, in which a number of the producers and peddlers argued the points with the members of the Board of Health, several resolutions were introduced and passed governing tests of dairy products. Dairies will be subjected to a physicial as well as tuberculin test once every six months.

All milk must be put to a bacteriological test once a month, the samples to be taken directly from the wagon. With reference to this provision, Dr. Hall, health officer, read a communication from Dr. F. W. Sears, State Sanitary Supervisor, recommended that the samples of milk be consigned to Syracuse University for the analysis, for which work there would be a small fee charged. The Board passed a resolution authorizing Dr. Hall to spend a sum not exceeding ten dollars a month for the purpose of seeing that this ruling is carried out. One of the milk producers distributing within the city said he did not think it necessary to have tests made at Syracuse, but that samples be sent to the State Agricultural stations at Ithaca or Geneva where analysis would be made gratis, addin gthat the money saved might be applied to the purchase of a city testing equipment.

Higher Fees Coming

Pastetrization of milk was suggested by a dealer who asked the board to permit sale in the city. No action was taken. City official said today that in all probability the sale of pasteurized milk and cream will be permitted under certain conditions soon.

As a protection against milk dealers and grocers who compete with the regular milk venders by lowering prices, the Board voted to increase the license fee from $1 to $15 annually. This will make it necessary for a grocer to take out the $15 license if he delivers milk to customers, but he can operate on the $1 fee if no delivery is made.

George W. Hackett, engineer, appeared in behalf of a property owner to ask the city to remedy conditions in 5th st., between Ontario and Harrison, natural water shed exists there and cellars of certain houses become flooded. A property owner in that locality has been served by the health officer with a summons to improve the sanitary conditions surrounding the property.

Mr. Hackett in asking for the city's cooperation precipitated a lively discussion, during which insinuations were made that discrmination was practiced in serving the summons. It was stated that in a certain block downtown ten families are permitted to use one toilet. Mr. Hackett said there are any number of residences on the "flats" whose owners maintain unsanitary conditions. Most of them are located in streets where sewers exist.

City Free from Diphtheria

Joseph Donovan, plumbing inspector, who had been assigned to make an examination of the premises, reported that he does not believe anything could be done toward improving conditions until Spring. Accordingly the board voted to permit Mr. Hackett's client to have until April 20th to place his property in proper condition.

Dr. Hall's monthly report showed that while there are at present no diphtheria cases within the city. He recommended that the standard should not be lowered in its relation to tubercular and physical examination of cows.

It develops that only a small fraction of the daily collection of garbage and ashes is deposited on the city dumping ground. Dr. Hall stating that this subject has been thoroughly investigated in the last few weeks. He said that certain corrections must be made immediately to safeguard public health. It is the practice of collectors, Dr. Hall stated, to carry refuse to vacant lots, instead of depositing it on the plot designated by the city.

The health officer recommended that wagons used to collect

President's Policies Indorsed by "Big 4"

The features of the Democratis unofficial State convention held in Syracuse yesterday were the harmony which prevailed and the keynote speech of ex-Governor Glynn.

The folloiwng will head the New York State delegation to the St. Louis Democratic national convention.

Delegates at large—United States Senator James A. O'Gorman of Manhattan, Democratic State Chairman William Church Osborn, Jutnam; George J. Meyer, Buffalo; Samuel Untermyer, New York.

Alterniates at large—John J. Kuhn, Brooklyn; ex-Lieut. Gov. Thomas F. Conway, Clinton; Mayor Cornelius F. Burns, Troy; F. L. Crocker, Nassau.

The platform practically instructs the delegates for President Wilson, declaring:

"We heartily indorse Woodrow Wilson as a President.

"We believe that the best interests of all the people demand his continuance in his high office.

"We unhesitatingly recommend the renomination of Woodrow Wilson for President of the United States."

The convention ordered the printing of 1,000,000 copies of Glynn's speech to be distributed among New York State voters, with a view of refuting the "keynonte" speech of ex-Senator Elihu Root delivered at the recent Republican State convention.

The selection of the delegates at large and the platform were the unanimous work of the delegates. There was not a ripple in the harmony prevailing, which even exceeded that of the convention which nominated John A. Dix for Governor in 1910.

German Drive Begins South of Verdun

Paris—The lull in the fighting north of Verdun continues. There was no infantry action last night or today in the district east of the fortress, to which the Germans transferred their efforts on Monday and Tuesday. Comparative calm prevails all about the fortress and in the Woevre district. The German artillery resumed action today against the French lines between Malancourt and Forges, northwest of Verdun; in the regions of Vaux and Damloup, northeast of Verdun, and about Fresnes.

The district west oof Pont-a-Mousson has became a centre of interest as a result of German activity in this region. In the communique issued this afternoon the War Office announced that the French artillery had directed its fire against the second and third German lines in this section, where it appeared that preparatory evolutions were in progress. It is recalled that the Germans held a sort of manoeuvre rehearsal under the eyes of the Kaiser before launching the attack on Verdun from then orth. Because of this importance is given to the evidences of such preparation in the district west of Pont-a-Mousson, which is thirty-seven miles south of Verdun.

The centre of the activity in this region is the line between Regnieville, on the Thiaucourt road, and Remenauville, between this road and theroad from Pont-a-Mousson to Flirey. The official communique issued tonight tells also of the activity of French trench cannon in the Bois-le-Pretre, between this line and Pont-a-Mousson.

HOOSIER STATE MAN WORKS IN RHYME

Crawfordsville, Ind.—James B. Elmore, known for miles around as the Bard of Alamo, recently announced that he would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination as representative from Montgomery county. A newspaper reporter, in making mention of the bard's candidacy in his paper, wrote five lines of an appropriate poem foor the occasion and then gave it up as an impossible task, with the statement that the bared could complete the poem if he so desiredd. The reporter wrote:

Voters, I'm a candidate
For to represent the State
In the Legislature;
I who penned the Monon wreck
Should command the deep respect

When Elmore read the announcement he laid aside his farm work for a few minutes and took up his pen, with the following result:

Voters, I'm a candidate
For to represent the State
In the Legislature;
I who penned the Monon wreck
Should command the deep respect
Of each voting creature.

Now the guy that wrote the lay,
May he live for many a day,
In verse sing sweetly;
For his scope is seems so vast
It will surely ever last
In substance completely.

Let him onward move with care,
Climbing up the golden stair
Of Mount Parnassus.
He will shine in peace and love
From the satelites above
Giving light unto us.

COLUMBIA EDITORS TO FACE EXPULSION

New York—Some Columbia University students promise to issue a new radical magazine which will outdo the Challenge, which startled the campus last week. It will be named Dynamite, which is said to be indicative of its nature.

The first issue will be disturbed on Friday. Meantime the names of the editors are kept secret, but no girls are among them. Among the articles promised are ones entitled 'Graft among Professors" and "Immorality at Co-educational Colleges." A third will be a frank discussion of birth control. It is said that some of the editors are prepared to face expulsion.

BITUMINOUS MINERS AND MINIMUM INCREASE

New York—The representatives of the bituminous coal miners who have been conferring with operators respecting a wage increase and labor conditions in the mines delivered an ultimatum to the operators last night. The ysaid that the minimum wage increase acceptable to them would be three cents a ton increase in ndiana, Illinois and Ohio and six cents a ton increase in western Pennsylvania. Payment must be on a nine run basis.

The minimum wage increase acceptable was submitted at the request of the operators. It is somewhat less than the original demand, which would have meant a 10 per cent. increase over the average wages now being paid.

STEEL PRICES SOAR

The announcement coming from Pittsburgh that consumers must pay $5 a ton more for steel should be reflected in the faces of the persons who are interested in bringing to Fulton the new steel die castings plant.

According to the news dispatches the sold-up condition of the steel and iron market applies on nearly all lines of finished steel, and is one of the most sweeping in the history of the industry. Another pleasing feature is the prediction that the heavy consumption will continue throughout the year—at the higher rate—which is of course due to the general belief that peace in Europe is yet afar off.

In the event that the new company locates here the enormous jump in price of steel should prove a blessing of unusual proportions, as it has been stated by those who are interesting themselves in securing the plant that the raw material entering into the manufactured product can be brought to Fulton from Syracuse and other nearby points, where much of it is being made, at the Pittsburgh price less the freight to thhe last-named place. It seems that at present shippers of steel scrap are sending the material into the Pennsylvania city, paying the freight on a long haul, and they would be glad naturally, to find a near-at-home market.

JUSTICE SHEARN'S DECISION

The change in the status of a wife and mother as it relates to her husband and child since the comparatively dark ages of seventy-five years ago is illustrated by a decision handed down by Justice Shearn of the Supreme Court of New York. The famous decision in the Morcein case ratified by the courts of this State in 1842 was to the effect that a woman's legal existence was suspended during marriage, her entity consolidated into that of her husband. It was held further that a husband could not make a legal agreement with his wife because she had under the law no existence apart from him.

Justice Shearn emphasized the fact that what was sound law in 1842 has no binding force today, as the status of a wife in the eyes of the law has changed radically. In forceful language he asserts that we have 'emerged from the Dark Ages when women were the same as chattels and slaves." He further says that "it is not to be believed that any enlightened court would subscribe to the statement that the very being or legal existence of a woman is suspended during marriage."

For men the Dark Ages practically came to an end at the time of the Reformation. For women they have persisted until a few years ago. The millennium will be appreciably nearer to the race when in all lands full justice becomes the prerogative of woman as well as of man.—N. Y. Sun.

POVERTY AND GENIUS

(By H. Addington Bruce.)

The best organized society is a society to which wealth is so distributed that the mass of the people live in comfortable circumstances. The worst organized is a society in which there are glaring inequalities of wealth, with the mass of people struggling for existence under a crushing burden of poverty.

Such a society is badly organized for several reasons. For one thing, it is badly organized because most of its members are debarred from making anything like full use of their intellectual abilities.

This statement, I am aware, is likely to be challenged. There is a widely held motion that natural ability will reveal itself whatever the circumstances of life. "You can't keep a good man down" is a popular phrase expressive of this theory.

Yet it is easy to demonstrate that such a theory is fallacious, and that extremes of wealth and poverty have a distinctly limiting effect on natural abilitq. Particularly deadening is the effect of poverty.

If this were not so, we should expect to find that most of the men who have attained eminence have come from poor homes. For it is unfortunately true that poverty is the lot of most of the world's inhabitants.

But the fact is that, as proved by careful statistical inquiry, comparatively few eminent men have been born and reared in poverty. They have not come from homes of extreme wealth. But they have come, as a rule, from homes where the pinch of want is not acutely felt.

Only in the fields of literature and art are numerous exceptions to this rule found. In every other field where achievements means lasting fame—this excludes, of course, mere money making achievement—the sons of the poor are less conspicuously rrepresented than the sons of the fairrly well-to-do.

If you wish to do so, you can verify this for yourself by going through any standard dictionary of biogrraphy and noting the early history of the eminent men and women whose lives it details. You will then have ample proof that poverty has indeed a swamping effect on genius.

The trouble is not the son of the very poor man is born with less natural ability than the son of the well to do. It is, rather, that the latter enjoys an environment and an education suitable to the development of natural ability, and unusally lacking in the case of the very poor man's son.

Heredity, let us always remember, is not all powerful. Its effects, good or bad, can be fully realized only in an environment appropriate to bring them out. And inherited natural ability, like any other kind of inherited kuality, needs a suitable environment to bring it to full growth.

From all of which it would seem to follow that in proportion as inequality of wealth is lessened, in proportion as we develop a social organization having fewer millionaires and fewer victims of poverty, we shall have more men who really achieve.

This I firmly believe to be the case.

THE TRUTH

No reputable newspaper would deliberately falsify. The newspaper is not infallibly inspired; it is compiled by human agencies. But there are a great many persons who do not appreciate an effort at impartial presentation. They demand violent partisanship. The newspaper must do the best it can to sift truth from error, relying on the sources that are worthiest of credence. Even an eyewitness is not omniscient or omnipresent. As far as an official censorship is concerned, governments are learning the lesson "big business' learned some time ago, that it does not pay to hide what the public is entitled to know. Rumor will distort and discolor the verities more readily than any benumbed editorial conscience. To try to suppress the truth, that is sure some day to leak out, is to put a premium upon inaccuracy and illicit evasion.—Philadelphia Public Ledger

WHERE MONEY IS BEING MADE

The dividend compilations for March by The Journal of Commerce show that much money is being made and where. The total is $74,227,504, or $18,346,368 above the corresponding quarter last year. Street railways show a slight gain. Railways also fail to show adequate sympathy with the increase of industrial dividends from $30,590,131 last year to $48,183,818 this year, or nearly the total gain for all departments covered. Looking further, to find where money is moving most freely, it is seen that the flow of profits is found where prices are highest, that is, in the metal trades. Copper and steel are near the highest known. The dividends in those trades are but a fraction of the earnings, which are reckoned in scores per cent. Great as has been the advance in their shares, the inflation is less than in the commodity markets. In some of the materials of industry the advances are in hundreds per cent., in some cases even in thousand per cent. increases.

It is gratifying to remark that few heads are being turned by the conditions which stand it. The flood of imcome is neither being disbursed in dividends nor immobilized in constructing an excess of productive capacity. Debts are being paid and surplus piled up in a manner exemplified by the Steel Corporation's pur chase of a score of millions of its own mortgage bonds for its sinking funds. That will have the effect of a dividend guarantee fund when times are duller, even better than a large surplus of idle cash.

Steam and street railways do not offer the attractions of the industrial class to those seeking large returns. Perhaps the regulators may see the expediency of allowing larger earnings for the railways. Otherwise the billions of railway share capital will fall into the class of mortgage capital which looks for certain and moderate income rather than for great gains. In trat case the country must make up its mind to forego hereafter large railway construction, the greatest single source hitherto of profits to farmers and abundance of consumers of agricultural products. Then increase in farm values will be more moderate.—N. Y. Times.

FELIX DIAZ —IS HE A JOKE?

Felix Diaz counts upon the magic of his name to call militant spirits from the vastly deep of Mexico's troubled waters. But will they come? Somebody must think they will, somebody else than Felix himself, or there would be no serious attempt to start a Diaz revolution against Carranza, and this one bears external evidence of being serious.

Perhaps the time is well chosen. It is known that Carranza is growing steadily but certainly weaker. The men closest to him are looking for a rising sun, and, what is more important in giving insight into conditions, are talking about one. The First Chief has done everything in his power to cripple General Obregon and has pretty well succeeded, but Obregon is "watchfully waiting". his chance. It is only a question of time when the man who made possible Carranza's success over Villa is found arrayed against the man he made.

The United States has recognized Venustiano Carranza as Provisional President, but he has carefully avoided proclaiming himself Provisional President. The United States has recognized a Carranza government when there is no Carranza government and no real pretense of one. There is just the one man, Carranza —and he has no money.

The Diaz movement may prove something very much more substantial than the joke it at first blush seemed to be. — N. Y. Herald.

TALKS ON THRIFT

THRIFT CAMPAIGN SERIES

No. 5.---MARY'S KITCHEN SINK

Mary is the wife of a country storekeeper. She keeps the house, takes care of the children, and helps wait on the store. She works hard—harder than her husband, and he works harder than he should.

Up to the present they have had few of the conveniences of life. Water came from a nearby spring, and the housework was done undet distressing conditions, owing to the greed of the landlord. He finally agreed to put in the improvements so necessary to human comfort, and Mary's life promised to become easier. The problem was where to put the kitchen sink.

Now Mary had a favorite rocking chair that had a mortgage on the corner. Next came the stove, then her kitchen cabinet. To put the sink in the corner would disturb the rocking chair, and that would never do. The stove and the cabinet could not be moved; therefore it was resolved, after much deliberation, to put the sink in an adjoining room, in a dark corner thirty feet from the stove. This, of course, meant miles of walking every day for Mary, but she could find no other way. But a kindly inclined friend, who could study a job, suggested moving the cabinet just one foot and putting the sink between the stove and the cabinet, where it belonged. It was a happy, rested woman.

Now, what is the moral of it all? Just this: Too many women walk too much on their jobs, which consists in getting the housework done in the shortest time and with the least expenditure of energy. Why should Mary—why should any woman—walk half a mile in getting dinner? A pan in one place, a pot in another, flour, sugar and salt in another. Back and forth, to and fro, and for what? Wearing out shoes, carpets and nerves, just because the kitchen sink has not been put in its place. It's a fine art to have things handy.

The thrifty workman studies his work to how he can cut it down, keeping tools in good condition, but near by.

A certain business man in New York cannot dictate a letter. He writes it out long hand, and has his stenographer copy it. His telephone is on the wall twenty feet from his desk, which is piled high with old letters and papers. He has to hunt to find things. He is wasting time, nerve force and patience, just because he cant's get his kitchen sink adjusted right.

The problem of all business—from running a home to running a railroad—is to cut out waste of time and material, to get kitchen sinks where they belong. Lost motion is costly, it racks the machine, human as well as inanimate. Mary would have carried her kettle from the stove to the sink in the dark corner a dozen times in washing the dishes. Now she doesn't carry it at all. She has solved her problem.

Your problem is the same in essence. Learn how to use the telephone, the typewriter, the carbon sheet. Learn where to keep your tools as well as how to keep them. Study short cuts. Elimate false steps. Do things the easiest (but the best) way. Save your strength for useful purposes. Study your job, whatever it be, for, whether it be big or little, it has the problem of Mary's kitchen sink, and lucky for you if you get it in the right place.—American Bankers Association.

MICHIGAN'S COWS MUST NOT GET DRUNK

Lansing, Mich.—Michigan's prohibition movement has reached the cows.

The propaganda in favor of total abstinence from alcoholic commodities among Holsteins andn Jerseys came to the office of the State Dairy and Food Commissioner in the form of a letter to Commissioner James Helme from a waman at Portland, Mtch. She informed the Commissioner that cows were becoming intoxicated from eating fermented ensilage, and that their milk was injurious to babies, in that it created a taste for alcohol. She asked that an order prohibiting farmers from feeding ensilage to cattle be issued.

Helme replied that heh ad been feeding ensilage to cattle for twenty-three years annd has yet to see a sow made drunk on it or milk which could honestly be said to be alcoholic as a result of ensilage food.

JERSEY DEMOCRATS HIT SUFFRAGISTS

Trenton, N. J.— Senator Hennessy's bill permitting women to vote for Presidential electors was adversely reported in the Senate today. Senator Hennessy succeeded in having the report laid over for the week. In the meantime suffragists will do missionary work among the Senators, though with small likelihood of success.

Mrs Williamson Greatly Surprised

"When my son Andrew was eight years old," writes Mrs. Richard Williamson of Boonville, N. Y., "he was subject to croup. As Chamberlain's Cough Remedy was so highly recommended we got a bottle of it for him and was greatly surprised at the prompt manner in which it gave relief. A few doses always affected a cure." This remedy can always be depended upon and is pleasant and safe to take.

TRIANGLE FEATURES TO BE INTRODUCED HERE

Triangle feature pictures, at present shown exclusively in Syracuse in The Strand Theatre, will be offered to the patrons of the Happy Hour theater, commencing Saturday. Manager J. Prowda announces that these features will be combined with the regular weekly program of Mutual masterpieces.

The Triangle pictures, starring such famous stage artists as Eddie Foy, Raymond Hitchcock and Dustin Farnum, will be seen at the Happy Hour each Saturday and Sunday. The companies included within the Triangle group are Keystone, Kay Bee, Fine Arts, and other high class producers.

Now that Charlie Chaplin, of funny feet fame, is to emerge from his seclusion to produce pictures which will be released through the Mutual, there is good reason for believing the funny comedian will again hold the limelight in this city when the first releases are made early this spring.

AN HONOR CONFERRED WHERE IT SURELY BELONGS

It is with a keen sense of appreciation of the action of the Senate that the many friends, political and otherwise, of H. Putnam Allen note his confirmation by that body yesterday as the manager of the St. Lawrence State hospital. While the news of the confirmation is not surprising as he has already served a term in the position, it is recognized as coming to a man well qualified for the position, and everybody is glad when merit is recognized at Albany.

THE QUIRK TODAY

Florence Burgess, a cafe singer, supports her lame sister, but keeps her struggle secret. A mission minister has the cafe closed, and Florence tricks a theatrical manager into signing a contract, is starred in a play and makes a big success. She meets while resting, the minister who closed the cafe. and they fall in love, he not knowing that she is an actress. He influences her to leave the stage, but the manager demands a big forfeit. She starts to bring her sister back from a sanatorium, the train is wrecked, the sister is killed, and is mistaken for the actress, who marries the minister, but plans to give him money which has come to her from her own will through her sisters death, for his mission.

The manager finds her, starts to denounce her to her husband, who stops him, there is a fight, the manager accidentally shoots himself, and with her husbands love safe. Florence, or rather Flo Burke, the actress feels that she has escoped from the labyrinth of difficulties in which she was almost lost.

Horace Webb Baggs' own vaudeville show today only.

Sour Stomach

TRADE BOOSTING MEETING FRIDAY

The determination reached by the business men of the city, in conjunc- prepare for an active season of trade recruiting, is receiving a lot of support. The first announcement of this nature came last Friday night when Mr. R. L. McCully made known to the Chamber of Commerce a desire to hold a meeting at an early date, the purpose being to discuss ways and means for securing better streets within the city and roads leading thereto. A meeting of the club has been called by President McCully, to be held in the Chamber of Commerce offices Friday evening of this week. It is desired that every member of the club shall be present.

COUNTY CLERK'S OFFICE GETS INCREASED REVENUE

The receipts of the County Clerk's office from the filing of papers during the month of February were $470.72. This is larger than the average for the month, although it has been exceeded. The receipts for mortgage tax are not included in the total as the count ygets no part of the tax. It is divided between the State and the tax districts in which the property is located.

Most Dangerous of Minor Ills

Well informed physicians regard a common cold as by far the most dangerous of the minor ills. The danger is not in the cold itself, but the serious diseases it so often leads to. That a cold can be cured easily and quickly has been abundantly proven. Mrs. S. K. Van Denburgh, Middleville, N. Y., says, "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for years and always found it a positive cure for colds and coughs."

BANK TO COOPERATE WITH UNIVERSITIES

New York—The success of the National City Bank's experience in taking college trained men into the bank for the purpose of training them for work in the foreign field that American business interests demand shall be conducted by Americans has led to the drawing up of a plan whereby the facilities of the National City Bank may be used in cooperating with the various universities of the country in fitting young men for the banking field.

This plan calls for a class to be made up of students recommended by universities, the members of which will be paid while they are working for and studying at the bank.

The class will be organized between June 15 and July 1, 1916, and will end about July 1, 1917.

Of the twenty young college graduates who were admitted to the National City Bank last August, organized into a class and put through a definite course of training, at least fifteen made good and may be counted on, the bank announces, for positions of trust. All of this was accomplished in six months and the bank officers say the class as a whole has justified the initial experiment.

SPENT FOUR YEARS WITH THE AFRICAN ZULUS

Miss Harriet Sheldon, who has Zulu tribes of Africa, will meet the public school children of the city at the Free Methodist church tomoorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

She promises to make her address short and very interesting and will exhibit many curios obtained in that faraway land, among which will be a python's skin, many ornaments and chairs used by natives. Miss Sheldon has acquired the Zulu language and she will speak and sing to the children in the strange tongue, illustrating the click of the Zulus. She will preach in the Free Methodist church tonight.

ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS OR GO TO THE BUGHOUSE

Test Used in New York on Prisoners Suspected of Being "Nuts."

"What is the difference between a fly and a butterfly?"

A fly is a baseball batted to a certain altitude. Buckwheat cakes make the butter fly.

That is one answer. But if you utter it to any police lieutenant of New York you will be conducted politely to the mental studio of Dr. Louis E. Bisch of Columbia university, official psychologist and alienist to the police department.

Dr. Bisch has given to every one of the 552 police lieutenants a list of questions a lieutenant must ask any person arraigned before him whose mental balance be doubts.

The doctor has also presented to every lieutenant a blackboard and ten simple problems, which are to be submitted to the subject who appears to be a "nut."

If the suspected person fails to answer most of the questions and problems—then turn to Dr. Bisch.

Here are some questions or commands the lieutenants are instructed to ask or deliver:

"What is a book?"
"What is a table?"
"What is a horse?"
"What day is this?"

Some highly intelligent persons could not answer that at 12:03 a. m.

"What is the difference between wood and glass?"

"What is the difference between paper and cloth?"

"Count backward from 20 to 1."

"Give me the days of the week, the month, the year."

"Repeat the numbers 64,982, 62,138, 487,159, 6,410,386."

"What ought one to do when one has missed a train?"

"What ought one to do when one has been struck by some one who did not do it on purpose?"

"What ought one to do when one has broken something that does not belong to him?"

"Why does one judge a person more by what he does than by what he says?"

"Make up a statement, using the words 'New York,' 'money' and 'river' and other words that may be necessary to form a complete thought."

"Give three words that rime with 'day,' with 'spring,' with 'ill.'"

Dr. Bisch has been at the lineup of prisoners in police headquarters every morning recently. He took the prisoners who appeared mentally or morally defective to his brain laboratory and examined them carefully. The punishment or medical treatment of the prisoners depended upon Dr. Bisch's diagnosis. Thus if a man answered correctly, "Twice two make four," he was merely fined $5. If he said, "Minus ten equals two cold bottles," the psychopathic ward at Bellevue opened for him.

SEAPLANES FOR PHILIPPINES.

Four Army Machines Added to Second Aero Squadron

Four of the United States army's new hydroaeroplanes, which have been given tests in San Diego, Cal., by Floyd Smith, a civilian aviator, are to be shipped to Manila for duty in the Second aero squadron. Three of the machines have established altitude and passenger carrying records.

The new hydroaeroplanes are the largest in the service of the United States. They can be operated for approximately 500 miles without alighting for fuel.

Simple-X Machine Plant Resumes Work

The Simple-X Wrapping Machine Company, whose plant in the past few months has been in a state of inactivity, owing to the order which had been issued restraining operations by the creditors of John A. Bort, alleged bankrupt, resumed work yesterday. There are a large number of orders to be taken care of, it is said, which have accumulated since the restraining order was made effective.

The application to vacate or modify the restraining order was made by Attorney Floyd E. Spangle at Albany on February 17th, before Judge Ray of the U .S. District Court, Mr. Spangle acting in behalf of the wrapping machine company. Attorney A. T. Jennings was also present as counsel for creditors of Mr. Bort. Judge Ray opined that the restraining order should be vacated after evidence was offered by Mr. Spangle showing Mr. Bort's connection with the Simple-X Wrapping Machine Co.

ASHES SHOULD BE FREE FROM GARBAGE—Dr. Kellar

refuse shall be kept covered; also that measures tb taken to compel housekeepers to keep garbage and refuse separate from ashes. By observing such a ruling clean ashes could be used in filling holes in streets, as well asl owlands.

Lots Do Not Look Inviting

City Attorney Hillick recommended that a committee be appointed to study the subject and to make a complete report at a future meetinng. He also suggested that the assistance of the Chamber of Commerce be enlisted in behalf of a general cleaning up of back yards, adding that three or four men, with the city's interests at heart, should be asked to take up the matter of making collection of refuse a business venture.

Dr. Kellar said that the appearance of some vacant lots near the city limits gave a bad impression to motorists; that instead of finding thereon clean ashes there may be seen heaps of old papers, tin cans, and other food for goats. It is Dr. Kellar's opinion that these vacant lots should be filled with clean ashes and rubbish taken to the city dumping ground.

Mayor Lewis called upon collectors of ashes to state their sides of the case. The opinion of each was that if the average housekeeper would separate the ashes and garbage there would be no difficulty in carrying out the desire of the Board. One of the men stated that there are two classes of people, one which does separate refuse and one which does not.

CHICAGO SUFFRAGIST SPURNS ALIMONY

Chicago— Mrs. Crystal Eastman Benedict, suffragist, pacifist, business woman and sister of Max Eastman, editor of the Masses, has file da uit in the Circuit Court for divoce from Wallace Benedict, an electrical engineer. She does not ask alimony. Her plea is based on an infidelity charge.

"Alimony is not thought of by a real feminist now, and would in no way hold her to her husband's name for the purpose of it's collection," Mrs. Benedict said recently. "Alimony is a relic of the old,old days, when women were considered like children and had to be supported by men. The whole purpose of the feminist movement is to get rid of the parasite woman."

Mrs. Benedict, of Miss Eastman, as she prefers to be called, also described marriage as a handcuff and not a link:

INTERNATIONAL PAPER EARNINGS INCREASE

New York—The report of the International Paper Company for the year ended December 31, 1915, shows a balance after the deduction o finterest and depreciation charges of $1,219,515 as against a balance of $1-137,709 in the year preceding. This is equivalent to 5.44 per cent. on the preferred stock of $22,406,700, as compared with 5.07 per cent. earned on the stock in 1914.

The net revenue of the company was $3,121,681 as compared with $3,-088,898 in 1914. The surplus, after payment of preferred dividends, was $771,381, as compared with $689,575.

The total surplus of the company is $12,402,250 as against a surplus of $11,630,869 at the close of 1914.

PENNSYLVANIA MAKES HEAVY NET GAINS

New York—The report of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for the year ended December 31 last shows a gross income of $66 626 245, which, compared with $51,792,223 the preceding year, is an increase of $14.834,022. Net income of $42.425.322 is an increase of $8.334.557 over $34.-090,764 in 1914. For the first time since 1912 the return on the property investment increased comfortably. The net income for the year was equal to 8.70 per cent. earned on the $499.203.700 capital stock, as compared with 6.80 per cent. earned the preceding year.

OSTEOPATHS TO MEET IN ALBANY SATURDAY

Albany—The osteopaths of New York State open the campaign of Baby Week by meeting in convention in Albany Saturday next. Three hundred delegates will be present. An organized effort is being made by the osteopathic physicians to reduce infant mortalty, and the campaign is not to be limited to this state, but is to include the entire counry. While not antagonizing any of the work done by other schools of practice, the osteopaths believe they have a great field of work in this campaign along their own lines, and they claim that they are already doing more than any other class of physicians, in proportion to their numbers. As the practitioners of other schools are necessarily more occupied with medicines and surgery, the osteopaths assert that it is to osteopathy that the great bulk of the work of prevention of disease must fall, particularly in relation to infants and children, who respond so prmptly to this new treatment and to whom the greatest medical authorities prefer not to administer drugs in most cases. Women osteopaths are organizing all over the world for practical work with mothers and children to prevent disease and to promote a constructive education in thep rinciples of health. The public osteopathic clinics are to be established in every city in New York State.

On St. Patrick's Night

By EUN'CE BLAKE

"Nora O'Rourke," said the postman on the morning of St. Patrick's day, handing a maid who answered his whistle two letters. "Any such person here?"

"That's myself," said the girl, taking the mail. The postman went on, and she returned to the kitchen. One of the missives bore a black border and a foreign stamp. She tore off the envelope and read the contents, from her sister in Ireland:

Dear Nora—I have to tell you some bad news. Our uncle Patrick, who has been in the grocery business in Dublin, is dead But there's some good news too. He made a lot of money, and, not having any wife or children, he has left it all to you and me. We will have about £2,000 apiece Your loving sister, BRIDGET.

The bad part of the news had little effect on Nora, for she had never seen her uncle, and the legacy of $10,000 was a matter of great delight. She was so interested in the latter that she forgot for some time to open her other letter; then she turned her attention to the other letter. It was from Patrick Doolan, asking her to go with him to the ball to be given on the night of St. Patrick's day, and he hoped that she would give him an answer to a question that he would ask her.

She knew very well what that question would be, but was in doubt as to her answer She held in her hand the letter advising her of her legacy and her lover's note, turning from one to the other back and forth. Pat Doolan was a money maker, owning a number of teams, with which he did hauling. Nora's poverty had constrained her to consider his proposition of marriage, remembering that he would be able to keep the wolf from his and her door. But inclinations rather led her to favor young Michael O'Connor, who was bright and active, but had not the faculty of holding on to what he made. She knew that both Pat and Mike would be at the ball on St. Patrick's evening, and she laid a plan to assist her in the matter between them During the afternoon she went to see her friend, Kathleen Clancy, and said to her:

"Kath, I'm going to say something tonight to Pat Doolan that may make him get sweet on you."

"What are you going to tell him?"

"That your uncle in Ireland is dead and has left you $10,000."

"But I haven't any uncle in Ireland."

"Never mind that. Likely Pat won't mention the matter to you. If he does don't tell him the truth till tomorrow, and I'll give you something pretty."

Nora went to the ball with Pat and on the way told him that she knew a girl who that morning had received a legacy of £2,000 by the death of an uncle in Ireland. Pat asked who was the girl, and Nora gave him to understand that she was Kathleen Clancy.

During the evening Pat did not refer to the answer to his proposition. Kathleen, not being a very pretty girl, was something of a wall flower.

"I'm sorry for the poor girl," said Pat, "sittin' around with no one to ask her to dance. I'm minded to go and ask her myself."

"That's right," said Nora. "She'll appreciate the attention."

Pat asked Kathleen to dance and, having danced with her once, he concluded to ask her again. Meanwhile Mike O'Connor danced with Miss O'Rourke. He asked her to dance with him again, but she declined. To do so would not have accorded with her plan.

When Pat and Nora were going home from the ball, instead of pressing her for an answer to his proposal, he said to her:

"Nora, I don't like your dancing with that miserable fellow, O'Connor."

"I only danced with him once."

"That's enough. You shouldn't have danced with him at all."

"I'm sorry," said Nora, with apparent penitence.

When Pat left her at the door she said to him:

"I suppose you don't want the answer you said you were lookin' for?"

"Not tonight. I'm thinkin' about your dancing with that spalpeen O'Connor. Maybe I'll get over it in time."

"That won't do you any good, for I won't get over what you've done this night. It's not Kathleen, whose uncle in Ireland has died and left her $10,000 but my own uncle has left that money to me. I told you it was Kathleen to see if you could be switched off by a bait of a legacy, and I've found that you don't value me so much as the fortune. Good night and goodby."

"Nora"—he began in a supplicating tone, but he got no further, for she shut the door in his face.

When Nora and Kathleen met again Nora learned that Pat had not mentioned the legacy, but he had asked Kathleen to go to a ball with him to come off a week later. Then Nora told her friend that inasmuch as she had helped her to find out that the man she had thought of marrying could be so easily turned away from her she would keep her promise to give her something pretty. When she received her fortune she presented her friend with a set of furs.

Nora married Mike O'Connor, and under her tutelage in careful expenditure of moneys he became prosperous. Kathleen was dropped by Doolan, who was beside himself with chagrin when he learned how he had been tricked. He never forgav Nora O'Rourke for having fooled him, but what she had done made her really more desirable.

FROM THE NORTHLAND.

A Serviceable Rug Quaintly Designed and Beautifully Made.

This interesting example of handiwork is a sample of the Grenfell mission exhibits from Labrador. Ten years ago Miss Jessie Luther went to bring cheer and manual training to these families of deep sea fishers, who must needs pass so many dreary, unoccupied months of cold. Miss Luther writes:

"Another very salable product is the hooked mat. It is, of course, a native industry, generations old, as it is in all rural districts. The mats, made without suggestion as to design and color, are for use and as such justify their making, for they are the only covering used for the floors, but as a rule they are very ugly, though often beautifully made. In many cases the material is what remains of some family garment. In many others scraps of all colors are used, and the designs, which are stamped on burlap and sold by the trader, are meaningless or ugly and not worthy the fine work so often put into them.

"It seemed particularly advisable to use designs of local significance, and those I have given out have been seal, reindeer, dogs, ships and even the jelly fish, with its four central rings. The most elaborate designs have the komatik and dog team and the Laplander and his little herding dog, with their tent in the corner. I have also given out designs of bears, walrus ducks and rabbits. All these subjects have been treated conventionally as a border and the center left plain in nearly every case. They have been very popular and have sold at once for prices varying from $0.50 to $25, according to size, design, coloring and workmanship. They are made of new material, some of flannelette and some of woolen flannel, dyed the soft colors that will harmonize with ordinary surroundings. They are designed as furnishings to live with and not as [illegible], and we aim to have the colors fast and the rug durable enough to last many years with its attractiveness unchanged. These mats are made by people who are often very poor, and it is their only means of earning extra money."

Feed Winter Poultry Well.

During the winter it is impossible for most people to keep the food bills for the fowls very low, for not only is more food required for maintaining bodily heat, but where the coveted "winter egg" is desired, feeding must be on a liberal scale or that result will not be attained.

During the cold months, unless a large supply of house scraps is available, it will cost much to keep each hen.

Of course this sum could be reduced if no soft food were given, in which case corn would form the staple diet, but it is doubtful whether any profit would really be made by this, as egg production would be reduced also.

In the same way it does not pay to buy inferior food for the sake of economy, for if there is no nourishment in the materials supplied it is impossible for the fowls to lay many eggs.

Of course overfeeding is just as harmful as underfeeding, and the amateur poultry keeper should specially beware of this danger, for fat hens will not lay.

Meat in some form is a necessity for winter layers, and there is no finer egg producer than fresh cut bones.

Oyster Bisque.

Materials: One pint of oysters, one quart of milk, one stalk of celery, one sprig of parsley, one slice of onion, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, salt, pepper and one-half cupful of whipped cream.

Utensils: Double boiler, saucepan, spoon and cup.

Directions: Scald the milk in a double boiler with celery, parsley and onion. Reserve the liquor of the oysters; remove soft part and chop fine the remainder, free from shell. Put the butter and flour together. Remove the celery, parsley and onion from the milk; add butter and flour. Heat the chopped oyster and liquor. If you wish add the soft portions, though this does not make as delicate a soup. Combine the oysters with milk and add the whipped cream.

Spring Love

By ETHEL HOLMES

Poets have sung of love in the spring for centuries. No one ever read a poem of young love in autumn; certainly not in winter. It comes with the budding leaves, and it also comes with propinquity. Place a young girl near a young man on a warm, sunshiny day in April or May, or the young man near the girl, and love is just as sure to bud in their hearts as leaves on the trees.

It is singular how many different ways this spring disease manifests itself in these youngsters. In many cases one would suppose that they had been seized with an aversion for each other. Sometimes contempt, but never indifference, though there is nothing they attempt to show more than this.

A case in point.

Benny Apherson had reached the age when a boy is especially particular as to his cravats. He was admiring himself in a pier glass upon donning his new spring suit and his first silk hat. Olivia Treadwell had just passed the age when her mother studied the advertisements for bargains in misses' apparel. On the very day that Benny put on his "tile" and Ollie donned her first woman's frock they saw each other for the first time. Behind the Treadwell home was a garden, and against the farther end of the garden was the rear of a house into which had recently moved the Apherson family.

On this beautifully bright spring morning Miss Ollie, from the rear drawing room of her house, espied Benny in the rear drawing room of his home admiring before the pier glass his new plug hat. He bowed to his image, taking off his hat to an imaginary lady, walked past the glass, first showing one side then the other, smirked at himself—or, rather, at the imaginary girl—showed a dignified superiority, indeed, practiced all manner of ways of attracting, even of crushing her. While so engaged he evidently heard some one approaching, for he hurriedly placed the hat on the window sill and passed out of Ollie's sight.

All this Miss Ollie observed, unobserved herself. As soon as the young Apollo disappeared she was seized with a terrible temptation. The gardener was engaged in removing the flowers from the conservatory and placing them in the garden without. Having planted a large number, he watered them with the garden hose and had gone somewhere else, leaving the hose on the ground. There was the shining hat balanced on the window sill, there was the hose and there was the girl. The result was what was to have been expected. The girl went down and out into the garden and began to put more water on the already well watered plants, casting from time to time furtive glances at the rear window in which Apollo had placed his hat. Having satisfied herself that no one was looking, with assumed carelessness she diverted the stream from one flower bed to another, and in doing so the stream struck the hat. It disappeared from view. Unconscious apparently of what she had done, Miss Ollie continued to water the flowers for a few minutes, then dropped the hose and went into the house.

The young lady deceived herself if she thought she was unobserved. Benny from an upper window had caught sight of her in the garden watering the flowers. Now, a girl watering flowers on a bright spring morning, even with a garden hose, is a delectable sight. Benny stood back from the window, far enough to be out of sight, took up a pair of opera glasses and flashed his eyes on Miss Treadwell, seeing every intent in her features as well as if he had been close beside her. When she diverted the stream from the flower beds he saw a look of malicious mischief on her face and wondered. Later, when he went downstairs for his hat and saw it on the floor, its beautiful sheen ruined by a drenching, that look was explained.

If any one had told Benny that his feelings toward his neighbor were not a concentrated desire for revenge, that they were instead the opening of the love bud in his heart, he would have laughed sardonically. While he was gazing on the ruin before him he was trying to think of some method of crushing the perpetrator. No appropriate method occurred to him at the time, and when next he saw Miss Treadwell she was in the garden nipping the flowers to make a bouquet, looking so attractive that he wished he were with her instead of separated from her by a wall and the absence of an acquaintance. He hoped she would look up at him, but since she did not he coughed to attract her attention.

Now, if Miss Ollie had not been already conscious of Mr. Apherson's presence his ruse would have succeeded. Since she was conscious of the fact that he was admiring her, she went on plucking the flowers without manifesting the slightest curiosity in the premises.

This is not a love story, it is simply an exposition of certain apparent inconsistencies pertaining to spring love in spring age. Mr. Apherson made Miss Treadwell's acquaintance, and there was an affair between them, but of the kind usually denominated "puppy love." It was nipped by the young lady's mamma, who packed her off to boarding school. Before she married she experienced several more such affairs, most of them hatched in the spring.

A CASE OF NERVES?

Is Crossness a Mood or Inherent In Just Things?

Every woman, young and old, knows what it is to have cross days—days when, from the rising up of the sun to the going down of the same, every mortal thing seems to go wrong, no matter how hard one tries to have them go right. For that matter, one always does try harder on such days than on the happy go lucky ones when life flows on smoothly and harmoniously, like "a grand, sweet song." Goodness knows, there is enough conscientious effort wasted on a single cross day to balance half a year of ordinary days.

Why is this? Is crossness a disordered state of the mind or an overwrought condition of the nerves or simply the reflection of an inexplicable but unanimous "crossedness" on the part of things in general? And if it be any or all of these is there any way of preventing or overcoming it?

Crossness, like most other conditions of life, is the inevitable effect of a perfectly natural cause. Good humor, like fine weather, cannot possibly last for ever. If it could it would inevitably become an intolerable bore. Being eternally pleasant and agreeable is all right theoretically, but it is a terrible strain on the nerves.

It is dreadfully wearing, too, on other people. Did you ever have to live in the same house with somebody who was always placid, always even tempered, no matter who else was worried and distraught? And were you not sometimes seized with an unholy yearning to do something perfectly awful and fiendish, that you might for once startle that placid being out of his or her maddening imperturbability?

Dates With Lemon Jelly.

Soak one-half a box of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold water for about twenty minutes. Dissolve in two and one-half cupfuls of boiling water and add one cupful of sugar and the juice of two lemons. Strain and half fill a mold and set on ice. When almost firm, drop on the dates, which have been stoned and stuffed with blanched almonds. Add the rest of the jelly to fill the mold and chill. Serve with whipped cream.

Waffles With Maple Sirup.

Two cupfuls of flour sifted twice with one teaspoonful of baking powder and the same of salt, three eggs, one tablespoonful of butter and two cupfuls of milk. Beat the yolks smooth, add the milk and turn this upon the prepared flour. Whip lightly and quickly for one minute, add the stiffened whites and drop by the spoonful into heated and greased waffle irons.

A Jabot From a Collar.

Another use for the flat Dutch collar of value is to make it into a jabot. This will require no cutting at all. The collar should be gathered or plaited at the center of the back and the two pointed ends turned directly underneath. It is then hung from the front of a stock collar. Of course a soft collar of lace or lace trimmed batiste will fill in this purpose best.

The Cooky Jar.

PEANUT COOKIES.—One egg beaten till light, one-half cupful sugar, a cupful of chopped peanuts, two tablespoonfuls sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt and one and one-quarter cupfuls of flour. Drop on tins and bake a light brown.

Brown Sugar Cookies.—Cream a cupful of brown sugar and a large spoonful of shortening; add two well beaten eggs. Stir a teaspoonful of soda into a generous one-half cupful of sour cream and add. Add flour with a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and one-half teaspoonful of salt and flavor with nutmeg. Mix soft as can be handled and roll quite thick. Bake in a medium hot oven until a delicate brown.

Fig Bars.—Use any choice recipe for cookies, roll the dough thin and cut in long, narrow cakes, using a mustard box as cutter. After the baking pan is filled with shapes spread each not quite to the edge with cooked fig paste, brush the edge of each with cold water and set a second shape above it, pressing the two close together on the edge. Brush over with beaten white of egg, dredge with granulated sugar and bake about ten minutes. Lift from the tins with a spatula.

Fig Paste For Fig Bars.—Cook one-half pound of figs in boiling water to cover until the skins are tender and the water is mostly evaporated, add one-quarter cupful sugar and let cook a few minutes longer. Chop fine, let cool and use as above.

Brownies.—A cupful brown sugar, one-quarter cupful shortening, an egg, one-quarter cupful grated chocolate, a tablespoonful milk, one-half teaspoonful salt, one-half cupful chopped seeded raisins, one-half cupful flour, a teaspoonful baking powder. Rub sugar and shortening until light, add well beaten egg and chocolate, which has been melted over hot water; add the milk and mix all well together; add raisins and flour and baking powder; roll out on flourboard one-eighth of an inch thick, cut into strips or cut with biscuit cutter. Bake in hot oven ten to twelve minutes.

Sugar Cookies.—One egg, a cupful sugar, one-half cupful melted butter, one-half teaspoonful soda, one-half teaspoonful cream of tartar, about one-half wineglassful cream (or top of milk), just enough to dissolve cream of tartar and soda; flour enough to knead. Roll thin and sprinkle with sugar. Cream butter, sugar, eggs, cream and flour.

The Nursery Bib.

Away with the bib and its strings that will knot or the buttons that will not button! Here is the dearest little eating apron that ever covered dainty ruffles or Dickens suits, and when mother realizes what a very simple matter the making of such an apron can be she will hasten to fashion one for the littlest girl or boy in the nursery. A Turkish towel or a simple huck affair can be turned with a snip of the scissors and a few stitches into a comfortable, easily managed apron. At about two-thirds of the length of the towel cut a hole large enough for the little head to slip through. Bind this with tape or scallop it if you wish a little extra fanciness. The shorter side is then gathered or plaited into a belt, made from wide tape or a piece of old toweling, which passes around to the front and holds the apron in place. Cross stitch may make the little apron still more attractive, especially if the design be the favorite nursery chicks, bunnies or kittens. While the linen or huck toweling is prettier, the the Turkish toweling is really more practical because of its absorbent qualities. It saves crying over spilt milk.

Oat Bread.

Make a sponge of four cupfuls rolled oats (dry), one-half cupful molasses, two cupfuls boiling water, scant tablespoonful of lard, one teaspoonful salt, one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water. Add only part of the flour, then let rise overnight. Now add about four cupfuls flour and knead about fifteen minutes. Let rise until twice its size, form into loaves, let rise until its bulk is doubled, then bake about forty-five minutes. This makes two large loaves.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Useful Coat In Cotton Corduroy.

Misses' sports coat in blue cotton corduroy, worn with a circular skirt of white flannel. The coat is in the smart drop shoulder style.

When a chic coat and a smart skirt are combined, the result is sure to be a natty suit. The coat shown here is fashioned of cotton corduroy in a smart shade of blue, trimmed with the same color satin. The convertible collar is in equally good style closed to the neck or rolled back to form revers. The drop shoulder gives the broad line that youthful women so often affect. In medium size the coat requires 3 yards 54-inch material.

The home dressmaker who carefully follows the cutting guide will be immune against mistakes or waste of material. Fold the corduroy in half and along the lengthwise fold place the back. To the right of this, on a lengthwise thread, lay the sleeve, and follow with the collar, which is placed on the lengthwise fold so that it will be seamless.

On the side nearest the selvage edge the cuff, pocket, underfacing and front are laid, each placed on a lengthwise thread. If the coat is desired in shorter length, cut off the lower parts of front, back and underfacing along the indicating small "o" perforations. For a single-breasted coat cut off the front edges of the front and underfacing on small "o" perforations.

The cotton corduroys seem to be established as an all-the-year round favorite, and the makers of smart suits evidently count upon a continuance of such conditions, for some delightful models are shown for Spring and Summer wear.

Sharing favor with blue for corduroy coats are brown, white, bright green and red.

As is always the case in the Spring season, the loosely belted coat of the Norfolk clan—though often having little in common with the Norfolk except its belt—is considerably emphasized. For country and sports wear they are, of course, the correct thing.

Little Frock With Smocking.

Wedgewood blue chambray frock for a small girl. Below the yoke front and back are several rows of smocking, while a plain belt holds in the fulness of the skirt.

The subtle charm that can be put into frocks for children is admirably expressed in this little frock of Wedgewood blue chambray trimmed with smocking. Cut in one piece, the front and back yoke dispels the horror of seams, while the square collar gives to the neck the finish that combines the utmost comfort with the maximum chic.

In medium size the dress requires 3⅝ yards 36-inch material. To cut the dress only requires a careful study of the cutting guide. It will be seen that the front, the back, the yoke and collar are laid on a lengthwise fold of the material. The collar referred to here is the square effect, a standing collar also being provided. The cuff and the sleeve are arranged on a lengthwise thread of the chambray, while the stay is run along the selvage edge.

To make the neck in open effect it will be necessary to cut out the neck edge of yoke ⅝ inch above the large and small perforations.

Smock is one of the favorite trimmings for children's dresses this season and the work should be done before cutting out the material. When it is done in a contrasting color it is particularly effective. Smocking is not difficult to do and with a good pattern for a guide the woman who attempts to make it will have no trouble whatever.

There is a custom growing in popularity among mothers of small children to keep them dress in all-white or light colored wash frocks all the year around. Warm, steam-heated houses probably explain this style, as heavy frocks are too warm for wear indoors and long heavy coats are perfectly warm enough over the cotton frocks for wear in our mild winters.

Where the laundry question does not have to be considered this is an excellent habit, as wash clothes are so much more sanitary in every way.

A Run On Icings

Chocolate Icing.—Add two squares of chocolate melted over hot water just after the sirup has been beaten into the egg.

Maple Icing.—Use one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar and one-half cupful of granulated sugar in the boiled icing.

Coffee Icing.—Use one cupful of weak coffee in place of the water in the boiled icing.

Marshmallow Icing.—Add twenty marshmallows cut in fourths to the sirup, being sure that it is hot enough to melt them. If not soften the marshmallows first over hot water, or soften in the oven.

Nut or Fruit Icing.—Add one cupful of chopped nut meats just before spreading on the cake. Add cocoanut or chopped raisins. Add a raisin or fig paste made by cooking one cupful of chopped raisins or figs with one tablespoonful of water and one tablespoonful of sugar.

Butter Icing.—Butter, one-third cupful; confectioners' sugar, one cupful; cream, two tablespoonfuls; flavoring, one teaspoonful. Cream the butter, gradually add the sifted sugar, and beat until the mixture looks like whipped cream. Add the flavoring and cream until of the right consistency to spread. Do not put on a hot cake.

Cocoa Icing.—Add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa to the sugar.

Mocha Icing.—Add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa to the sugar and two tablespoonfuls of coffee in place of the cream.

Chocolate Marshmallow Icing.—Slice marshmallows in thin slices and lay on the cake while hot. When cool spread over the chocolate icing.

Fudge Icing.—Sugar, two cupfuls; milk, one cupful; butter, one teaspoonful; chocolate, two squares; salt, one-half teaspoonful; vanilla, one teaspoonful. Combine the sugar, cut chocolate and milk and let stand over a very low flame until the sugar is dissolved and the milk melted. Then boil hard without stirring until a soft ball is formed when dropped in cold water. Remove, add the butter and let stand until cold. Beat until creamy and spread on the cake. This will burn very easily.

Boiled Salt Mackerel In Cream Sauce.

Wash the fish in several waters, remove the head and part of the tail, scrape off the thin black skin and soak in cold water over night. In the morning tie the fish in a cloth, cover with fresh cold water, bring slowly to a boil, cook one-half hour, then take off the cloth, remove the backbone and lay the fish on a heated dish. Scald a cupful of milk, thicken with a teaspoonful of cornstarch wet in a little cold milk, add a teaspoonful of minced parsley, two tablespoonfuls of butter and pepper and salt to taste. Remove from the fire, add a well beaten egg, return to the fire, cook a minute longer, then pour the sauce over the fish and serve. Garnish with sprigs of parsley and slices of hard boiled eggs.

Woman's World

How One Englishwoman Describes Her Many War Duties.

THE COUNTESS OF ESSEX.

"Every morning," recently said Lady Essex, who was Miss Adele Grant of New York, "I go to St. James' palace and work, with a large number of other ladies, from 10 o'clock until 1—that is, for Queen Mary's Needlework guild. We have made 1,000,000 respirators for the soldiers in the trenches against gas attacks, and we have made innumerable surgical stores—bandages, etc.

"A good many other things fall to our care. This morning, for instance, 100 bales of towels arrived from the country. Dressing gowns, shirts, underwear, all sorts of things, come to us as we ask for them. We sort them, repack and send them, in required quantities, to their destinations. You may recall the war office asking for 3,000,000 pairs of socks about Christmas time a year ago. These were sent to us from everywhere, many of them incorrectly marked or not marked at all as to sizes. We had to measure every pair, label them and put them in packets of ten. That task alone meant six weeks' continuous work.

"My other duties are really too numerous to remember offhand. Let me see. At Watford—Watford is a town of 40,000 inhabitants in Hertfordshire, where we have a country place—I am on the executive committee of the urban council for war relief—that is, for the relief of civilians. I am president of the Soldiers and Sailors' Families' association, which supplements when necessary the war allowances given to wives and families. We have voluntary helpers, who take different districts, visit, write letters, find out if the families are getting their allowances and give privately additional help where it is needed. Often a woman wants to attend some function of her husband's regiment and lacks proper clothes, or, as an instance, a wife had word that her husband was wounded and in hospital at Plymouth. She had no means of her own to go to see him, and these had to be privately supplied her.

"Take the motors. At the beginning of the war the Automobile club was immediately offered 2,000 motors for war service. Since then many more have been quietly given, and those private individuals who have any left do not keep them for their own pleasure.

"Then everybody who has one lends it three or four afternoons a week for convalescent soldiers. We may be told after awhile that the use of motors must be cut down on account of petrol.

"Another luxury that may seem strange—the theater. No one dreamed of going to a theater at first. We hadn't the heart to do anything. Later the actors came out and said they were starving. Then the children returned from school for their holidays, and we felt we must exert ourselves to make things a little cheerful for them. We took them to the theaters. Gradually we ourselves got to going again. Now there are the convalescent soldiers who need entertainment, and their relatives, and the soldiers on leave—there must be relief.

"There is no longer any such thing as dinner parties," Lady Essex added. "We've quite put them out of our minds. Eight or ten people meet perhaps several times a week and happen to dine together, but there is no thought of dress and little of the dinner, except to keep it simple and sufficient. A dinner used to begin with soup and fish; there was an entree. But now! Now it is soup or fish; there is a meat course and a sweet; that is all."

Safe.

"So you think you are safe in marrying a widow?"

"Yes; my case is different. You see her former husband never made half the money I am making."—Detroit Free Press.

The Quickest Cure for a Cold

Few of the minor ailments make one more miserable than a common cold, and every one wishes to get rid of it with as little delay as possible. Mrs. William Coss, Little Falls, N. Y., says that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will cure a cold quicker than anything else she knows of. "I have used it for my children for years," she writes, "and it has never failed to give them quick relief when suffering from coughs or colds."

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE JOHN?

Not a Test of Wilson, But of American Honor

Today's New York Sun, says editorially of the present crisis in Washington as follows:

"If the action of the Congress on the resolution affecting the present rights of American citizens on the merchantmen of belligerent nations should be adverse to the policy supported by the Executive, the diplomatic negotiations undertaken by the United States would be reduced to chaos. No President oppressed by such a precedent could enter with confidence on any contention with a foreign Power. His most earnest representations, his most solemn protestations, might be rendered meaningless by the intrusion of a Congress influenced by incorrect reports, or overcome by personal antagonism. This condition of impotence, instead of making for tranquility would inevitably endanger our peace.

"It is to the support of the President, and not the individual who happens to be in the White House, that the Representatives in Congress must come at this time. They find the country in a controversy in which our stand has been taken on definite and well understood principles. In the midst of that dispute the threat has been made their our ground shall ber adically changed, and the conditions seriously altered. The inevitable effect of this proposed modification has been to hearten those who are at issue with us, embarrass our representative, and encourage the belief that those to whom he must look for support will withhold it from him. This injury can be repaired only by the explicit renunciation of the purpose that that embodies, and a convincing exhibition of the unity of the republic.

"Against the necessity of the occasion the fortunes of Mr. Wilson are of meanest significance. The possible profit that may be his, the allegations of political intent that fill the air of Washington, the personal resentments of other individuals, all sink into contemptible proportions. Mr. Wilson can be dealt with later. His errors can be treated at an appropriate time. Opportunities to study his course at times when the examination can be carried on without reference to problems of capital import will not be lacking. If his enemies have unlocked a door through which he has passed to advantage, they have nobody to blame except themselves, and this is not the time for them to seek revenge for their stupidity.

"The test is not of Woodrow Wilson and his legislative "colleagues" as individuals. It is of the President and of the Congress, on an issue of American honor."

BABIES WORTH $90; PAPAS AT $4,000

Boston—Prof. Irving I. Fisher of Yale, urging the adoption of a bill for compulsory social insurance for workmen, told the Committee on Social Welfare at the State House today that he estimated the value of a baby to be $90.

"And I estimathe the value of an adult to be $4,000," he said. "The value foa n aged person, by computations under the proposed system, becomes a negative quantity.

"The bill would bring preventive medicine into every home. Last year there were 630,000 unnecessary deaths in the United States. The bill also would distribute the enormous burden of sickness so that it will not entirely overwhelm a worker when it comes."

BUFFALO MACHINISTS GO ON STRIKE

Buffalo—Twelve hundred machinists working in Buffalo plants went on a strike this morning. The move was decided at a conference held last night. It is expected 1,800 more men will join the strikers before night. There has been no violence as yet, and none is expected, although Police Superintendent Martin sent details of men to the various plants.

WHITE STAR LINE SUSPENDS SERVICE

New York—The White Star Line withdrew yesterday from the passenger carrying service between this country and England, announcing that its three big ships, the Lapland, Baltic and Adriatic, will take no reservations on this side. Two other ships, the Kroonland and Finland, are to be transferred to the American line of the International Mercantile Marine and will sail under the American flag.

Although yesterday marked the beginning of Germany's new submarine campaign the officials of the line declared that this had nothing to do with the change, which they say is made solely because of the need for munitions carriers to the other side.

WILSON'S FIRMNESS IMPRESSES CONGRESS

Washington — President Wilson told Chairman Flood of the House foreign aqairs committee early today that he would consent to no compromise on the armed ship issue and desired a direct vote on a resolution warning Americans off armed ships of belligerent nations. ## CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

This isn't your City or my City; it is OUR City.

* * *

We Americans do not like to wait for anything, for a street car, our change, or even for the Millenium. We are in a hurry, waiting is tiresome, impatient business and there is no more irksome wait than for something you have bought and want to use. It is you, you want it, you fret and fume, if it is not there when you first ask for it. Next day you storm louder. Then you get busy and write a letter or "jack up" the express company. It is mighty provoking, but you do not get [illegible] satisfaction and some times you keep on waiting [illegible]. Buy in Fulton means no irksome delays in shipment, [illegible]ur package is delivered the same day, and if it is n[illegible] [illegible]an very soon get to the root of the trouble and remedy it. Buy in Fulton means the saving of time and the [illegible] of temper. One does not need to extol the advant[illegible] of conservation in 1916, and time and temper are wor[illegible]rving.

* * *

The past ten years [illegible] remarkable for the standardization of almost all classes of merchandise. Advertising has been a great factor in this important movement, which has meant much for the protection of the buying public. From locomotives to hair pins, we have become accustomed to associating certain brands and certain makes with certain definite qualities. "Holeproof" and "Onyx" are words that mean something to the buyer of hosiery. It needs no argument to point to the advantages of knowledge for the buyer, and where expert, technical knowledge is impossible, the brand of a reputable maker is protection for the purchaser. The Fulton merchants carry standard brands. Their show windows; their advertising; and their stocks show this standardization. You can buy a pair of Boston garters, an R and G corset, a Yawman & Erbe filing cabinet, a box of Kellogg's Corn Flakes, or a Victrola just as well in Fulton as in any other city. It will be just as good at just the same price.

* * *

You like to do business with people you know. The merchants and their clerks know you, and they like to do business with you. They are glad to show you their goods, they appreciate your needs, they will make every effort to see that you get just what you want and that you will be satisfied with what you get. You are to the man individual, not merely a sales prospect. Just think of some time when you have tried to match a piece of silk or to buy a necktie in a store where you are not know. Contrast this when you went into a Fulton store on the same errand. You always get better service where you get personal service, and you only get personal service where you are known personally. The salesman can, and when he knows you, he is a great help in buying. He knows the stock, he knows what is new, and when he knows you he takes an interest in you over and above your mere purchase. When you buy in Fulton you get personal attention. This is to your advantage.

BUS LINE GETS P. S. APPROVAL

The Public Service Commission has granted a certificate of public convenience and necessity to Theodore J. Wilson and Wesley J. Scott for the operation of an automobile bus line from this city to the village of Hannibal. The route will run from the corner of Cayuga and 2nd sts., via Cayuga st., South 1st st., Onelda st., over the Oneida st. bridge to Schenck st., West 1st st., Hannibal st. to the city line and along the state road through Granby Center, Dexterville and Fairdale to Hannibal. There was no opposition to the granting of the certificate, which is for the portion only of the route within the City of Fulton.

HORACE BAGGS HANDS OVER FIVE DOLLARS IN GOLD TO GRANBY MAN

The crowded house which greeted Horace W. Baggs at all performances, at the Quirk, yesterday, were augmented a lot by the appearance of load after load of persons who came in from the surrounding country. While Mr. Baggs' popularity had something to do with the hearty reception, there was an extra incentive, in the form of a contest. He made known a few days ago that he would give $5 in real gold money to the person who would collect and present at the Quirk the largest load of human beings. It looked like easy money for a number of men with sleds and they were all busy yesterday, calling up surrounding farm houses on the telephone and making appointments with the inmates, to carry them into this city. In many instances the honors were nearly evenly divided between contestants, but when the counting of noses had been completed, it was found that the money would enrich Granby folk, Mr. Harrison Caswell, being the winner, he having carried to the theater just 31 neighbors.

Mr. Caswell was made glad, his neighbors who had helped him to win were gladder, and Mr. Baggs felt bully after completing his long day's work, which was no donbt the best he has ever executed in front of a Fulton audience. At least that's the verdict today.

BISHOP SELLEW

Bishop Walter A. Sellew of Jamestown, N. Y., is a guest at the home of Rev. C A Balch, of the Free Methodist church. He will speak tonight at the church at 7:30, in the interests of the Gerry, N. Y., orphanage and old ladies' home. His subject will be, "Our Obligation to Care for the Dependent ClCasses." The bishop is a trustee of the home.

Mexico Girls to Toss the Pigskin Tonight

A most exciting game isp romised for tonight at 8:15 when the Mexico High school girls' basketball team meet the local high school girls on the court at the City Hall.

This will be the second meeting of the teams. On February 4th, the Fulton team defeated their opponents in 35 minutes of close play by the score of 11-9. At that timie the Mexico team was at a disadvantage through inability to play according to the rules governing the play of girls, while the visiting team was seriously handicapped by the smoothness of the floor and the size of the court.

Tonight the Fultonians will be playing on their own floor and the visitors will be famaliar with the rules.

The supporters of theh ome team are depending not only on the efficient guarding of Miss Florence Furness and her assistant, but also on the skill of the other members of the team to hold their opponetnts to a low score.

Cruelty to Horses May Be Checked by Society

If present plans do not miscarry, Fulton will have in active operation within a fortnight a humane society, according to an officer of the Chamber of Commerce who states that at the last meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chamber tentative plans were made for the re-establishment of such a society.

A society for the prevention of cruelty to animals will be heartily welcomed and its need has been sorely felt on different occasions during the past three years, or since the former organization became inactive. It is likely that the workers within the organization will receive more encouragement than did the members of the former society, who ceased active work soon after a "squabble" with the owner of a horse which had been shot through the efforts of the society.

It is generally admitted that there is plenty of work for the society to perform.

One instance of the urgency of a society occurred yesterday, a teamster passing the corner of Cayuga and 1st sts. jumped from the sleigh while it was in motion and ran ahead of the horse, endeavoring to quicken its pace by striking heavily on the lower part of the horses front legs with the butt end of a whip. Drivers have been seen to lean over the front of the rig and whip horses unmercifully on head and neck.

These and occurrences of a similar nature have aroused the ire of men and women who would have animals protected, and who will work to secure a rejuvenation of the comatose society.

GERMANS STILL BATTER VERDUN

London—The Times' military correspondent, analyzing the situation around Verdun, declares his belief that the long expected big German offensive has begun, although he doubts that Verdum is to be the real point of theg reat attack.

He further declares emphatically that no front is impenetrable in the face of a modern artillery attack, but keep cool, to be avaricious in depleting the main reserves and to keep increasing those reserves for action when the Germans have exhausted themselves."

The writer's belief that the Germans are preparing to launch their main attack at some point other than Verdun is supported as follows:

"Any great success by the Germans further to the northwest than Champagne may under present conditions bring about an enforced retirement from the Meuse. What the Germans hope for is to attack the bulk of the Allies' reserves east of the Meuse, making an immense clatter there, and the next German blow from the northwest probably awaits the fulfilment of this desire. The French appear to have met the Verdun attack with reserves just sufficient to maintain the conflict. There is no sign that General Joffre has yet drawn upon or even moved his main forces."

FRANCE IS SATISFIED WITH THE SITUATION

Paris—That the situation around Verdun is now well in hand and considered quite satisfactory from the French point of view is stated freely by the military experts.

To the northeastern part of the stronghold the chief effort of the Germans seems to be directed to the resvcue of the Brandenburges, who remain cooped up in the ruined casemaets of Fort Rouaumont.

The development of the German operations to the southeast of Verdun is interpreted by the observers as preliminary to attempt to assail the French positions on the Meuse heights through two principal gaps through the woods, which are protected by Fort Tavannes, east by northest of Verdun, and southeast of Fort Douaumont, and by Fort Rezelier, to the southeast of the fortress.

Both sides are profiting by the period of comparative calm to bring up fresh forces and supplies of ammunition. While it is realized the Germans have not yet reached the limit of their offensive resources, it is stated any fresh onsi ught on their part is awaited by the Srench with supreme confidence in their ability to hurl it back.

SENATE BACKS THE PRESIDENT

Washington—President Wilson is to have his way in dealing with the foreign affairs of the country, especially in his negotiations with Germany.

Pledges sufficient to obtain a majority in the Senate for the administration in the controversy over the resolutions to warn Americans off armed ships of the European belligerents have been obtained by the administration leaders, and it is believed in Washington that, after action by the Senate, sentiment in the House against the President's policies will be stifled.

While the Senate debated yesterday there came news to the State Department from Berlin which convinced officials that the dimension in Congress was being used deliberately to weaken the President's hand in Germany. Confidential advices stated that reports circulated in the German capital as having come from Washington, declared that Congress stood five to one against the President.

Behind the curtain of dramatic events which shadowed lthe actua steps of the President's fight for defeat of the anti-administration resolutions and repudiation of the sentiment spread abroad that a majority of Congress is opposed to his foreign policy, the administration supporters took drastic steps today to carry out the Presiden't demand for a record vote.

Faced by thep ossibility of indefinite delay in the House, thye transferred the fight to the Senate. After having put the Senate majority on record to fight will be carried back to the other side of the Capitol.

WHITE STAR VESSELS FOR AMERICAN LINE

New York— The notice issued by the White Star line that the Lapland, the Baltic and the Adriatic, big passenger steamships, are about to be converted into freighters, and that the Kroon and the Finland, are to be turned over to the American line, is construed to be an announcement practically that the White Star line will temporarily discontinue its passenger carrying trade.

Opinions

FILM MONEY

A famous comedian of the films has signed a contract whereby his services are engaged at a rate of compensation which, it is said, equals in one week the salary of the Governor of this State for a year. In addition to this fixed remuneration generous rumor, no doubt quite correctly, awards to the gifted cutup a percentage of the earnings of the company before whose cameras his more or less artistic antics are henceforth to be performed.

The exact number of thousands a year earned by the stars of the movies is perhaps nobody's legitimate concern but the performers' and their employers.' But it is the public that pays, and if the mimes are to adopt a motto of "all the traffic will bear," while the companies are embarrassed by unreasoning competition, the goose may seek another repository for its golden eggs.

Fun makers deserve well of their laugh is of all payments the least belaugh is of all payments the least begrudged. People will grumble at the size of the doctor's bill and curse the butcher who feeds them or the landlord from whom they rent shelter; but the clown and the stage villain invite the impulses of generosity. What a pity it would be were any enterprise of entertainment so worthy at its best, of support to be done to death by those who live on it.—N. Y. Sun.

PRIMARY DATES

Unless the legislature has in mind a measure to provide for the election of national committeemen in the spring primaries, there seems to be no good reason for the postponement of the primaries one month, as proposed. Four years ago the state did very well with April primaries. The national conventions are usually in June. When this state has a favorite son it is to his advantage and his party's advantage, to show the rest of the country early in the campaign that he has support. Primaries held one month before the convention would not exert much influence.

The fact that the state committee will consist hereafter of one from a senate district rather than one from each assembly district, may bring confusion when the new apportionment is made, that is, one senate district may have two committeemen and another none.

This could be readily straightened out providing that the district lacking a committeeman may name one and that in case both committeemen within one district insist upon serving the rest of the state committee may choose between them. There seems to be no good reason one month before the primaries to shift the date.—Watertown Standard.

DOUGLASS FAIRBANKS AT THE HAPPY HOUR

The Lamb, the celebrated character in which Douglas Fairbanks has toured the country with great success will be presented in an entirely new play at the Happy Hour theatre tomorrow.

Mr. Fairbanks' leading lady in the production is the talented and beautiful Miss Seena Owen, who did such clever work in "The Fox Woman." Others in the cast include Monroe Salisbury, Alfred Paget, William E. Lowery, Kate Toncray, Lillian Langdon, Captain Dalton and Eagle Eye, the Indian rough rider and acrobat.

Some of the finest battle scenes presented on the film stage are to be seen in "The Lamb." In fact, it has been described as a miniature "Birth of a Nation." D. W. Griffiths, the famous author of that southern classic, supervised the rehearsals of "The Lamb," and W. Christy Cabanne directed it.

THE CITY'S GOOD TONIC

Some of the people and more of the members of the Chamber are displaying signs of extreme anxiety because for the first time in the history of this city an orchestra comprising home talent exclusively will appear in public recital. Granting that the venture is unprecedented and therefore somewhat of a risk by way of meeting with financial success, no excuse can be offered for failure because one would not hold good.

For the present, at least, The Evening Times declines to get excited over the undertaking. We see no reason why anybody should make a bridge of his nose. In the first place, the orchestra's rehearsals have been of such character as to disavow thoughts of imaginary bridges. Nobody knows better than a person whose talents include that of music that when "our orchestra" is capable of performing as it has been described by a person capable of judging there can be no failure artistically or financially.

This ensures a successful concert—which is one of the things most needed by the city of Fulton to tone up lagging civic interest. One year ago, yes, many months less than a year ago, such a thing as recruiting. "our orchestra" would have been described by the average citizen as impossible of attainment. Times have changed a little and now we know what can be done by making a determined, concerted effort in at least one direction.

All hail to the Symphony Orchestra! And buy one, two, three, and even, more tickets for the concert—evening of March 7th. Do it now or you may be classed as a "had I but known" person whose experiences are too often sorrowful ones.

PATRIOTISM

A nation is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its great forests, but by the men who use them; not by its mines, but by the men who work in them; not by its railways, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it; Americans have made of it a great Nation.

In 1776 our fathers had a vision of a new Nation "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." Without an army they fought the greatest of existing world empires that they might realize their vision. A third of a century later, without a navy they fought the greatest navy in the world that they might win for their Nation the freedom of the seas. Half a century later they fought through a unparalelled Civil War so they might establish for all time on this continent the inalienable right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. A third of a century later they fought to emancipate an oppressed neighbor, and, victory won, gave back Cuba to the Cubans, sent an army of schoolmasters to educate for liberty the Filipinos, asked no war indemnity from their vanquished enemy, but paid him liberally for his property. Meanwhile they offered land freely to any farmer who would live upon and cultivate it,opened to foreign immigrants on equal terms thedoor of industrial opportunity, shared with them political equality, and provided by universal taxation for universal education.

The cynic who can see in this history only a theme for his egotistical satire is no true American, whatever his parentage, whatever his birthplace. He who looks with pride upon this history which his fathers have written by their heroic deeds, who accepts with gratitude the inheritance which they have bequeathed to him, and who highly resolves to preserve this inheritance unimpaired and to pass it on to his descendants enlarged and enriched, is a true American, be his birthplace or his parentage what it may.—Lyman Abbott.

Cheering Him Up.

A professional boxer was badly beaten in a sparring match and carried to his bed exhausted and melancholy.

"I wish you'd say something to cheer him up, doctor," pleaded the defeated warrior's wife. "He's gettin' low in his mind, and when he's like that you've no idea how hard it is to wait on him. He's worse than a bear with a toothache."

"What can I say that will please him most?" asked the doctor.

"You might just tell him, in an offhand way, that the man as licked him is mighty bad in the 'orspital and that they may have to hold a post mortem on him any minute now," was the solemn suggestion.—London Telegraph.

Valuable Advice.

"You are always asking me for advice, but you never seem to take any that I give."

"I know it. You see, I am frequently in doubt before I consult you as to what is the best thing not to do."

Origin of Pajamas.

Pajamas are garments which Europeans adopted from the Mohammedans of India. The name means simply leg garments, and earlier generations in India knew them as "long drawers" and "mogul breeches." It is only of recent years that they have sprung into almost universal use in England in place of nightshirts—which some one characterized as equivalent to adopting trousers in place of frock coats—but references to the garments have been traced as early as 1828.

"Peejamas," "pigammahs" and "pijammahs" were some of former variants in use, and Thackeray wrote of them as "peijammahs." The standard spelling is only a recent agreement.

How to Drive Horses.

In making a long drive let the horses start out slowly for the first few miles. You can then increase their speed and the trip will be made in shorter time than if they had been driven fast at the start.—Farm and Fireside.

STORY OF THE AUTO PRINCE

There was an old geezer and he had a lot of sense;
He started up a garage on a dollar-eighty cents—
The dollar for stock and the eighty for an ad.
Brought him three lovely dollars in a day, by dad!

Well, he bought more goods and a little more space,
And he played that system with a smile on his face.
The customers flocked to his two-by-four,
And soon he had to hustle for a regular store.

Up on the square, where the people pass,
He gobbled up a corner that was all plate glass.
He fixed up the window with the best that he had,
And he told 'em all about it in a half-page ad.

He soon had 'em coming and he never, never quit,
And he wouldn't cut his ads one "by dad" bit.
Well, he's kept things humming in the town ever since,
And everybody calls him the Auto Prince.

Some say it's luck, but that's all bunk—
Why,he was doing business when the times were punk.
People have to purchase and the geezer was wise—
For he knew the way to get 'em was to advertise.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—American producers and manufactures are deeply interested in the movement on foot among the warring nations of Europe to control trade after the close of the war. There has already been much discussion of the preparations on foot in England. A recent development was the unanimous adoption of a resolution by the Chamber of Commerce of Vienna proposing an economic union of Austria and Germany to render them "more independent of their political and commercial opponents in regard to the supply of necessary foodstuffs, raw materials, and industrial products, and enable them to defend with greater energy their commercial interests in the world market."

The character of a treaty providing for such a union is thus outlined: It should provide for the longest possible term of duration. The contracting nations are to regulate their commercial policy according to a unified plan and will act as a unit in the negotiation of commercial treaties with other countries. "In order to make this possible," says the resolution. "the two governments must first come to an agreement as to the customs tariff which is to be used as a basis for negotiations. This will be accomplished most successfully by the adoption of a common tariff system."

The resolution gives expression to the belief that mutual support should make it possible for the two nations to bring all their economic powers to full development, increasing the consuming power of the population, lower the cost of production, specialize industry, and win for themselves an increasing share in international commerce. "It is especially desirable that the monarchy and the German Empire shall favor each other in tariff matters to the greatest extent compatible with a due regard for the protection of home industries, allowing for differences in the conditions of production. Through careful reconciliation of these differences the necessity for such protection (that is, between the two contracting powers) must gradually be lessened and, whenever possible, set aside." Finally, the resolution recites: "Especially is it to be desired that the commercial union of the central powers shall be recognized in the peace treaties with other states, and that every claim to most favored nation treatment shall be excluded at the outset."

The proposal to exclude claims of other countries to any benefits under this commercial union, on account of the most favored nation treatment, is particularly significant as marking a step in the direction of the American policy of interpreting commercial treaties. In Europe, a treaty extending benefits to a particular nation,

SECRETARY ASKS FOR PATIENCE

Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, in an article in the current number of Harper's Weekly discusses foreign affairs and the situation of the United States. He says patience is necessary if the United States is to gain by diplomacy a recognition of its rights; that the diplomatic method is less spectacular than war, which has a strong appeal to the dramatic emotions of people, but that the slow, safe way is far the better. In part, he says:

"We have no enemies, but we have rights which we cannot yield.

"The man who has anything which anyone else wonts must protect himself or it will be taken from him. This is not so the policeman and the courts are not needed. Even in a church pick pockets have been found. This world is not good enough yet to abolish the use of the safe. To think constantly of war is to bring about war. But to think constantly of the value of peace will not insure peace, when others are on the hunt, not unless the hunted is craven.

"Broadly the question has been presented from the first day of the Administration: Shall we go to war because foreign nations do things which are opposed to the pledges they have given to us and to the world? Our policy is shown in our preparedness programme, our treatment of Mexico, and our attitude toward Europe.

"How many men do you think there are in the United States who believe that it is the holy duty of this country to rush into a neighboring country whenever an American citizen is killed within its borders by ruffians calling themselves an army? If there are many they will yet have abundant opportuinty (I regret to prophesy) to spread a sense of fear—for the time never was when some part of Mexico was not in a turmoil and Americans were safe. The American people who have the making of war would not have stood for war either to seat Huerta or to take the country out of the hands of Carranza and Villa and clean up the Mexican house. And that decision became firmer as they saw what war meant in Europe.

"As to the war in Europe, Chief Justice White said that in securing from Germany a declaration that she would carry on submarine warfare in accordance with the rules on which we insisted the United States has achieved the greatest diplomatic victory of the past generation. We have sought through diplomatic means to gain the recognition of those rights which we might have secured by war. This is the function of diplomacy; but of course it is not picturesque. It always requires time and patience.

"The good lawyer settles his case out of court if he can. And in dealing with foreign Powers the President is the attorney for the people of the United States. He is not a patient man by nature. His own affairs he handles in a very direct and forthright manner. But in handling the affairs of his country the President dare not be rash or do the attractive, dramatic, impulsive thing when the burden of his act must fall on others.

"This nation is not willing to sacrifice self-respect rather than fight. But a courageous and virile people with such a war record as ours and resources of men, money and minerals such as we have is not looking for a fight just to establish its position in the world or out of an insane, egotistic notion that it is its duty to police a world that is the victim of national egotism."

ipso facto extends them to all others, under the most favored nation clause. The American interpretation of such treaties requires that for a third party to enjoy similar benefits it must make similar concessions. It was under the European interpretation that the treaty which Austria effected with Prussia in 1853, reducing import duties, resulted so disastrously for the former because it gave England equal benefit in the Austria market, without any quid pro quo.

Furthermore, the resolution indicates the disposition of Austria to double up with Germany for commercial teamwork. The two countries must be allies in commerce, with peace declared, as they are now allies in war.

These are the combinations which American producers must meet. Armed with what? The Underwood Tariff law and a Democratic Administration? No! With a Republican common-sense administration, and a scientifically drawn protective tariff-law.

AMERICA HELPS WORLD'S TRADE

American manufacturers are getting into a position to finance the trade of all the world, said Edward N. Hurley, vice-chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, in a speech to the New York Trade Press Association.

He told the trade journal men that they should educate their readers to place the importance of running a factory to its capacity above the expansion of plant and equipment.

"I hope," said Mr. Hurley, "that instead of rushing to build additions to their plants, the manufacturers will ascertain when their present equipment has reached the maximum day work capacity and then develop the night shift."

This would prevent overproduction in slack times. Overproduction, Mr. Hurley said, is the cause of low prices which in turn cause business depression. In regard to the foreign trade of this country he said:

"A combination of German metal buyers controls the world market for lead, copper, zinc and other metals. It has compelled our producers to sell copper to foreign buyers at lower prices than to our home users, being able to do this because it deals with our producers as individuals and plays one against the other.

"A combination of English brokers controls thep rice of coal supplied to foreign vessels bunkering in our ports and compels our coal miners to sell to those foreign interests at lower figures than are charged our own manufacturers.

"When we buy abroad we are at the mercy of the foreign seller' and when we sell abroad we are at the mercy of the foreign buyer. The reason is that the European industries are organized scientifically to capture foreign trade and get all there is out of it.

"Our methods of disposing of our natural products, our valuable raw materials, which are the chief wealth of our country, should bec hanged. We should adopt a more practical business method.

"Our buyers in foreign countries find that the great manufacturing interests have been formed into combinations and business has to be done with a central selling agency. But the foreign buyer in the United States finds a market without system, with scores or hundreds of individuals ruthlessly cutting prices in bidding against one another."

BOOM IN TRADE, SAYS U. S. RESERVE BOARD

Washington— Business prospects are excellent in each of the twelve Federal reserve districts, according to the monthly report of Federal reserve agents made public today. Practically every one of the reserve districts has some measure of optimism to report and talk of the uncertain character of the present industrial activity is said to be steadily decreasing.

The Boston district reports "exceptionally good business inp ractically every line." The cotton and worsted mills are said to be well sold up, with many mills running overtime. Disturbing factors in some lines are discerned in the increasing cost of raw material and theu nrest of labor.

The reserve agent at New York says that "there are more products and workers and wages paid than ever before." The greatest increases in production were shown by concerns manufacturing automobiles, tools, firearms and by rolling mills. Buyers of general merchandise are visiting the New York market earlier in the season and in greater numbers than usual.

IRISH DENOUNCE PROPAGANDA PLOT

New York—The call for a "conference of men and women of the Irish race in America," to be held in the Astor Hotel on March 4 and 5, was denounced last night at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Irish Societies held in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The committee passed resolutions stating that many well known Irishmen wered rawn into the proposed movement without investigation and a knowledge of its real purpose, which is said to be a violent attack on American neutrality. Patrick Egan, formerly American Minister to Chili, said it was an attempt to make the American public believe the Irish in America are opposing President Wilson's efforts at neutrality.

NEW YORK FACES BIG JUMP IN TAXES

New York—The tax rate for 1916 will be eleven to seventeen points higher than that for last year. Richmond borough alone will get a reduced rate. It was fixed in an ordinance submitted yesterday to the Board of Aldermen by its finance committee. A special meeting of the board was called for next Friday afternoon to act on the report. The rate, figured out by the Department of Taxes and the Department of Finance, varies in the different boroughs as follows:

Manhattan, 2.04; Bronx, 2.09; Brooklyn, 2.08; Queens, 2.06; and Richmond, 2.13.

The total budget for 1916—$212,956,177 54—includes the direct State tax of $13,975,021.73. This direct tax is largely responsible for the tremendous jump in the rate.

OSWEGO BOYS HERE TO WIN

They Succeeded, But Not By a Score Twisted Out of Proportion by Character of Work.

Crippled by the absence of two of its players, the Maccabee team was defeated in a sensational game of basketball last night on the court at Church's hall by the fast Victor five of Oswego. The final score was 31-22.

Until the closing minutes of the game, thel ocal team was in the lead at all times. The visitors were completely outplayed in the first period, the half ending with thes core at 14 to 9 in the Maccabee's favor. Failure to guard Keenan, the fast Oswego forward resulted in thhe tables being turned in the last five minutes of play. The Oswego boy made six field baskets in rapid succession, placing his team far in thef ront and with victory firm in its grasp.

Only four field baskets were scored by the Victors in the first half, due to the close guarding of the locals, while Snow, Reynolds and Crockett found the net at frequent intervals.

Crockett starred for the local team, securing two field baskets himself and keeping his opponent down to one lone tally, which was made in the second half. The battle between these two players was one of the features of the game. Brandes, of the Oswego team, featured by his close guarding of Reynolds who was unable to secure but two baskets in each period.

Summary:

| Maccabees | | Victor Five |
|---|---|---|
| Snow, Reynolds | | Keenan, Moseburger |
| | Forwards | |
| Crockett | Center | Taylor |
| Merrill, Rohrbaugh | | Stevens, Brandes |
| | Guards | |

Court Rules That While Experimental Marriage Is a Sad One, the Ties Cannot Be Annulled.

Oswego—Mrs. Mary Fuller of W. Monroe is not entitled to a separation and support from her aged husband. Almon Fuller, because of alleged cruel and inhuman treatment, according to Justice P. C. J. DeAngelis in a decision filed yesterday on an action tried at the February Special Term here. The court intimates in his memorandum accompanying the decision that the couple made a mistake to marry at such advanced ages, she being 64 and he 79 at the time. They are now respectively 71 and 86. They were married March 27, 1909, and separated June 22, 1910. Judge H. D. Coville, attorney for the defendant, received a copy of Justice DeAngelis' memorandum yesterday. It was in part as follows:

"This case is one where a man at 79 and a woman at 64 sought to mate and a trial of a trifle more than a year disclosed the failure of the experiment. Their intentions doubtless were good but the ordinary trials of a farm life dissipated their dreams and the tie that bound them together was too fragile and was easily severed."

"The court finds that there is no evidence of cruel and inhuman treatment under the definition of such treatment as made by the Court of Appeals.

"The specific acts of cruel and inhuman treatment alleged to have been practiced by the defendant upon the plaintiff, are, among others, as follows: He compelled her to drive the team unloading hay with a horse fork, to help unload wood, when she was unable to perform and endure such work; he compelled her to walk home from Central Square when she was unable to do so; he requested her to go down into the woods to help him cut wood; he compelled her to carry milk from the barn, empty and strain the milk; feed the pigs and hens and a calf, do cooking and washing for Samuel Close, her husband's hired man; compelled her to wait on several hired men beside her own family work; and would not let her have tea or coffee to drink nor prepare any for the hired men; would not let her have money for the table when there was plenty of it in the house; compelled her to patch and sew for him and complained when she spent five cents for a spool of thread.

Mrs. Fuller also claimed that after agreeing to let her granddaughter live with them her husband ordered the young woman out of the house and that he refused to eat at the same table with her daughter.

Mrs. Fuller also claimed on the stand that her husband said sheh ad a low forehead and that people with low foreheads were not right. This evidence and other statements were ordered thrown out as the allegations were not made in complaint. No costs are imposed.

Washington—The Senate today up held the hands of President Wilson in the submarine situation. By an overwhelming vote of 68 ayes to 14 noes it laid on the table without debate ther esolution of Senator Gore, Democrat, of Oklahoma, which, if adopted, would have withdrawn from American citizens the right to take passage on armed belligerent ships whether armed for offence or defense.

OFFICIAL DELEGATION GOES TO SOUTH AMERICA

Washington —Arrangements were completed today for the South American visit of the United States Section of the International High Commission. It will continue the work begun at the Pan-American Financial Conference held last May.

The tour will include conferences with financiers and public officials of several countries, and participation in the annual meeting of the full commission at Buenbs Aires. There the questions of uniform legislation on many topics of commercial interest will be discussed.

BAY STATE QUARRY WORKERS STRIKE

Quincy, Mass.—Nearly four thousand workers employed at quarries here and at other centres struck today because of failure to agree with manufacturers regarding wages.

About 2,500 men quit work here, upward of 1,000 at Rockport and over 200 at Milford, N. H. Operations were suspended at all the plants, and 4,000 other employes not immediately concerned in the strike were thrown out of work.

THE QUIRK TODAY

"The City," which has been called "an enduring monument to the genius of the American playwright," and "the greatest American drama ever written," created a never-to-be-forgotten sensation in New York, on the night of its first performance at the Lyric Theatre.

"The City," is the story of the lure and lust of the crowded places, where the battle is to the strong and the race to the swift. It deals powerfully with a powerful theme. It is epochal, cataclysmic almost in its terrible sweep and merciless logic.

In "The City" men and women develop their own weaknesses. Amidst the clash and crash or human passions in the Great Town, the ancient doctrines "of the sins of the father" is visited to the full on the heads of George Rand, jr., his unfortunate sister and others involved with them in the crucible of "The City."

SECRETARY OF STATE GETS REMORSE MONEY

Albany—A draft for $800 was received by Secretary of State Hugo today with the request that it be added to the State's 'conscience fund.' This is believed to be the largest contribution of thisn ature ever received by State officials. No one here had any idea of the identity of the sender. The draft was drawn by a Utica bonk upon a New York bank. The letter accompanying it, written on stationary of a Utica hotel, was signed, "A Citizen."

MAILS BY THE AIR PLEASE AVIATORS

Expert Describes Machines Government Would Need.

TO CONQUER WINTER'S ICE.

Routes In Alaska and Massachusetts Could Be Covered In All Kinds of Weather With Aviation Service—Officials Think a Tremendous Amount of Money Would Be Saved.

Aviators of the country are looking with pleasure toward the scheme that the United States proposes to conquer the rigors of Massachusetts bay and ice imprisoned Alaska in order to get the mails through to sections that are usually isolated during the winter. The postoffice department has asked bids for contracts and machines to carry the mails in these sections.

If this plan proves successful it will go far to determine the practical use of aeroplanes in wartime, and the United States is said to be utilizing this scheme to determine the best kind of air craft for use during conflicts.

Charles A. Wright of Riverton, N. J. is the president of the Aviation league which trains young men to fly. He is an enthusiast in aviation and regards the proposed federal mail scheme as a sane way to carry the mails, but he takes issue with the federal bids in calling for aeroplanes of the description included in the proposals.

Heavier Machines Needed.

"This plan is workable," said Mr. Wright, "but the government should at least be prepared to spend $5 a mile on the experiment. However, to carry such mails as Uncle Sam wishes the government must construct heavier machines than any that are in use in this country.

"Only one machine was ever built in this country that would fulfill the requirements—the America, built by Rodman Wanamaker to cross the Atlantic. This machine has a carrying capacity of 4,500 pounds, which is 1,500 in excess of that demanded by the government. The America cost $90,000 to build. This makes the cost of a suitable machine alone three times as great as the United States wishes to pay.

"The practical use of the aeroplane as a commercial factor is in the air, so to speak. It costs too much to use them in this way just now, though in the European war they are demonstrating their value in every possible manner, especially in being the men-of-war of the air."

R. W. Knight, vice president of the Aviation league, coincided with President Wright's remarks, but added that it would be an easy matter to get plenty of machines that could transport 500 pounds of mail easily.

Routes and Service.

The routes and character of service now advertised and the cost of the present service follow:

MASSACHUSETTS.

From New Bedford by Wood's Hole and Oak Bluffs to Nantucket, fifty-six miles and return, thirteen times a week from June 15 to Sept. 14 and six times a week during the remaining nine months of the year; weight limit, 3,000 pounds per trip; cost of present service, $22,000 a year.

ALASKA.

From Valdez to Fairbanks, 358 miles, three times a week all the year for transportation of 1,600 (or 3,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $127,580 a year.

From Fairbanks to Tanana, 162 miles, three times a week all the year, for transportation of 1,000 (or 2,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, twenty-four hours; cost of present service, $23,153.84 a year.

From Tanana to Kaltag, 381 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 800 (or 1,600) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $37,723.49 a year.

From Kaltag to Nome, 225 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 600 (or 1,200) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $15,850 a year.

From Seward to Iditarod, 380 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 1,000 (or 2,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, two days; cost of present service, $22,865 a year.

From Iditarod to Nome, 220 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 800 (or 1,600) pounds of mail each trip; running time, twenty-four hours; cost of present service, $24,862.12 a year.

From Seward to Anchorage, 110 miles, twice a week all the year, for transportation of 500 (or 1,000) pounds of mail each trip; running time, ten hours; cost of present service, $4,220 a year.

If the exacting weather conditions and weight requirements of the Massachusetts route can be met by aerial carriers it presents an excellent opportunity for improvement of mail service by this means.

Need of improvement of the Alaskan mail service is clear, and it is believed the aeroplane offers a practical means of providing better facilities there.

CITY MANAGEMENT WORKS WONDERS.

What New Methods Have Accomplished in Certain Municipalities.

The misrule of American cities is notorious at home and abroad, writes Charles B. Strayer in Leslie's Weekly. Graft is rampant. Political spoilsmen mulct our cities and the taxpayers foot the bills. German municipalities, on the other hand, are famous throughout the world for the absence of graft and the efficiency of their administration. There the administration of cities is a distinct profession to which men devote their lives. The administrator who has made a good record in one city is called from a small municipality to a larger one.

"Great industrial corporations, such as the Standard Oil company and the United States Steel corporation, are conducted with an efficiency nowhere excelled. The taxpayers can have the same results in municipal administration whenever they get thoroughly tired of being robbed by the politicians and grafters and demand municipal reform.

"An increasing number of American cities are reaping the benefits of administration by managers chosen because of proved ability to conduct great enterprises. Gaylord C. Cummin, as manager of Jackson, Mich., worked wonders in that city of 35,000 people in one year. Municipal employees were taken out of politics. Property to the value of $383,000, formerly exempted from taxation without legal reason, was restored to the tax rolls. The poor department was consolidated with the organized charities, with a trained social worker at the head. Rigid milk inspection was inaugurated and sanitary inspection made efficient for the first time. Without raising the tax rate these and numerous other reforms were inaugurated, a floating deficit of $20,000 wiped out, the city's net indebtedness reduced $50,000 and a cash balance left of $10,000, exclusive of the sinking fund."

CHILDREN'S DRESSES.

Hints to Mothers Who Make Hand Embroidered Frocks at Home.

A mother can scarcely resist adding a few touches of hand embroidery on a frock she makes for her children, and yet she feels that it requires so much time to do the work that she must forego the pleasure and let her machine make all the stitches. But by picking out a few simple sprays and letting them ornament a yoke or a panel it would not take so long to embroider them on a dress. By using lace in combination with the hand touches it always looks as though there is more work on the frock than there really is. For instance, one dress which called forth much admiration has been made of finest nainsook. From the neck to the bottom in front there is a panel formed of two inch strips of lace and tucked material. Along either side of the panel there are embroidered sprays and leaves—only a few, yet there are sufficient to give the impression that a great amount of handwork has been added.

Another dress had a shallow yoke on which a few butterflies were embroidered. The baby waist was gained by the addition of beading through which pink ribbon was run.

Smocking is not to be forgotten when speaking of hand touches on children's frocks. For a child four years of age a very pretty dress might be made of natural colored pongee. Use the diamond shaped smocking to give fullness at the front and back of the dress and run some of it at the cuffs, so that the sleeves will be sufficiently full. Do the smocking in brown if you wish to gain a truly artistic effect.

Sound Waves.

A sound wave consists of an alternate compression and refraction of the air. A singular result of this was noted after a great powder explosion at Erith, England, in 1864. The leaded glass windows of a church several miles away were all strongly bent inward on all sides of the church. The explanation was given in these words: "The sound wave on reaching the church separated right and left, and for a moment the edifice was clasped by a girdle of intensely compressed air, which forced all its windows inward." The subsequent dilation of the air was insufficient to force the bent panes back into shape.

A Singular Case of Resurrection

By F. A. MITCHEL

The investigators of the Rockefeller institute may be very proud of themselves. Indeed, they have reason to be. They have substituted live parts of the human body for dead parts; they have set heart substance beating outside its proper place in a man's breast. If they keep on they may in time make a man out of parts of other men. But if the stories of what Indian fakirs have done in keeping persons alive in a comatose condition for many years is true these Rockefellers or scientific fellers or whatever they are have yet much to learn from an antique and apparently undeveloped civilization.

There is a story going the rounds among the undergraduates of a certain university which, if it can be substantiated, puts the modern scientific investigator to shame. Arnold Gereau, assistant professor of chemistry—he has charge of the laboratory—is one of those phenomena who spring up once in a century. He is very young, and it is well known that he was born with certain mental powers, a certain supernatural knowledge of things on which many a man has studied for a lifetime without making any progress whatever.

Willbur Stockbridge, a member of the class of '15, so the story goes, one day went to Professor Gereau with a yellow bit of paper on which was written in old English style:

> This is the body of William Arbuckle, private in his majesty's —th foot. Captured in the patriot lines with maps showing our fortifications on the upper part of Manhattan Island. He was condemned for a spy. An Indian serving with the same regiment—he had joined it at Singapore—proposed to General Washington to put the man to sleep for an indefinite period instead of executing him. The general, who was averse to the execution, consented, and Arbuckle was turned over to the Indian, who claims that any time after fifty or even a hundred years life will still be in the body. But not one man in many millions will be able to effect a resurrection.

Young Stockbridge told the professor that in excavating for building purposes on the upper part of Manhattan Island on property owned by his family a tomb had been discovered containing the body of a man in British uniform of a former period. The paper had been found in the lead coffin in which the body had been buried.

Gereau—mind you, I don't vouch for this—arranged with the student to bring the find to the laboratory, which at the time was closed on account of the spring recess and would therefore be at the professor's individual disposal. No one has attempted to give the process by which Gereau manipulated the remains of Private Arbuckle, but it is claimed that he effected a resurrection. The professor avers that he worked on lines which are being followed by modern scientific investigators. He must have had an inkling of the method by which animation was suspended by the Indian or he would not have been able to restore it by reverse action, which, he says, he applied. He gives as a fundamental principle that the Indian knew how to suspend—not kill—the action of the heart, and Gereau restored the pulsations, which are the basis of animal life.

Whether the story is true or false there is one part of it that fits in with modern scientific investigation. It is said that Gereau found that certain members of the body had suffered from the long suspension of their functions. The resurrected man showed signs of decay, and the professor feared that, though he had remained in an ordinary condition of health for more than 130 years, he would die within a few hours after resurrection.

A test was begun of different organs, and the first tested—the kidneys—showed decay. Gereau at once telephoned to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for a pair of sound kidneys and, removing the ones affected, introduced the new ones. He supposed for some time that Arbuckle had died under the operation, but half a bottle of Irish whisky brought him round. The liver was next tackled, and half of it replaced. There were other parts to be substituted, but those mentioned were the principal replacements.

These operations required several hours, and another hour passed before Private Arbuckle spoke. Then he opened his eyes and cried out in a voice that seemed to come through dry leather:

"Corporal of the guard!"

Gereau was delighted. It looked as if he might save his patient, for while the man had doubtless been deanimated in good health his being brought back to consciousness was not only a difficult matter, but a dangerous one.

There are several versions of the rest of the story. Some say that Arbuckle was sufficiently restored to remember and speak of his expected execution. Others aver that Gereau, finding his breathing defective, worked his arms vigorously, but in spite of his efforts the man died.

It is said that at one time Arbuckle sat up and was given a stiff drink. Raising the glass he shouted in a hoarse like voice:

"To his gracious majesty King George. God bless him and confound his rebellious subjects!"

Stockbridge and Gereau have both been asked to make a statement, but have refused either to affirm or deny the story. It is suspected that they are afraid of coming under the ban of the law, which might involve them in a charge of murder.

GUESTROOM COMFORT.

Simple Things to Do to Make Guests Feel at Home.

A few dollars spent now and again in making our guestrooms comfortable are not spent amiss. Everybody knows how uncomfortable one can be in a badly furnished bedroom, and everybody knows how difficult it would be to complain to one's hostess that there were not bedclothes enough, that there was no soap, that the springs creaked, that the windows rattled or that anything else about the room one slept in as a guest was uncomfortable. It is up to the hostess herself to know that her guestrooms are comfortable.

At the country house of a fashionable hostess the guests were asked after a week end party to write criticism of their rooms. The reading of the criticisms brought much entertainment to everybody concerned and suggested a custom that might bring advantage to guests, if not to hostesses. But so long as this custom is not in force look to the comfort of the rooms you ask your guests to sleep in. The best way to do this is to sleep in each room and then you will know whether or not it is really comfortable and if it is not what to do to make it so.

See to it that your beds are well supplied with covers. In each room have an extra supply of blankets in a box at the foot of the bed or on a close shelf.

A cushion or two on the foot of the bed covered with washable covers that can be slipped under a hollow in a tired back or under an aching head should be in every guestroom.

Some sort of bedside light is a great convenience, so that the tired guest may go early to bed and read there or the wakeful one may have light in the night.

A box containing a few crackers is never amiss by the bedside. Many times wakefulness can be conquered with a slowly munched biscuit.

A hot water bag filled on a cold night when the guest retires also gives great comfort. There should always be cool drinking water at hand too. Writing materials should be offered either in the bedroom or in the library or living room. A screen to shield the bed from drafts is another thoughtful addition to the guestroom equipment.

Almond Chips.

Half a pound of sugar, half a pound of flour, quarter of a pound of butter. Work the ingredients together, as though making pie crust, and when well mixed add the yolk of one egg well beaten. Spread like batter in pans, making the layer as thin as possible and using a knife for the purpose. Paint the top with an egg yolk mixed with enough water and sugar to make a sirup. Strew the tops of the cakes with the following mixture: Half a pound of finely chopped candied peel, one-fourth pound of almonds blanched and chopped, one-fourth pound of cinnamon. Bake in a moderate oven. Cut in squares while hot.

Baked Codfish Puffs.

One package shredded codfish, one quart mashed potatoes, one cup cream sauce, one-eighth teaspoonful paprika, one teaspoonful grated onion, one teaspoonful butter. Put the shredded codfish into bowl, cover with boiling water and let stand until cool, then press until dry and add to the hot mashed potatoes; mix well and add the cream sauce, onion, paprika; beat all well together. Brush bake dish with melted butter and put in the mixture rough the top with fork; place in oven and bake twenty-five minutes, or until brown.

On Washington's Errand and His Own

By ETHEL HOLMES

One visiting the town of Dobbs Ferry, on the east bank of the Hudson and some twenty miles from New York, will find himself in a place that has been called by its present name for so long that no one, except perhaps some of the present residents, knows the date. Doubtless Mr. Dobbs ran a ferry there to some point across the Hudson. He has passed away long ago, but his name remains.

There is another name connected with Dobbs Ferry of the more importance—that is, George Washington. One mounting the declivity leading up from the railway station and following the road leading southward will pass a frame house before which runs a wall to which is attached a tablet stating that it was the headquarters of General Washington during the Revolutionary war.

One day a country lad named Enoch Weatherby, who was a member of the Revolutionary army and had not seen his best girl in New York city for some time, got leave to go there for the purpose of meeting her. Being a patriotic youth, he went to General Washington and, telling him what he was about to do, asked the general if he could be of any service to him in bringing information of the British army, which was at that time in possession of the city.

The general told Enoch that he very much desired to know how many troops were there, how many cannon and whether any preparations were being made for a movement. Enoch promised to gain what information he could.

That night the youngster put a load of farm produce in his boat on the river and the next morning started with the outgoing tide for New York. On reaching Spuyten Duyvil creek he turned into it and when he arrived at Kingsbridge, leaving his boat under the bridge, proceeded on foot to the city, some nine or ten miles away. There was a British soldier at the bridge, but Enoch, being loaded with produce, was suffered to pass, and whenever he was stopped on the way a few eggs or a pound of butter was sufficient to pass him.

New York was then all at the southern end of the island, and Enoch's girl, Becky Bleecker, lived at the lower end of Greenwich street, near where it joins the Battery. He found Becky, and she was delighted to see him, for there was little communication between the American troops in the region beyond Spuyten Duyvil creek and the city. Enoch while in New York was continually going about, counting the guns he saw and estimating the number of the soldiers.

One day he made bold to sketch a redoubt in the region that is now Central park and was observed doing so by a sentry. The soldier called the corporal of the guard and by him sent a message to the commanding officer that a man had been seen sketching the works. By this time Enoch had left, and a couple of men were sent to bring him back. Enoch soon discovered that he was being pursued, and, though the men most of the time kept him in sight, he succeeded in reaching Becky Bleecker's home without being arrested.

Becky put him into the great hall clock, he handing her the memoranda he had accumulated, giving her a kiss at the same time, and she had no sooner taken them than there was a loud rap at the door. She opened it, and two redcoats entered, inquiring for the young fellow who had just come in. Becky declared that they must be mistaken, but the soldiers, having seen him close the door behind him, searched the house. Not thinking to look in the clock, they did not find him. But one man stationed himself at the front of the house, the other at the rear, and Enoch was pinned in.

After they had gone outside Becky returned to Enoch, and he bemoaned the fact that he would not be permitted to take his notes to General Washington. Becky was in terror lest the information he proposed to take away should be captured on him and cause his conviction as a spy. Something must be done before any one came from General Howe and while there were only green soldiers on guard.

Becky resolved to walk out with Enoch's notes and drawings in face of the sentinel at the front door. She did so, and the man essayed to stop her, but she gave him a scornful look and proceeded. She had scarcely got out of sight before a member of the staff came with a sergeant and eight men and gave orders that no one should be permitted to leave the house. Enoch had heard the door shut after Becky and thought it best to come out of hiding. But, since there was nothing found to indicate that he was a spy, after being held for some time he was suffered to go his way.

Meanwhile Becky, presuming that her lover would not be permitted to go back to General Washington, made her way to Kingsbridge, where she found Enoch's boat and pulled herself up to Dobbs Ferry. Mounting the hill to the house where Washington was quartered, she told him the story of Enoch's and her adventures and handed him the memoranda Enoch had collected.

"When Enoch Weatherby returns, if he does," said the general, "come together to see me."

Enoch returned sooner than was expected, and when the lovers called on the general he directed his chaplain to marry them and bestowed upon them a handsome wedding present.

Frock For Gala Occasions.

Fancy frocks of satin crepe are well established in smart favor. This design is in all white, except for belt and tiny bows of turquoise satin.

Here is a charming crepe de Chine, with full skirt trimmed with a series of straight ruffles and a bodice with rounded neck and full, gathered sleeves. In medium size the dress requires 5⅞ yards 36-inch material, but if the ruffles are omitted, 4⅝ yards will be sufficient.

The underbody calls for ⅞ yard 36-inch lining and is made first, for reasons easily acknowledged. Begin by pleating the lower edges of the front as indicated. Next close under-arm and shoulder seams and hem the front. Stitch 2-inch belting to position, lower edged even with underbody.

Next, close the sleeve seam as notched. Gather on crossline of small "o" perforations and ½ inch above; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape underneath. Sew in armhole as notched.

Then close the right shoulder and underarm seams of the outer front and back as notched. Finish the left shoulder and under-arm edges for a closing. Gather the lower edge of waist, then gather the neck edge of the front between double "TT" perforations. Gather on crossline of small perforations in front and back and make 3 rows of gathers above perforations ⅜ inch apart.

Arrange outer front and back on underbody, center-fronts and center-backs even; stitch the neck and lower edges together, under-arm seams even, leaving the outer back free from centerback to the left side edge; draw gathers to the required size and stitch 2¼ inch belting under gathers.

Join skirt gores as notched, leaving left side seam free above large "O" perforation in front gore for placket. Gather upper edges between double "TT" perforations and make 2 rows of shirring below upper edge ⅜ inch apart. Adjust skirt to position. Add ruffles as fancy dictates.

The belt may be of contrasting material.

Retouching the Ready Made

It is not every woman's good fortune to be able to cut and fit and make her own clothes. Some have not the time, while others have not the ability, and many have neither. The busy woman especially hates to give her precious minutes to long hours with the dressmaker, and it is for such that the shops put on their racks and counters such a number of stylish ready made garments. For the fastidious woman, however, it is something of a shock to see herself, so to speak, coming down the street in the identical frock or suit she is wearing. For her there is nothing to do but to invest in the cheaper ready made garments and put the remainder of the allowance into fixings that will make the frock, suit or blouse partake of her own personality. After all, one's clothes should reflect one's personality.

For sheer tailored blouses there is a happy expedient that any woman can resort to with a few stitches, and that is to apply under the sheer material a length of figured or contrasting colored ribbon. This will "dress up" the blouse with the smallest possible expenditure of time and money.

The styles are so accommodating at present that a frock may be completely changed with very little trouble. An imported gown in a smart shop suggests a way of putting "the punch" into a cheap taffeta dance frock. The imported model had a very straight gathered skirt, which was turned under at each side for a distance of four or five inches at the hem to reveal a lace petticoat. This gave a bouffant appearance without interfering with the cut of the skirt. A girdle of old blue velvet contrasted beautifully with the flesh tint of the frock. A tulle scarf was suggested for softening the corsage. A cheap drop skirt on an otherwise good looking dance frock may be omitted entirely, the lace petticoat sufficing to give the fluffy appearance at the foot.

Leather collars and cuffs, from new leather to be bought at a leather house or from the arms of a good pair of kid gloves where the hands are worn out, will make a bought suit take on a different air. A leather belt added in place of the fabric belt will give tone to a Russian blouse coat. New lining will make a cheaper plush coat look much more expensive and dressy, as often the lining is where the manufacturer has saved his pennies to make his profit on the coat.

A large suit skirt may be shirred into fitting at the waist line, and a belt of material, which comes from the piece taken off the hem, added for style.

Braiding on pockets will dress up a plain suit, or the addition of new fur will often help out.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WINTER TASTIES.

FRUIT PANCAKES. — Materials: One cupful of cooked fruit—peaches, apricots, apples; one egg, flavoring to suit fruit, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one cupful of fruit juice or water, sugar to taste, butter or marmalade, lemon rind.

Directions: Pass the fruit through a sieve, add the egg, flavoring, flour, baking powder and fruit juice or water, also sugar to taste. Cook as pancakes. Spread with butter or with marmalade. Roll up, sift sugar and lemon rind over and serve hot.

Walnut Custard Pie.—Materials: Two eggs, a scant half cupful of sugar, salt, two cupfuls of hot milk, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, one-half cupful finely ground English walnuts or pecans and almonds.

Directions: Beat the eggs, add the sugar and salt, pour on the hot milk, strain and add the vanilla and nuts. The nuts will rise to the top and form a tender crust to the custard. Bake in one crust.

Baked Clams, Hunter Style.—Materials: One dozen medium sized clams, finely chopped shallots, mushrooms and bacon, a little paprika, melted butter, parsley.

Directions: Open the clams, leave them on the half shell; besprinkle with finely chopped shallots, mushrooms and bacon; season with paprika pepper and cover the surface with breadcrumbs. Besprinkle with melted butter, place on a baking pan in a hot oven and cook about ten minutes and color nicely. When done arrange them on a folded napkin and garnish with parsley.

Baked Eggs With Cheese.—Materials: Four eggs, a tablespoonful cheese, cream sauce, hot water, seasoning.

Directions: Make a cream sauce, season and pour half into a baking dish. Break in the eggs, stir the cheese into remaining sauce. Pour over the top and bake, standing the dish in another containing hot water. Bake twelve minutes. Individual dishes are nice.

One of the Spring Models That Promises to Be Very Popular.

SO CHIC.

This elongated peach basket commands all the favorite spring straws and novelty weaves. This one is deep tan with a satin rose set slightly one side of the center front. What gives style to this hat is the enveloping veil of coarse mesh bound with brown ribbon and "belted" at the neck with a slightly wider ribbon held by a rose matching the one on the hat.

BRANDIES PAYS BACK MONEY

Washington — The relations of Louis D. Brandeis to the United Shoe Machinery Company and his conduct while its counsel and afterward are defended by his law partner, Edward F. McClennen, of Boston. He testified before the Senate sub-committee investigating Mr. Brandeis' fitness to be a Supreme CoureJustice.

McClennen's testimony dealt chiefly with Brandeis' resignation from the company's directorate in 1906, the retention in 1911 of the Brandeis firm as counsel for the manufacturers who sought to obtain machinery free from conditions imposed by the company's leases, and the publication of an opinion, given in 1910 by the Brandeis firm, that the leases were invalid under the anti-trust law.

Brandeis resigned from the company's board of directors, the witness declared, because he could not bring about the correction of certain features of the leases he regarded as objectionable, and for which he felt he was in a measure responsible so long as he remained a director.

The employment of the Brandeis firm by shoe manufacturers fighting the machinery company, five years after Brandeis had resigned, was explained by McClennen. He said the manufacturers paid the firm $2,500 and Brandeis paid back that amount from his own personal funds.

GERMAN REPLY TO ASQUITH

Berlin—The Cologne Gazette commenting on Premier Asquith's recent statement on peace conditions declares the German answer will be greater violence. The paper says:

"We were fallen upon and defended ourselves successfully. We then used the privilege of the conqueror and showed our foes our will for peace. They answer not only with the declaration that thye desire to continue the war but threaten us with destruction.

"To that the German answer is, 'Very well we will go on fighting and make your destruction our goal. We imagine you already have made sufficient acquaintance with the violence and power of German blows but the German can fight quite differently when he has to do not with chivaldous enemies; but with robbers and murderers.'

"The insolent threats of our enemies will make us harder, more courageous, more happy in death; but also more certain of victory."

BILL TO CHANGE PRIMARY DAY

Date May Be Shifted From April to One Early in May —Legislature is Acting Upon It.

If a bill in the legislature goes through the spring primary for the election of delegates and alternates to the national convention, and the election of state and couny committeemen goes through the primary will not be held on April 4 as the primary law in its present form prescribes, but will be held early in May, either the first or second Tuesday.

The purpose of the change is to have the reapportionment of assembly districts made before the p rimary. As seems probable at the present time Jefferson county will lose an assembly district so that instead of there being two state committeemen for the Republican and Democratic parties from this county there will be but one hereafter. The Republicans have selected as candidates for state committeemen J. W. Cornaire of the first district and A. B. Parker of the second. The Democrats will choose for designations Willis H. Green for the first district and Charles E. Norris for the second. What the outcome will be with a change from two districts to one remains to be seen.

The Republicans and Democrats will select two delegates and two alternates from this congressional district to the national convention. If the Progressive party selects any they will number the same. The Prohibition party will choose as many as the two leading parties together, there being eight from this district, or rather that is the number they are entitled to under the party rules which provide for one delegate for each 200 votes polled at the last gubernatorial election

Chairman Abolished

Monday was the last day for filing oertificates by chairmen of the respective county committees showing the delegates to be elected and the committeemen to be named The Rcpublican, Democratic, Prohibition and Socialist committees filed such certificates The Progressive county committee never organized and there is no chairman

As the delegates and committeemen are all first designated by petition it makes little difference, apparently about the certificate being filed, if the party by reason of having cast a sufficient number of ballots at the last gubernatorial election, is entitled to a place on the ballot The Progressive party will no doubt make some designations. It is supposed that a certificate from the state committee has been filed with the secretary of state so tha delegates at large to the national convention may be selected. The certificate of the Prohibition party filed with the secretary of state covered delegates from congressional conventions as well

Printers having supplies to get out for thep rimary on April 4 were today advised to hold up thep rinting of such supplies as bears the date of April 4, to obviate the necessity of reprinting should the date be changed.

Under the law as it now stands designating foor any of the positions mentioned can be filed with the board of elections between Thursday and a week from Tuesday. In the event that the date of the primary is changed for this year the law will probably include the provision that designations previously filed and within the prescribed time under the existing law shall be valid and no new petition need be filed:

Nelson as a Courtier.

Nelson was the hero of England even in his own time, but not apparently of the court. Samuel Rogers recounts a conversation with him which appears in the life of the poet by R. Ellis Roberts. "I heard him once during dinner," says Rogers, "utter many bitter complaints (which Lady Hamilton vainly attempted to check) of the way he had been treated at court that forenoon—the queen had not condescended to take the slightest notice of him. In truth, Nelson was hated at court; they were jealous of him." But then it must be remembered that Rogers was renowned as a particularly ill natured gossip.

Last Revolutionary Survivor.

The last survivor of the Revolutionary war was John Gray, who died in Noble county, O., aged 104 years, on March 20, 1868. He came to the Buckeye State early in its existence. For some years before he died he drew an annual pension of $500 from the government. General John A. Bingham having got a special act through congress for this. Gray's father was killed at the battle of Stillwater, and he took his place in the army, being only sixteen years old then. He served through the remainder of the war His military record is on file at the office of the state commissioner of soldiers' claims.—Columbus Dispatch.

"Yes, Henry," answered his wife.

"Well," he continued, "your efforts have not been in vain. You have succeeded."

"I'm so glad," she said. "What have I made of you, dear?"

Once more he glanced at the bill.

"A bankrupt," he replied, with a deep sigh.

LLOYD'S RAISES RISKS ON SHIPS FROM U. S.

London—The new German submarine policy inaugurated last midnight caused no panic at Lloyd's today. The recent tendency of insurance rates to harden was continued, however.

In respect to cargoes from America war risk rates were thirty shillings in British ships and twenty-five shillings in American vessels, compared with twenty shillings and fifteen shillings a week ago. Cargoes by way of the Suez Canal were quoted at five guineas.

TRAVIS BLAMES THE ISLAND OF MANHATTAN

Auburn, N. Y.—Eugene M. Travis, State Controller, addressing the Chamber of Commerce here last night, declared New York city was of the State government. He said he was opposed to the city's efforts to obtain a share of the State highway funds, and added that he favored a smadl direct tax throughout the state

Major General John F. O'Ryan, of the National Guard, also spoke and urged the federalization of the National Guard.

THREE MEN KILLED IN CENTRAL WRECK

Albany, N. Y.—A. Jones, E. E. Hoytt and M. A. Magilton, met death and Hugh Cheyene was seriously injured as the result of a collison on the New York Central railroad here early today All of the men were horse trainers.

The wreck was the first of a serious character to have occurred here in some time. Train No. 4, third section, was lying on a side track waiting to be sent into the Albany with it, practically telescoping it. The accident occurred about 5:30 o'clock this morning on the bridge at Livingston avenue.

The cause of thea ccident is said to have been that the brakes on the train which collided with that on the side track failed to work. The locomotive causing the collision was demolished.

THE KNOCKER'S CREED

"I believe that nothing is right. I believe that everything is wrong. I believe that I alone have the right ideas. The town is wrong, the editor is wrong, the teachers are wrong, the people are wrong, the things they are doing are wrong and they are doing them in the wrong way anyhow. I believe I could fix things if they would let me. If they don't I will get a lot of other fellows like myself and we will have a law passed to make others do things the way we want them done. I do not believe that the town ought to grow. It is too big now. I believe in fighting every public improvement and spoiling everybody's pleasure. I am always to the front in opposing things and never yet advanced an idea or supported a movement that would make the people happier or add to the pleasure of man, woman or child. I am opposed to fun and am happiest when at a funeral. I believe in starting reforms that will take the joy out of life. It's a sad world and I am glad of it. Amen."

French Regain Ground; German Guns Pounding

Paris —While it appears certain that Verdun remains the principal objective of the Germans, their offensive is full of possibilities which will be revealed as the great battle progresses.

The region of Douaumont, which comprises three positions—the village, the redoubt and the fort—again today was the center of a fierce German attack. The combat continues about this region. The fact that the Germans succeeded in entering the village is considered by military observers only as a fluctuation in the tide of battle that is likely to occur during any important action.

A concentrated fire of the French guns in the Woevre has forestalled a contemplated sortie on the part of the Germans. In following the present developments the military observers discuss the possibility of an attack on the right bank of the Meuse by the Germons and question whether the Germans will devote more attention in the vicinity of Fresnes, on the extreme French right. These are among the mysteries of the action.

It becomes evident that the Germans in the battle lasting from February 21 to 26 used only part of their forces. Although they had put in line seven army corps there must have been an imperative reason for thus dividing their forces, and it is attributed to the lack of space, the sector which was the scene of the furious combats being extremely small—not more than ten milometres long.

There also is speculation as to the duration of the battle. Comparison of the fighting around Verdun is being made with the fights on the Isonzo and at Czernowitz, each of which lasted about a month. The battle at Czernowitz is considered as particularly comparable with that at Verdun, it having been on a limited front and consistinng of a series of extremely vigorous frontal attacks, seperated by pauses.

One attack against Douaumont, according to a wounded German, was led by an entire brigade of the Fourteenth Hanoverian regiment, of extremely which this man was a member. He says the brigade was literally decimated by the French quick firers.

Documents found on prisoners establish without doubt that the object of the offensive of the Germans is Verdun, "the last rampart of French resistance."

One of the German general orders of the day found on an officer, and signed by the chief of the General Staff, requests the troops to conduct themselves worthily in the battle' "which will decide the fate of France."

Milk Peddlers Only Must Pay the Higher Fee

To satisfy inquiries which have been made since the Board of Health at its last meeting voted to increase the license fee to peddlers as well as to make bacteriological tests, of the milk intended for consumption, it has been announced by Dr. W. W. Kennedy, inspector, that the new regulations will be operative commencing with the 1st day of April.

"A number of people have taken a wrong conception of the board's rulings," Dr. Kennedy advised. "The fee of $15 applies only to peddlers. Grocers and other merchants, as well as dairies with three cows or less pay the $1 fee, as formerly."

The opinion was expressed by Dr. Kennedy that the significance of the bacteriological test ordered is not fully realized in certain quarters. Particularly important is it to the consumers of the milk who have heretofore been completely at the mercy of the peddler, who, it can be justly assumed, is not in all cases a careful person insofar as safeguards of health are concerned. A proper enforcement of the new provision means that the consumer will not be imposed upon, Dr. Kennedy stated.

100 Brewing Co's Indicted by U. S. Grand Jury

Pittsburg—The United States Brewers' Association, with offices in New York, and 100 brewing companies, all of Pennsylvania, were indicted late today by the United States Grand Jury, which has been investigating contributions by the liquor interests to political campaign funds.

The indictments charge principally conspiracy by the brewing companies in the unlawful expenditure of money in Federal elections. No individuals aer mentioned in the indictments. A million and a half dollars in fines can be collected if convictions are obtained.

An indictment was returned against the United States Brewers Association, but not the Pennsylvania Brewers Association, both of which were under investigation, because the first is a corporation and the latter is not.

Fifty-eight of the companies named are members of the Pennsylvania Brewers Association and forty-two are members of the United States Brewers Association. The companies in the first named group are accused jointly of conspiracy entered into, it is alleged, on September 1, 1912, "unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, fraudulently and feloniously" to make contributions to political campaigns at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or Representatives in Congress were to be voted for.

The indictments are based on section 83 of the Federal Penal Code, the so-called Federal corrupt practices act, and section 37 of the same act. Under the sections fines not exceeding $5,000 in the first and $10,000 in the second may be assessed. There is also a provision providing for the imprisonment of officers and directors of the corporations under both sections.

Among the brewing companies named in the indictments are the Pittsburg Brewing Company, the Independent Brewing Company and the Fort Pitt Company, all of Pittsburg, and the following concerns in situated in Philadelphia.

American Brewing company, J. & P. Baltz Brewing company, Louis Bergdoll Brewing company, Bergner & Engel Brewing Company, Class & Nachod Brewing company, Consumers Brewing company, Fred Fell Brewing company, Theodore Finkenauer Brewing company, Liebert & Obert Brewing company, Philadelphia Brewing company, Premier Brewnig company, Rieger & Gretz Brewing company, Peter Schemm & Son, C. Schmidt & Sons Brewing company and the Robert Smith Ale Brewing company.

3,100 SOLDIERS LOST ON CRUISER

Paris— The French Ministry of Marine announced today that there were nearly 4,000 men on board the French auxiliary cruiser La Provence when she was sunk in the Mediterranean on February 26.

On board the Provence were the staff of the Third Colonial Infantry Regiment, the Third Battalion, the second company of the First Battalion, theSecond Machine Gun company and one extra company.

The official report says:

"The French auxiliary cruiser Provence ,engaged in transporting troops to Salonica was sunk in the Mediterranean on February 26. Two hundred and ninety-six survivors have been brought to Malta, and about four hundred to Melos, by French and British patrol vessels summoned by wireless.

"No signs of a submarine were noticed either before or after. La Provence was armed with five cannon of fourteen centimeters, two or fifty seven millimeters and four of forty-seven milimeters."

It was originally stated that there were about 1,800 men on the vessel when she sank and that 870 were saved. No further survivors have been reported by the Ministry of Marine, so it is probable that 3100 lives were lost.

LIVES LOST IN ATLANTIC GALE

Boston—A gale that is sweeping the Atlantic Coast from Maine to Hatteras is believed already to have collected a toll of five lives of Scituate, at the northern entrance to Boston Harbor.

The gale, which has assumed the proportions of a blizzard here, drove a barge on the rocks there and wrecked it. It is feared early this morning that the five men on board are lost.

This barge was one of three in a tow, all of them being carried away from their tug by the storm. The one that was wrecked on the rocks was separated from the two others, and they are drifting before the gale.

Lifeboats cannot put off from the shore because of thhe tremendous surf, and steam vessels have put out from the harbor hoping to save the men on the other barges.

CONCERT QUARTETTE PLEASED LARGE AUDIENCE

St. Joseph's Council, K. of C., is being congratulated today by everybody who attended last night's performance of the Chapel Quartette, comprising such artists as the Misses Janet Lindsay, violinist; Sarah Tomlinson, contralto; Isabella Vaughn, reader, and Rose Marks, pianist.

The program opened with an ensemble—"Spring," by Hildach, and from that time until the entire company produced "Annie Laurie," the music was of the kind that brings joy to the most heardened heart.

The Evening Times joins with the Knights an dtheir fair ladies in hoping the next visit of the Chapels may not occur one year hence.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA REHEARSAL TOMORROW

The Fulton (our) Symphony Orchestra will hold rehearsal in Davis's hall, tomorrow at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

BARNUM'S HORSE HELD THE SPIRIT OF THE RING

When Jerome Barnum, of East 7th st. removed the bridle from his horse in 1st st., yesterday afternoon, to take the fixture into a harness shop for repairs, he believed he was secure in leaving the steed less the piece of headgear standing in the street, but his confidence was misplaced.

The "trusty" steed sent all its precedents into thin air, It kicked itself loose from the cutter and made a bee line through the downtown section and into Rochester st., where Officer Brown stopped further progress. Before starting on its circus stunt the naughty horse was able to inflict a lot of damage to the cutter, which was overturned in the flight.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO INTRODUCE A NOVELTY

One of the numbers on the Fulton Symphony's program is novel, say the critics who have listened to the rehearsals. It is a special arrangement of "Berceuse" from Jocelyn, by F. Jess Newton, opening with two flutes played by Messrs. Frank G. Barnes and Byron J. Newton, and then taken up by Theo. H. Webb, horn, for a few bars, who is followed by flute, clarinets, cornets, horns and trombone in the hannds of Messrs. Hayes, Allen, Ferguson, Crowe, Guernsey, Guile and Rogers, who make the finale superb.

SOMEBODY MUST PAY

If wages of railroad men are increased, railroad rates must be increased or our railways go into bankruptcy. One-sixth of their mileage is now in receiver's hands. What more need be said?

If the wages of coal miners are increased, the public must pay more for its coal bills Let it not complain in future if it now silently acquiesces in the miners' demand for higher wages and shorter hours.

If wages go up and working hours are cut down, the cost of living must increase for the ultimate consumer foots the bill every time.

If the public is willing to pay the increase that the railroad men and coal miners ask, there need be no trouble unless meddlesome demagogues deliberately create it

If labor and capital would unite to drive the demagogues out of business and give the people a rest, there would need be no complaint about the cost of living. Amid the general prosperity, everybody would be able and willing to foot the bill.

And the dinner pail would be fuller and the pay envelope larger.

The disturbing demagogue must go!—Leslie's.

ELMIRA SHOULD HAVE IT

The Short Ballot Bulletin just issued is crowded full of proof of the efficiency of the commission-manager plan of governing cities. Wherever it has been put in operation it has brought great results.

So striking has been the success of the plan that Grand Rapids, Pittsburgh and Springfield, Mass., three large cities, are taking steps to adopt a commission-manager charter. Pittsburgh already is governed by a commission of nine, but it is believed still better results can be obtained by putting a manager in office to conduct the city's business under the direction of the commission.

The trend of sentiment is toward the city manager plan, because it centralizes responsibility, cuts out red tape, gives quick action and makes room for efficiency.

Several cities in New York State are considering the question of adopting this modern method of governing a city. Elmira has been waiting for the Legislature to enact an amendment to the law providing for non-partisan elections, which it is confidently believed will be done at this session.

Elmira should have commission government and it is hoped that in the near future the Municipal Government Association, which has been working on the problem, will have some definite proposition to submit to the people of this city.—Elmira Gazette.

"NONE IS" OR "NONE ARE?"

A recent issue of The Bookman contained an article by Florence Finch Kelly, entitled "Speeding-up the Author," that said a number of true things, yet revealed that its author was quite as ignorant, grammatically speaking, as some of the American authors whom she belabored.

Here is a specimen of the grammatical ignorance of Florence Finch Kelly:

"None of the children were present indicates a conviction on the part of Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter, shared, unless their works belie them, by many other American authors, that 'none' means several. There is not a word in the dictionary more emphatically and distinctively of the singular number and to use a plural verb with it is as careless are criminally abusive of the English language as to say 'We is here.' But one finds it so used time and again in current books— the results, doubtless, of speeding-up, of hurry and carelessness."

Now, Mrs. Kelly, you are wrong. The American authors, and you might have added the British authors who use a plural verb with "none" do so because "none" has been used indifferently as a singular and a plural by practically every English writer of distinction from the time of Bacon and Shakespeare down to the present day; and the late Professor Lounsbury of Yale, who knew more about the English language than almost any other gramma..n of the last few decades, said that they were quite justified in their use of the word, and he showed that it was critics of Mrs. Kelly's type, rather than the authors that they accused of a lapse in grammar, who were the real ignoramuses.

The late Richard Grant White, whose knowledge of our mother tongue was second to none in his day and generation, used to assert that the English language was a language without a grammar, and his contention was essentially sound, for our American grammarians, beginning with Lindley Murray, and later hailing Goold Brown as their supreme Master, have been ignorance merely faddists who have manifested an almost shocking ignorance of those fashions of speech which the greater masters of Engglish have used to express their thoughts. — Rochester Herald.

THE FIELD IS NOT CROWDED

So much has been written and said concerning cooperation in everything concerning business life and the conduct of this and every other city that, by adding thereto would not increase the chances of securing a greater measure of it than exists at present. Yet, in spite of the failure of men to work and pull together here in Fulton as they should, no harm can come to anybody by being presented with a view of what is accomplished in the great world outside.

It has been known for many years that Fulton has her problems—problems peculiar to Fulton. Various means have been resorted to to bring about improved conditions, some of them successful, but a majority failing because of lack of co-operation and indifference to the tenets of civic pride. How pleasing it is to note the difference as seen away from here—out in the big busy world, where business men and manufacturers operating in the same lines of trade have found that their interests can be mutually benefited by working together over their problems. How very Utopian is the thought, and yet what a common occurrence it ought to be—not only everywhere, but especially right at home. Cooperation between men engaged in the same lines of trade does not mean that there should be laxity in the spirit of competition, but that if Mr. Merchant south of Cayuga st. is running a keen race for business, there is no reason under the sun why he should not be on the best of terms with Mr. Seller on the side of the slope. Why should Mr. Merchant and Mr. Seller have so much personal feeling bearing down themselves and the entire community? Because of the selfishness which exists in the beast—that's all there is to it.

What a glorious example is set us by the farmers, who, too, are awakening to the advantages of cooperation, the result of finding out that big profits are to be obtained in its observance. Instances are common right at home of the good that comes to the farmers by working together in and out of their Granges, which do not throw a weight of credit upon the side of their neighbors in mercantile lines. But from Kansas there comes a story of a farmers' organization which realized last year 10 per cent on the investment, while the profits enabled a dividend of one cent a bushel being declared on all the grain handled during the year. This farmers' organization has been a marvelous success as a hanndler of corn and grain and stock. This does not mean that cooperation must be necessarily confined to owning and operating a grain market. It will work well in all kinds of harness, and goodness knows the Fulton field is not crowded.

THE HEADY PLAYER

Go to a ball game and watch the winners. They play ball with their heads. The critical fan will always cheer the heady player, no matter if he does miss. He tries, and he tries with his head. He thinks first. The big-league player knows exactly what he is going to do with the ball before it reaches his hands.

In the game of business today, the man who wins is the man who thinks before he throws. He doesn't have to hold the horsehide while he thinks.

Plenty of men can throw to second. Nearly all men can catch on first. A good runner is common. And, to the untutored, this is all there is to a ball game. To the fan there is more.

The difference between a heady player and a ball player is several thonsand dollars a year.—The Silent Partner.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

It was noted in thepress tha tthe same day saw the Senators of Maryland and the members of the Judiciary committee of the New York Assembly both busy giving a large majority vote in favor of woman suffrage.

* * *

Senator Kern of Indiana, as everybody knows, is the majority leader in the United States Senate. When Mrs. Kern the other day offered herself for active service in the suffrage ranks, she was met, as anyone could guess, with no cold shoulder.

* * *

That the woman's rights movement is no isolated phenomenon, but a world wide upheaval of a sex long satisfied with an inferior political and social status, is shown by the protest being made by a group of distinguished Chilian women against laws which give to the husband in Chili the control of the wife's property, her wages, her children, and their property and wages.

* * *

There is one congressman who is going to be put through the third degree by the near-militant suffragists when he next votes "no" on the woman suffrage amendment and explains that he is a suffragist but thinks that suffrage is a question for the states to decide, and that is the congressman who voted "yes" on the bill to give $25,000,000 to help states improve post roads.

He will be invited to explain just why "roads" are federal but "suffrage" is not.

* * *

Judges are notably the conservatives in a community. Cheer therefore is found by thew orkers in the Iowa suffrage campaign by the fact that the Iowa Supreme Court in deciding a recent case went out of its way in both majority and minority decisions to point out that woman suffrage was on its way to the women of the state.

"You've got to come across," was the message received by the assistant of the head of the Public Welfare Department of the City of Chicago. And she did to the extent of a third of her handsome salary of $250 a month. It hurt her feelings so—for she needed the money herself—that she "squealed with the result that in Chicago, there is a pretty scandal involving the mayor and even his wife's relation.

Of course the opponents of woman suffrage rae citing the unsavory event as an argument against woman suffrage. But of course if it is an argument against woman suffrage in Chicago, it is an argument against manhood suffrage all over the country. Can anyone name a city where the poor office holder hasn't had to "come across?" And if neither men or women are fit to vote, who will vote?

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

Chancellor David Starr Jordan, defined thrift as "a determination to live with a margin for future advancement; to earn a little more than one spends or to spend a little less than one earns, getting meanwhile the value in strength, in satisfaction or in other worthy return for the money one feels free to spend."

"The spirit of thrift," he said, "is opposed to waste on the one hand and to recklessness on the other. It does not involve stinginess which is an abuse of thrift, nor does it require that each item of savings should be a financial investment. The money that is spent in the education of one's self or of one's family, in travel, in music, in art, or in helpfulness to others, if it brings real returns in personal development or in a better understanding of the world we live in, is in accordance with the spirit of thrift."

An artist is dying in a New York hospital. Until he became ill a few months ago he made $40 a week, He is thirty-five and his wife is twenty-one and they have a child less than a year old. This family lived very comfortably ,until the husband was taken ill, in a four room flat for which they paid $22 a month. but they did not save money. The result is distress. There is no sickness-insurance money for the husband while he lives. There will be no life insurance for the wife and child when he dies. How many such tragedies do we witness daily because of the improvdence of our people.

We never hear of a man who climbed to a place of eminence from obscurity and poverty that we do not say of him: "He was thrifty."

Henry Fountain Amhurst, United States Senator from Arizona used every moment of his time to the best possible advantage. He is only 41 years old now and has had an interesting career in his upward climb. which he began as a clerk in a frontier store; later he worked as a lumberjack and then turned to hod-carrying. The life of a cowboy appealed to him and he "hired out." This was in territorial days and when statehood began to loom up he decided he would be one of the ruling men of the new state. He became a newspaper reporter, and studied law. At 22 he was a justice of the peace and the same year was elected to the territorial house of representatives. He was speaker of that body at 25, was made district attorney and finally was elected senator in 1912 by unanimous vote of the first legislative assembly of the state of Arizona. His life so far is a demonstration of what industry, thrift and determination may accomplish.

MANY SOLID TIRES CHANGE TO GOODRICH

The B. F. Goodrich Company has finished checking its records of tires of other makes, which were replaced during 1915 by Goodrich Wireless Truck Tires, and announces that there were 14,000 such change-overs.

In 1914 there were 10,725. in 1913, 6,357 and in 1912, 3,591 tires of other makes were thus replaced.

"This is interesting information," says an official of the B. S. Goodrich Co., "and shows the growth of popularity of our tires. It is, of course, understood that a great many thousands of tires were sold to users of new trucks. The figures above represent simply the number of tires of other makes which apparently did not satisfy their purchasers, when compared with the mileage that Goodrich tires were giving."

Conscience.

"On what grounds do you desire to withdraw the plea of 'not guilty?'"

"On the simple ground that we are guilty. However, we must call the attention of your honor to the regrettable fact that the statute of limitations lets us out. Too bad we were not asked about this matter earlier."—Philadelphia Ledger.

CHARLES H. MURRAY AS A GAME OLD KNIGHT

Real burlesque of the old fashioned sort is promised in "A Game Old Knight," which introduces Charles H. Murray, formerly of the widely known comedy team of Murray and Mack, in the Triangle-Keystone comedy at the Happy Hour tomorrow. Murray is a wandering knight, who in his travels with his valet (Slim Summerville) reaches the palace of King Mike XIII. The fun begins when the king tries to wed his homely daughter (Louise Fazenda) to the knight, who naturally prefers the younger and pretty daughter (Cecile Arnold).

Upon Murray's refusal to marry the ugly princess he and his retainer are thrown into the chamber of horrors. There the torture chief (Edgar Kennedy) thrusts them into an interior cell from whose side walls sharp swords stick out their points. The pull of a lever starts a moving floor, and Murray and his valet in a mirth provoking scene flee for their lives. Only by the fastest kind of sprinting can they avoid being pilloried on the sharp sword points. The water is turned on, and they are in danger of being drowned when the ugly princess, risking her own life. clings to the mill wheel until her weight stops it and the flow of water ceases.

Agame old knight at heart, Murray weds the homely princess who had saved his life at the risk of her own.

Increase in City Noises.

The motor horn and the taxi whistle have banished the rather surprising reputation for quiet which London held among many foreign visitors a decade or two ago. In 1896, again, the London of the early nineteenth century was described in John Ashton's "When William IV. was King" as "a very noisy city"—evidently in contrast with the comparative silence of his own time. But the noises he conjured up from the past—the watchman's call, the shrieks of the milkwoman, the chimney sweep, the newsboy and the venders of fish and cat's meat, the bells of the muffin man and the footman—were as nothing to the piercing mechanical noises of today.—London Opinion.

Bells.

Bells have been employed in association with religious worship since the early days of Egypt. Cymbals and hand bells and small crotals served for the festival of Isis. Aaron and other Jewish high priests wore bells of gold upon their raiment. In camp and garrison the Greeks employed bells. The Romans announced the hour of bathing by their melody. Copper and tin, the old composition, is still regarded as the best bell metal. Steel has been tried, but does not make a successful bell. Glass bells are mellow and beautiful in tone, but the material is too fragile. The one metal which is impossible is that which everybody imagines makes the best bell—silver.

Mr. Galusha Repaid For His Trouble

The record for having in his possession the largest doughnut ever made in Fulton is undoubtedly held by Irving Galusha, according to a member of the P. B. C. club which met at the home of Mrs. Dodge, 11 S. 3rd st., Wednesday night and upon which occasion the doughnut was presented as a token of good fellowship. The dimensions of the article are not exaggerated in the least when it is said that the portion uneatable measures more than a foot in diameter.

The presentation of the doughnut was an important event, according to the informant and should have received publicity. It was only upon the accusation that all newspaper reporters had consented to refrain from mentioning the fact through Mr. Galusha's influence that The Times consented to make the story public. The story is as follows: Doughnuts were to be served at a previous meeting of the B. P. C. Club, which was held in the country. When the time arrived to serve the doughnuts, none could be found. There was disappointment all around over the absence of what was to be the principal item of the luncheon. Evidenve was found which traced the disappearance of the platter containing the doughnuts to Mr. Galusha, and as a reminder of their feelings, the club decided on the presentation made at Mrs. Dodge's home.

WITH PEACOCK

As the time approaches when the city is to undergo the battering rams of evangelism at the hands of Dr. Luther Knox Peacock and his party of fellow stormers, there is a natural curiosity and interest aroused in the minds of the people relative to the work of those men elsewhere. In this connection The Evening Times is able to reproduce for its readers a brief account of developments at Jeannette, Pa., where a Peacock campaign is in progress. The "Jeannette Dispatch" says:

"A Mass meetting which packed every seat in the Methodist Episcopal church and overflowed into the Sunday school room, was held Sunday afternoon in the interest of the Peacock Tabernacle meetings, which begin next Sunday. The attendance exceeded the most sanguine expectations and the address of Dr. Homer D. Whitfield of Greensburg, was one of the most powerful ever listened to in Jeannette. It was a plea for a profession of religion that shall absolutely consist in service for God through doing something for men. Seldom has a great body of people, such as were gathered, been so profoundly moved. The white light of publicity was held up to every life and it was considered by all that such a message was divinely inspired as fitting for the last Sunday afternoon meeting before the evangelistic meetings begin. The Federation Quartet of Greensburg, composed of Messrs. Henderson, Beatty, Wright and McColly, sang several thrilling songs and the general music was under the direction of Wm. Matthews, chairman of the local music committee."

Continuing the Jeannette newspaper describes Dr. Peacock as follows:

"In bringing Luther Knox Peacock to Jeannette the persons responsible for his coming secured the most aggressive, hard hitting, masculine evangelist they knew. They got him to come because they felt he was the only kind of a man who would draw the men of Jeannette to hear him and heed his advice. An effeminate man would never get a hearing here.

"Rugged, vigorous, manly, Mr. Peacock hits sin hard. He preaches with terrific energy and does not mince words. It has been the experience wherever he preaches if a person comes but the first day or so to hear him, that he never misses a service after.

"The tabernacle will be warm and comfortable in every way. It is close to the street cars and arrangements are being made to have them stop at the entrance to the tabernacle. The walk from any part of Jeannette is not far and the exercise of going there will be helpful.

"The first service conducted by Evangelist L. K. Peacock, will be Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

"L. C. Davidson is the pianist of the Peacock party, and is in a class by himself. The piano to be used, has arrived and will be installed in time for the dedication service Friday evening."

THE "PATE" FAMILY

There Is More Than Just Oysters, Chickens and Lobsters.

A RUN ON WINTER DELICACIES.

Expert Recipes For Making This Tasty Dish For Company Luncheons and Sunday Night Suppers—How Pineapple May Also Be Pated.

When one says "pate" visions of the oyster or chicken pate, the best known varieties, at once pass before our eyes. There seems to be an unwritten law that a pate filling must be smothered in a thick cream sauce. This is an error, for there are many varieties of sauces which fit the dish, and this the following recipe will prove:

Sweetbread Pate. — Parboil, blanch and dice a large pair of sweetbreads. Take one cupful of button mushrooms, chop them coarsely, slice six truffles into thin slices and add these to the sweetbreads. For the sauce squeeze the juice of one large lemon into the saucepan and add to it a lump of butter the size of a hen's egg. When melted together add a saltspoonful of bicarbonate of soda and a cupful of cold cream. Mix a tablespoonful of cornstarch in half a cupful of milk and add this also to the sauce and stir until the mixture is as thick as cold honey. Add cayenne pepper, salt and a teaspoonful of onion juice; then add the sweetbread mixture and allow all to cook gently for five minutes. If it should be a little too thick add a little plain cream. When done fill the pate shells with it and garnish with olive curls lightly spread with anchovy paste.

Codfish Tongue Pates.—Secure six medium size codfish tongues, parboil them until tender and when done trim and dice them. Add to them two coarsely diced hard boiled eggs, one finely minced red pepper and six chopped olives. Make a cream the same as for the foregoing recipe, only just before taking the mixture from the fire add to it half a glass of sherry. Garnish the pates with fresh cress.

Tripe Creole Pates.—Wash and cut enough honeycomb tripe into small pieces to fill three cups, place it in a clean linen cloth and wring the water out of it. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and add one tablespoonful of chopped onion, cook until slightly browned, then add two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped green pepper and one-half of a chopped red pepper. Add one tablespoonful of flour, one cupful of stock, a half cupful of drained tomato juice, a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, six button mushrooms (sliced), pepper, salt, a tablespoonful of chutney sirup and let all boil for five minutes; then add the tripe and simmer gently for ten minutes more, or until the tripe is done. Fill the pate shells and garnish each with a slice of fried tomato.

Pineapple Pates.—Take two cupfuls of preserved pineapple, drain it and add to it half a cupful of preserved ginger (chopped) and enough ginger sirup to moisten the mixture; then add one tablespoonful each of finely powdered macaroon and chopped pecan nuts. Fill the pate shells with this mixture, heap them with whipped cream with a tiny green preserved melon on the top.

Easy Ways of Doing Common Things In Every Household.

When your lamps smoke remove the wicks from the burners and boil the burners for half a day in a solution of half a teacupful of baking soda to a quart of water, and as the water boils down add more to it. Use an old kettle, as it will injure a good one. After boiling at least six hours rinse thoroughly in clear water, dry perfectly, put in new wicks and yours lamps will burn clear and bright. Never throw away the burners unless they are broken. This treatment cleans out all the tubes and makes them like new. Lamps treated in this way once a month will never explode.

LATE SPRING MODELS APPEAR

McCall Design

New York—With all the bubbling and excitement usual when spring fashions are launched there are few absoluutely new points to chronicle, since each new mode contains the elements of past designs, with a special twist or combination that gives the air of novelty. Many periods have been borrowed from to produce this season's mode and no one type predominates. Tight bodices with darts go next to late Directoire styles with sweeping reveres, waistcoasts, striped petticoats and high crowned hats dressed with plumes, 1870 types are suggested in overskirts bunched up, bustle fashion, at the back while crinoline and ruffles hark back to 1830.

Square Decolletage

With the tight fitting pointed bodice that gains favor for evening wear the neck is cut out square, moderately high and sometimes filled in with tulle or lace. Fichu and cape effects are important points in many of the smartest creations both for day and evening wear, while a decided tendency is shown for three quarter sleeves widening at the elbow, though long sleeves are by no means out of the running, skirts are decidedly wide and a bit longer, and rumors of crinoline has been followed by evidence of its use to hold out the hip draperies, and produce the modish flare. Apron effects ore in evidence in many varieties of size and placement. Tassels and corda, braids and fur fringes, and Louis bows in graduated widths are favorite trimming devices.

Hats

Flat Watteau hats, tlited up in the back to show the new Niniche coiffure have ties of ribbon or tulle carelessly crossed in front and falling over the shoulders at the back of the waist. Broad brim shapes and high narrow turbans that jut out at aeroplane angles have veils draped from their edges that may end above the chin or fall to the shoulders.

The Floating Veils

Floating veils of embroidered tulle in black or castor are increasingly worn, and hats of Italian straw, picot straw, leghorn Cim and lisere, are used with or without combinations silk, tulle and felt. One sees few aigrettes, but many fancy feathers and small plumes arranged in wreaths and cockades are much employed. Leather flowers are a novelty for hat garnitures.

Colors and Fabrics

In silks, faille, gros grained and taffetas lead, and black with a touch of brilliant color, contrast in trimming details of embroidery, beading, girdle or some other device to relieve the sombreness. All the old time colors from lavender to the yellows, blues and Du Barry reds dear to the old time French artists, with a new brownish gray that is nearly putty color. Browns in old fashioned shades wine reds and above all gray will be the modish choice this Spring and Summer.

Jersey Cloth

Jersey Cloth makes the smartest of new sport suits, that are sure to [illegible] in for general wear and these [illegible] in both plain tints and mixtures [illegible] suggest heather.

Trig Lines

While comfortable fitting is still the rule, lines from the waist up closely follow the natural contours, and decided trimness of effect is demanded by present modes. The newly launched Spring models of Warner's rust-proof corsets, are fashioned so that correct lines are insured for the outer garments particular attention being given to quality, material and finish.

The advantages of double flexible steal boning, that insures at once ease, and trimness of line, with the double interlinings and strippings that prevent wear, and the testing of materials so that the garments cannot stretch or sag make these new models as reliable as any of their predecessors which have made this known for reliability. Front laced models are increasingly worn.

New Spring Coats

Serge, Jersey Cloth, Gabardines, or stylish checks and mixtures make the new spring coat for steamer or car wear. Loose box fits are the rule, though there are very smart shaped models that have their fullness below the waist, and are topped with capes in one, two or three layers, or by collars of cape-like proportions.

WHEN HER BACK ACHES

A Woman Finds All Her Energy and Ambition Slipping Away.

Fulton women know how the aches and pains that often come when the kidneys fail make life a burden. Backache, hip pains, headaches, dizzy spells, distressing urinary troubles, are frequent indications of weak kidneys and should be checked in time. Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. They attack kidney diseases by striking at the cause. Here's proof of their merit in a Fulton woman's words:

Mrs. Leland Sherman, 267 S. 7th st., Fulton, says: "I feel justified in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, for I know from personal experience that they are an excellent kidney and backache medicine. I used them for pains in my back and loins and other kidney annoyances, and they gave me relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Sherman had. Foster-Milburn Co. Props., Buffalo, N.Y.

Girls of Both Teams Gave Good Accounting

The Mexico High school girls' basketball quintet scored a close victory over the local high school five last night on the City Hall court in an interesting game which was witnessed by over three hundred people who occupied every available foot of space in the hall. The final score was 4 to 2, all the points being made by two individuals, Janet Taylor of the visiting team and Natalie Butts of Miss Dickerman's squad.

Without a doubt, Janet Taylor could be acclaimed one of the best girl gasketball players in the State . Her handling of the ball was in direct contrast to the other girls, the Mexico youngster displaying tactics of the game which could not be compared to the average girl's playing, even to her "peppery" remarks to teammates to "get after the ball," "play hard," "wake up," and other such sayings which she uttered repeatedly and which amused the spectators greatly. Florence Furness had her hands full watching this active little girl and by her performance showed that she is an exceptionally good guard.

Although handicapped by the height of her opponent, Elizabeth Howe presented her usual star game. She kept the ball in her own team's territory most of the time and though shorter in stature than the opposing player outjumped her at all times. Margaret Howe, who has been the principal point earner of the local team was not able to score, being guarded very closely. She did, however, give her opponent a "run for her money" and at the end of each half Margaret had her adversary "all in."

The Fulton team lost many opportunities to snatch a victory by failure to make good baskets from the foul line. Running with the ball was one of the chief faults of the visiting team, which caused a number of fouls to be called, none of which could be turned to points by Elizabeth Howe. On the other hand, little Janet Taylor made good two of four attempts, being a veritable "shark" at shooting. There was nothing "girlish" about her playing at all.

Natalie Butts scored the first basket after five minutes of play. "Jane," as she was called by her teammates, was alert and wollowed within a minute after with a shot which showed how dangerous a player she was. Jane followed this with a point from the foul line. The half ended with the score 3 to 2 in the visitors' favor. The second half saw onl y one lone point made, that by Miss Taylor from the foul line. The Fulton team had many more opportunities to shoot but could not make any of the attempts good.

This was the second meeting of the teams, the first having resulted in a victory for the local team. Miss Dickerman officiated in the first half of the game while Mr. Reed, of Mexico, coach of the girls' team, acted as referee in the second half.

The Wonderful Story of a Homeless Waif In New York.

FROM POVERTY TO AFFLUENCE

Foundling Who Was Picked Up In the Street Later Became the Adopted Son of One of New York's Richest Women.

A short time ago a photographer was walking in Central park when he came upon a handsome little boy who was playing with a pushmobile. The camera man snapped the little fellow's picture.

FINLEY J. SHEPARD, JR.

He was no other than Finley J. Shepard, Jr., adopted son of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Shepard. Mrs. Shepard was formerly Miss Helen M. Gould, and she is possessed of great wealth. In September, 1914, Finley, Jr., was found by a policeman on the steps of St. Patrick's cathedral. The little lad was about four years old and was unable to tell anything about himself. Later he was sent to a children's home, and a few months ago he was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Shepard. Some day Finley, Jr., will inherit great wealth from his adopted parents.

Game of Proverbs.

One of the company having left the room (this person is the questioner), the others get together and select some proverb during his absence. On his returning to the room he must ask random questions of those assembled, and they in their replies must emphasize slightly the words of the proverb, the first person being questioned using the first word of the proverb, the second person using the second word and so on till each word has been given. Then the proverb is begun all over again by the next person replying to questions. As this is confusing to the questioner—he having no means of finding out how many words are contained in the proverb—his discovering the proverb is made more difficult.

For instance, the proverb, "Honesty is the best policy," is selected. Suppose the first question to be, "Have you been out today?" The reply will be: "Yes, I went for a walk in the park, and but for the 'honesty' of a boy I would have lost my purse. He saw me drop it and returned it to me." Then will follow the second question, "Were you in the country last summer?" And the reply will be, "Yes, in a most lovely spot, where it 'is' always cool and pleasant."

And so on till the last word of the proverb has been brought from the players by the questioner. And if he fails to guess the proverb he must pay a forfeit. And if any player in replying to the question neglects to use the word of the proverb belonging to him he must pay a forfeit also at the end of the game.

A Puzzle of Ships.

In each sentence, by using the letters in the same position in each word, you can spell a word meaning some sort of ship.

1. Six crazy hens of Obed's never eat rye.
2. You are curious, Harry Taylor.
3. But, Rupert, I grant a new trick is not easy.
4. Charles Roe uses ice, so Ernest remarks.
5. Charge us twice to enter races.
6. Come and try breakfasting on a tugboat.
7. What! Have all lemons edible rinds?
8. You are well loved.
9. Sally Lunn obtains old parasols.

Answers: 1, schooner; 2, yacht; 3, brigantine; 4, cruiser; 5, cutter; 6, catboat; 7, whaler; 8, yawl; 9, sloop.

The Lame Doll.

I have the dearest little doll,
Her name is Mary Ann.
I bought for her a Christmas gift,
A dainty little fan.

But O my darling little doll,
She fell and broke her leg,
And in its place she's only got
An ugly wooden peg.

She is so very sensitive
You'll know it at a glance.
I hardly ever let her see
The other dollies dance.

But just because it is so sad
I love her more and more
Than any other doll I have,
Or any in the store.

TO PLANT 7,000,000 TREES.

Extended Reforestation Program In Pennsylvania This Year.

Officials of the Pennsylvania state forestry department estimate that more than 7,000,000 young trees, about half of the number in the state's twenty-four tree nurseries, would be used for reforestation this year forming the most extended program of the kind ever undertaken by the commonwealth.

The bulk of these trees will be planted on state forestry reservations, on new auxiliary reserves and similar public work, and a large portion will be given free to persons desiring to use them for reforesting. The free distribution will not be for ornamental or shade planting, but only for development of wooded areas.

Napoleon's Power.

General Foy, the French military critic of the time of Napoleon, speaking of Napoleon's strength and his weakness, said: "Only the founders of religion have exercised upon their followers an authority comparable to that which made him the absolute master of his armies. This moral power became to him a fatal gift. He came to believe that he could prevail even against the most powerful material force, and this led him to scorn certain rules, the long continued violation of which could not remain unpunished."

Very.

Said a sorrowful singer: "This hymn
Makes my old eyes with teardrops grow dymn.
I'll sing it, of course,
Although I'm quite hoarse
And my chance for an encore is slymn."
—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Post Impressionist.

Jim—What is Bill doing now?

James—He's a post impressionist.

Jim—You're stringing me.

James—No; he's got a job with the telegraph company branding numbers on the telegraph poles.—Dartmouth Jack-o'-Lantern.

Baker Not In Demand.

J. Franklin Baker, the so called home run king of the American league, seems to be more anxious to find a berth in the major leagues than managers and club owners are to engage him. Several clubs would be glad to sign Baker on account of his reputation as a hitter for the Athletics in recent years, but none seems willing to give a fortune for a player who never was a fast fielder and base runner and whose batting eye may have become dim after a year's layoff. Connie Mack asserts that he is not blocking any deal whereby Baker might become a Yankee, but it seems that Baker wants to tie up any club that bids for his services with a contract that might exceed his worth as a player.

Caves as Cold Storage Plants.

The numerous caves in Kentucky, of which the Mammoth cave is the most famous, may yet be turned to use for storing perishable foods. The air in the caves is dry and the temperature even. Lemons and oranges left there two years ago and taken out recently are apparently as good as when they were harvested.

Wanted to Stay In Jail.

After liberating Giuseppe Zepra of Ambler, Pa., Warden Roberts of the Montgomery county prison found the man unwilling to leave. Zepra said he had never been treated so well before and that he had rather stay in prison than go home in the present weather.

One Way Out.

Despite his illiteracy Mose Belt has gathered quite a competency from his whitewashing and kalsomining trade.

Recently during the course of some business with a notary the latter produced a document, saying:

"Sign your name here, Mose."

"Look heah," said Mose, with offended dignity, "I doesn't sign mah name, suh. I's a business man, suh, an' has no time for dem trifling details. I always dictates mah name, suh."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Tame.

"Have you a Sporting Life?"

Bookstall Clerk (at lonely country station)—Not very!—Punch.

D'Orleans Sauce.

Tarragon vinegar, two tablespoonfuls; thick gravy, one tablespoonful; butter, one and one-half ounces; chopped parsley, one teaspoonful; pepper, a dust; sugar, a pinch.

Put the vinegar in a pan. When it boils add the gravy and warm up together; then work the butter in by degrees and add the sugar, pepper and parsley, which should be chopped to a fine powder. Serve very hot.

Kentucky Scalloped Potatoes.

Slice potatoes and lay in the water half an hour. Place a layer of potatoes in a well buttered baking dish, sprinkle with pepper, salt and pieces of butter; repeat the process until there is a sufficient quantity. Pour over this enough milk to cover and bake an hour and a half or until the potatoes are thoroughly cooked. If onions are liked with the potatoes alternate layers may be used.

Caper Sauce For Boiled Mutton.

For this the regulation proportions of a tablespoonful each of butter and flour are cooked together until they bubble, and a half pint of boiling water is then poured upon them and the sauce stirred until smooth and thick and seasoned with pepper, salt and at least a tablespoonful of capers.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

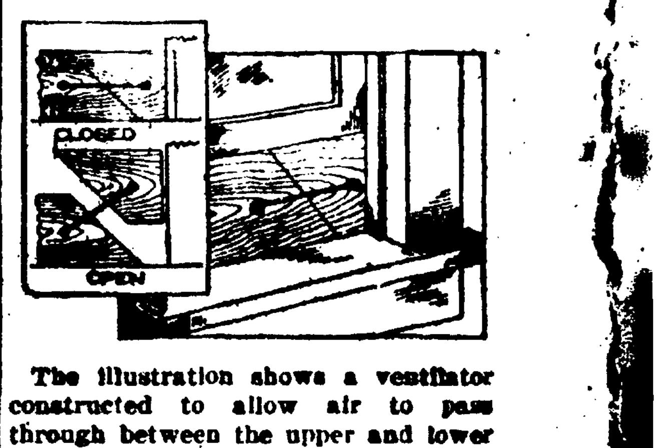
Device For Ventilating Room Without Drafts.



The illustration shows a ventilator constructed to allow air to pass through between the upper and lower window sash, says Popular Mechanics. It consists of a board eight or ten inches wide and as long as the window sash is wide. A short distance from one end it is marked and cut on a slant. The small piece removed is hinged to the main part so that it can be raised in taking the board from the window. When the sash rests on the board it cannot be removed from the window.

The Care of Rugs.

For daily care it is usually sufficient to go over the rugs with the carpet sweeper, followed by a cloth wrung very dry from clear water.

Small rugs should be cleaned out of doors each week. Place the rugs right side down and beat lightly with a rattan or wire beater. Sweep, turn and sweep the right side.

Do not shake rugs if they can be cleaned in any other way. If it is necessary to shake a rug hold the ends together, folding first wrong side out and then right side out.

If a rug must be swept on the floor, damp bran, damp torn newspapers or coarse salt may be used to collect the dust.

Sweeping compounds should not be used on carpets or rugs, as they contain oil, which will eventually stain the fabric.—Department of Home Economics, University of Nebraska.

Apple Loaf.

Reserve enough bread dough to make a small loaf. Work thoroughly into it one tablespoonful of butter, one-third cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of cinnamon and two well beaten eggs. Add flour to make a soft dough, knead lightly and let rise. Divide into three equal parts and roll each part to fit the pan. Lay one piece in a buttered pan, spread over it an inch layer of tart apples chopped fine. Pour over the apples a tablespoonful of melted butter, cover with the second piece of dough and continue as before. Brush the top with milk and let rise until very light. Steam for one hour, then place in a hot oven to brown lightly. Serve in slices with sugar and cream.

Baked Meat Hash.

To one cupful of chopped cooked meat add two cupfuls of cold boiled mashed potatoes, one finely minced onion, three tablespoonfuls of meat stock or drippings, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Mix well and melt one heaping tablespoonful of butter in a baking pan. Add the hash, cover and bake in a hot oven until nicely browned. Turn and brown on the other side. Serve at once.

Steak With Parsley.

Select a good thick steak, either sirloin or porterhouse. Season slightly with pepper and salt and broil until it is moderately brown. Have prepared enough chopped parsley and white onion to cover it. Dot it thickly with dabs of butter and bake in a quick oven for five minutes. The onion, parsley and butter sink into the meat, the parsley absorbing the strong flavor of the onion.

Minced Lamb on Toast.

Rub one tablespoonful of butter smooth with one tablespoonful of flour. Add one cupful of meat stock and salt and pepper to season. Cook until thick and smooth, then add one and one-half cupfuls of cooked minced lamb. Simmer three minutes. Dip slices of toast in hot salted water or hot meat broth. Heap some of the lamb on each slice of toast and serve on a platter garnished with slices of hard boiled eggs.

Browned Potatoes.

Mash two cupfuls of cold boiled potatoes, add three tablespoonfuls of milk, four tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one-half minced onion, one-half level teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper. Melt one heaping teaspoonful of butter in a frying pan. Add the potatoes, cover and brown. Then turn and brown on the other side. Serve with tomato sauce.

Virginia Waffles.

Boil half a cupful of Indian meal in a cupful and a half of water thirty minutes. Add a cupful and a half of milk, two teaspoonfuls each of sugar and melted butter, two cupfuls of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and two well beaten eggs. Fry in a well greased waffle iron. Serve with maple sirup.

Carries It With Her.

Gibbs—My wife never loses her temper.

Dibbs—How do you account for it?

Gibbs—She keeps it in such constant use it has no chance to get lost.—New Haven Register.

A HOUSE GOWN.

A Model For Young Women That Spells Spring.

Pink is one of the spring colors, along with tan, and this afternoon gown is made of rose pussy willow silk with narrow bands of maroon velvet on the bodice and cuffs. The sleeves are full, and a deep fold of velvet bands the skirt and disappears under the wing drapery that drops from the hips.

DON'T DRUDGE.

Housewife Warned Not to Overwork This Grippy Time of the Year.

One of the worst pieces of extravagance on the part of the housewife is committed when she allows herself to be "all tired out." There always is the temptation to put in a day of very fatiguing work so that the next day can be one of leisure. There is an adage "Never leave for tomorrow what you can do today," which is an extremely bad one for the housewife to follow. "Never do today what is part of tomorrow's work" would be a better proverb. It really is a form of laziness to overdo so that the following day can be one of ease, and it certainly is a form of inconsiderateness, for an overworked, overtired housewife is a damper on the good nature of the entire household.

But if you do overdo and draw near to the end of the day in a state of exhaustion do what you can to refresh yourself before the evening meal. And this refreshing process does not consist in simply throwing yourself tired and exhausted on the nearest bed and sleeping. There are other more direct ways of restoring tired nerves and muscles than that.

A warm bath taken leisurely is more refreshing in the daytime than a nap and puts one in better condition for eating than anything else. If after the bath and dressing you still feel worn out take a cup of hot bouillon and a wafer. A half an hour later you will be refreshed enough to eat dinner. But it is a rule that all housewives should remember that it is always a bad plan to take a heavy meal when exhausted.

Baby Bath Set, Homemade.

For the littlest baby there is a pretty model in morning bath sets which may be readily copied by any amateur sewer. Buy two yards of double width, very fine white Turkish toweling and, having cut off enough of it for a good sized wiping towel and a face cloth, reserve the remainder for a laprobe.

Having bound the larger piece with a pink or blue wash ribbon, embroider the center of either end with a garland of rosebuds and forgetmenots in their natural colors. Only one side of the towel and face cloth need be embroidered, but to the upper corner of each of the three pieces should be attached ribbon hangers.

These hangers are very short on the lap robe, considerably longer on the wiping towel and of extreme length on the face cloth, so that when hung up to dry the three strips of ribbon coming at all of the top corners will keep the several sections of the set together.

Inexpensive Fruit Cake.

Take three eggs and two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of butter, milk and molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg, one pound of raisins, currants and citron and five cupfuls of flour. Cream the butter and sugar. Add the well beaten eggs and the molasses and a small portion of the flour, then add the milk and spices. Stir well. Add the flour, into which the soda has been sifted, and lastly the fruit, well dredged with flour. Bake in a rather slow oven. This makes two loaves and will keep indefinitely.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Gallstones.

Removal by surgical operation is the very best treatment for gallstones. When the conditions of health are such that surgical treatment is inadvisable then palliative treatment may be effective. As much as possible starchy foods (potatoes, rice, oatmeal, beans, etc.) and sweet foods (pastries, candies, preserves, jellies) must be avoided. Daily exercise is most important. Walking for an hour or riding a bicycle, alkaline medicines or mineral waters are helpful and aid in preventing the formation of gallstones. A half teaspoonful of phosphate of sodium in a small teacupful of hot water taken half an hour before meals three times a day is a valuable remedy. Three glasses of alkaline mineral water should be taken each day—a glass between each meal. During an attack of colic heat in the form of a flannel wrung out of very hot water and sprinkled with a few drops of spirits of turpentine should be kept constantly over the painful locality. At this time a half teacupful of olive oil should be taken. Drink it as soon as the pain begins.

CITY MANAGEMENT WORKS WONDERS.

What New Methods Have Accomplished In Certain Municipalities.

The misrule of American cities is notorious at home and abroad, writes Charles B. Strayer in Leslie's Weekly. Graft is rampant. Political spoilsmen mulct our cities and the taxpayers foot the bills. German municipalities, on the other hand, are famous throughout the world for the absence of graft and the efficiency of their administration. There the administration of cities is a distinct profession to which men devote their lives. The administrator who has made a good record in one city is called from a small municipality to a larger one.

"Great industrial corporations, such as the Standard Oil company and the United States Steel corporation, are conducted with an efficiency nowhere excelled. The taxpayers can have the same results in municipal administration whenever they get thoroughly tired of being robbed by the politicians and grafters and demand municipal reform.

"An increasing number of American cities are reaping the benefits of administration by managers chosen because of proved ability to conduct great enterprises. Gaylord C. Cummin, as manager of Jackson, Mich., worked wonders in that city of 35,000 people in one year. Municipal employees were taken out of politics. Property to the value of $383,000, formerly exempted from taxation without legal reason, was restored to the tax rolls. The poor department was consolidated with the organized charities, with a trained social worker at the head. Rigid milk inspection was inaugurated and sanitary inspection made efficient for the first time. Without raising the tax rate these and numerous other reforms were inaugurated, a floating deficit of $20,600 wiped out, the city's net indebtedness reduced $50,000 and a cash balance left of $10,000, exclusive of the sinking fund."

NEW ANTHEM FOR NATION IS PROPOSED IN HOUSE BILL

First Since Forty-sixth Congress. $2,500 Prize Offered by Elks.

A fine, stirring and high sounding anthem has been introduced into the house by Representative Dyer of St. Louis, who has asked that congress adopt the resolution containing the verses as a national hymn. The introduction of this poetry as a joint resolution, according to Joel Grayson, the walking encyclopedia of the house document room, is the first since Representative S. W. Downey of Wyoming startled the Forty-sixth congress with a 200 page epic.

Representative Dyer's proposed anthem is the effort of Henry McEuen Jones of St. Louis to win the $2,500 prize offered by the Elks for a national anthem that congress will accept. The last verse of the resolution reads:

Give us peace by upright arbitration,
No death dealing shot to be hurled,
But if forced into war just remember
That Old Glory will never be furled.
For our union's cemented forever.
We have honored the blue and the gray,
Then we'll righteously follow Old Glory
With a power no nation can stay.

Three pounds shy when he applied for enlistment in the army, Cincinnati recruit drank water so that he gained four pounds in three hours.

EXPERIENCE.

You can give other people your advice, but you cannot give them your experience. You can give them your remedy, but you can by no means give them its effect upon yourself. Perhaps this is just as well, since each is to live his individual life and make his own best achievement out of it.

An Actress Gives This Dashing Effect

Permission of Famous Players-Paramount.

BLACK crepe de chine, chiffon and plenty of malines give this very stunning gown worn by Pauline Frederick. The full malines skirt is banded by three narrow boxed silk strips, above which a draped yoke merges into a negligible bodice. The long net sleeves are very graceful, as is the empire effect of the embroidered strip across the front of the corsage. The dashing black hat has a brim of lace perfectly wired to a good contour.

Tightened bodices and many frills are predicted for the coming season.

A Green Smock and White Skirt.

Two requisites for the Spring wardrobe are found in this smocked middy blouse and circular skirt. The color combination is green and white.

Rarely smart is this smock in bright green flannel, trimmed with white serge and worn with a white serge skirt. It is made to be slipped on over the head and has a yoke at the front, below which are several rows of smocking. A patent leather belt takes in the fulness of the waist, yet this may be omitted without the sacrifice of smart effect. In medium size the smock requires 3¼ yards 36-inch material, while the skirt calls for 3⅞ yards of single width serge.

Women fond of outdoor sports will welcome the smock because it offers charming variation to the middy blouse. To cut the smock properly is important, for the amount of material given does not provide for errors or waste of material. Study the guide to see how the front, back and collar are laid on the lengthwise fold. Note how the underfacing is placed along the selvage edge, then the sleeve to the right of the back, on a lengthwise thread. The pocket and yoke, in order named, are laid to the right of the sleeve.

The pockets can be finished along the upper edge with a plain band of contrasting material, or they can be gathered with a narrow heading. The use of the girdle is also optional.

There are several combinations in which this costume can be effectively carried out. The blouse would be equally smart in taffeta, gros de Londres—or more inexpensively—cotton voile, linen or chambray. The fitting skirt would be in pongee, serge, gabardine, flannel or crepe.

A SHAMPOO JACKET.

How to Make One of the Comforts For This Irksome Duty.

A real necessity to the woman who shampoos her own head is a jacket to protect her from the water that falls on the shoulders. Quite a practical jacket can be made from a Turkish towel or from a straight piece of linen with a hole cut in the middle for the head to slip through. At the sides the jacket can be held together with cords, tapes or ribbon. Beauty can be added to the jacket by embroidering little flowers here and there over the front. French knots and lazy daisy stitches fill in quickly. China blue and old rose are cheerful colors to choose for the stitches. The edge of the jacket can be finished with a rolled hem, a binding of braid or, if one has the time, a crocheted edge would increase the attractiveness of the garment. A simple coat could be made from a piece of stock sheeting.
